I mentioned that it should be required reading for anyone who plans to live for the next twenty or thirty years. With the five major variables in the book being population, agricultural production, natural resources, industrial production, and pollution, then why might it not be required reading for many of the courses at the University of Vermont? I offer this question to the faculty as well as to the students. Is it that you only perceive the ecosystem as being the United States? Or is it that some one is hiding one up on you and recognition of that is dangerous to you? This might be an excellent place to deviate from the topic for just a moment and make a few notes about the nature of education here at the University of Vermont. To make the point, I will use an example: a professor comes to school in the morning knowing that he has three major events of the day. The first is his Department meeting, the second is a pair of classes and the third is a committee meeting of a committee of the Faculty Senate. Let's use just for the sake of argument the Cross College Committee on reorganization. Of these various activities of the day which has his emphasis or attention? The Committee meeting is probably preeminent because his college has something to lose. The department meeting probably has to do with dollars. Here again the topic is all too often either that he or his department has something to lose. Oh, yes, there's the third item: class. We'll come to find out that the definition of education at the University of Vermont is not that of teaching, learning, scholarly research, and primarily of students, but rather of inter-college and inter-department jealousy, continual thoughts of many on money and how to get it or keep it. Then perhaps it's no surprise that The Limits To Growth is not in more classrooms. It is too innovative and threatens too many existing patterns. This then would lead me to the second point about the book and that is that the suggestions implicit and explicit in the book mean that certain changes must occur for all of us.

The twin theses of the book are simple: 1) Everything is connected to everything else and any change that is made effects something else in the system; 2) Man's present growth patterns in all of the basic areas of concern are leading very clearly to a "crunch." The timetable is a bit unruly but nothing that occurs in nature (and we do) can grow or experience growth in an exponential form to infinity.

The first of the theses has been the heart of the environmental movement for some years. It has always been easy to see that cutting down the trees at the head water of a stream will raise the temperature of the lower stream enough to effect the trout population. It is easy to measure the respiratory disease rates in the city versus out of the city. In the first premise the environmentalists were attempted to defeat a student government candidate who was critical of PIRG.

VPIRG has made no effort to determine the views of UVM students, who pay its bills, on the issues VPIRG will be dealing with. Do students want to pay for senseless shopping surveys easily accomplished individually? The fact is that even if students don't agree with VPIRG, they have no voice in its activities. As for mandatory fees, why didn't VPIRG go to the state legislature and request a "special fee" or, tax, instead of centering its activities on the campuses? The answer is that VPIRG is ideologically and politically motivated and students are much more gullible than the Vermont taxpayer. The trustees and the administration are just as much at fault for allowing VPIRG and for not enlightening students as to its serious shortcomings. UVM could very well have jeopardized its tax exempt status as did a college in the District of Columbia.

What does VPIRG plan after its "shopping survey"? Will they have a skindiver floating down the Winooski River checking for sewage? What can you say about it if they do? Can we purge VPIRG and send it back to Ralph Nader?

The second point is very simple. It's obvious that the world has limits. The smallest child playing with a globe can see that. It's been said that the only people that don't believe in limits to growth for the ecosystem are either fools or egomaniacs.

Basically, then, this is a short review of the Limits to Growth, in terms of its two major premises.

Other short notes:

—The airport at Cape Cod is going to be extended a total of 1100 feet over the next three years. The airport is in the National Seashore. It not too late yet.

—Why are there no good forestry techniques at Redwood park? They say the park has a short life in terms of the Redwoods. Write the National Park Service or the Dept. of the Interior to find out.

—Why is the military allowed to go on maneuvers in the Great Smokies National Park? Write the Dept. of the Interior for that one.

—American Cyanamid to dump in the Ocean off Georgia? Write the Environmental Protection Agency, the Army Corps of Engineers, the State of Georgia, and the Company itself.

—Owls listed on nuisance list? Ridiculous. This puts a season on Great Horned Owls? Write the Dept. of the Interior.

NOTE: If you would like a listing of matters like these in the Cynic each week write us and tell us about it or stop by the CYNIC Office.

Letter UVM's Role In Student Selection

To the Editor:

As a University, UVM has not only an obligation to recruit students, but to respond to the needs of those students who are seeking to develop talents indicative of future goals and/or career objectives.

Mr. Santiago was incorrect in his figures; actually, there are 80 undergraduates, six graduates and one non-matriculating "minority" students at the University. It is the responsibility of UVM to recruit all students regardless of their ethnic origins be they black, white, green with orange stripes or purple with grey polka dots or what ever else.

The number of minority students in the state of Vermont, should have no reflection on the University's attempt to present a more diverse student population.

As a black person living in Vermont and employed by the University, I feel that it is my moral obligation to help all students to realize and to seek their goals in life; many which can be obtained here through many of our fine programs. Ethnic background and experiences are extremely important in evaluating the student's total performance. A student from the Northeast Kingdom may experience many of the same problems that a "minority" student

by the Committee Against the War

The current peace proposals concerning the cessation of hostilities in Vietnam are either misleading or meaningless to the majority of the American public unless they are viewed in historical context. In 1954, following the defeat of the French forces at Dien Bien Phu, the French Union Forces in Indochina were essentially destroyed. France agreed to negotiate a cease-fire and eventually withdrew its forces and leave Vietnam free and independent. The Geneva accords, which outlined the cessation of hostilities, was signed on July 20, 1954 by the Commander-in-Chief of the French Union Forces in Indochina and the Commander-in-Chief of the People's Army of Viet-Nam. The agreement established the "provisional Military Demarcation Line" at the seventeenth parallel. The forces of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam were to go north of the line and all French forces to the south. Each side had no longer than 300 days to move their forces to the appropriate side of the line. The 17th parallel was not established as a national boundary but was to facilitate the withdrawal of French forces from Vietnam and was to dissolve entirely following elections in 1956 which were intended to reunite Vietnam with one ruling, democratically-elected government.

The elections, however, never materialized. The United States, which provided the French with approximately three-quarters of the money and arms they needed to wage the war between 1950 and 1954, was opposed to any negotiated settlement of the conflict for fear that the country would then come under Communist control, thus endangering the rest of Southeast Asia (Domino Theory). But once the Geneva Accords were signed, the United States agreed to be bound by them, especially the introduction of foreign (to Viet-Nam) troops or arms. (United States Declaration of Indochina presented at Indochina primary session at Geneva, July 21, 1954.) In July 1956, when the elections were to be held, Premier Diem, essentially an American puppet, refused to hold the elections for the reunification, asserting that the South Vietnamese Government had not signed the agreements at Geneva and was thus not bound by them. It was following this refusal to hold the elections that the Viet Minh turned from politics to guerrilla warfare.

In the light of these occurrences, the Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Vietnam and the government of the Democratic Republic of North Vietnam must view any possible negotiated settlement with the United States and the Thieu regime very carefully. An impartial overseer of the cease-fire and elections must be found, not France as originally suggested by the United States.

It is also necessary to realize that the U.S. military involvement in Vietnam (for our military involvement dates back to Truman and political involvement to Roosevelt) but what prompted the American public to accept our involvement. In the early 1950's when we were giving massive aid to the French, an interesting phenomenon was taking place in the United States. Due to the fine efforts of Joe McCarthy, the American public became terrified of what was then thought of as "the red menace", "the yellow peril", "the masters of deceit", etc., in other words, Communists and Communism. To the American public, the Vietnam war was not a people's war to throw off the neo-colonialists and establish a free and independent Vietnam, but the red menace spreading forth its tentacles to strangle the free world. Joe McCarthy was not alone in his red-baiting and witch-hunts; he was aided by a young and aspiring politician from California who was thrust into the American political limelight by his tenacious attacks against purported Communists. That man was Richard Nixon.

And now, while the American public is concerned primarily with POW's, the genocide of Vietnamese civilians, the aid plight of our veterans and the domestic consequences of the war; the Nixon administration continues its killing and bombing based on the hopes of halting what it terms "Communist aggression", a fallacy rooted in the American psyche twenty years ago. The war in Vietnam and in the rest of Indochina is not in fact a war of Communist aggression but a war of national liberation waged by the people of Indochina against the United States and the corrupt regimes which we have placed and kept in power. Peace in Vietnam can only come about through the complete withdrawal of American forces in Indochina and the ending of our attempts to impose our will and standards on the people of Vietnam.

function in America. But because higher education deals specifically with advanced knowledge, it takes on other political functions as well: training workers, educating an elite to rule, providing information and knowledge to the rulers to pursue their policies, including war and repression. Higher education in America is enormously politicized, a fact with which any educational reform movement must come to grips if it is to succeed.

Neither of the two major modes of educational reform which have predominated in the last few years has dealt satisfactorily with the relationship between higher education and the needs of corporate capitalism, though for very different reasons. This failure explains their failure.

One approach involved reform from below, popular pressure from students and faculty to win demands, such as ridding a school of a noxious practice, trying to develop new forms of education, or self-governance. Reform from below has provided some of the most stimulating educational experiences in recent years. Sit-ins were a fascinating education for many, including college presidents and policemen. Experimental colleges and programs, including "free" universities, became for a time the focus of many individuals' lives. The whole atmosphere of the 1967-70 period, in fact, was one of exploration and discovery central to any meaningful educational experience.

But reform from below continuously faced a paradox. By confining itself to a university and ignoring the higher reality of political and economic power in America, a student movement could rally support on the campus, but it could never attack the cause of the specific problem which resulted in the disturbance, because that lay off campus. "End the war" — but the war was being made elsewhere. "Off racism" — but the racism of the university is part and parcel of the racism which pervades American society. "Provide decent education" — but it is precisely the corporate needs and class stratification of America which prevents the creation of a decent education for all but a few.

function in America. Higher education in America is enormously politicized, a fact with which any educational reform movement must come to grips if it is to succeed.

Neither of the two major modes of educational reform which have predominated in the last few years has dealt satisfactorily with the relationship between higher education and the needs of corporate capitalism, though for very different reasons. This failure explains their failure.

One approach involved reform from below, popular pressure from students and faculty to win demands, such as ridding a school of a noxious practice, trying to develop new forms of education, or self-governance. Reform from below has provided some of the most stimulating educational experiences in recent years. Sit-ins were a fascinating education for many, including college presidents and policemen. Experimental colleges and programs, including "free" universities, became for a time the focus of many individuals' lives. The whole atmosphere of the 1967-70 period, in fact, was one of exploration and discovery, central to any meaningful educational experience.

But reform from below continuously faced a paradox. By confining itself to a university and ignoring the higher reality of political and economic power in America, a student movement could rally support on the campus, but it could never attack the cause of the specific problem which resulted in the disturbance, because that lay off campus. "End the war" — but the war was being made elsewhere. "Off racism" — but the racism of the university is part and parcel of the racism which pervades American society. "Provide decent education" — but it is precisely the corporate needs and class stratification of America which prevents the creation of a decent education for all but a few.

On the other hand, if a student movement did look off campus for the source of the problem — and many of them did — the question then arose, why a student movement?

Once one's analysis held that the root of the problem was in First National City Bank or the Pentagon, there was little justification for occupying the college president's office. Yet such movements tended to remain on campus, since they were student-initiated.

There are ways out of these dilemmas, but they require clear thinking about strategy and tactics. Since the university in America is so highly politicized, movements which attack its political functions directly might properly be the focus of radical agitation.

Open admissions, for example, challenges the exclusionary function of education. Creating a black, or women's, or working-class studies program is an attempt by people to take back a culture which has been taken from them, in part by the university. Reforms like these are significant and important, but it took a few years of self-defeating reform, based on an ignorance of the politics of American society, to produce them.

In contrast to reform from below, there are attempts by those who make educational policy — on the campus or in the nation — to institute strategic reforms designed to make the system more palatable for those who must go through it. Educational policy makers know the failures of education; it is part of their job to do so. But the motive for reform is quite different when it comes from above. Movements like these wish to "cool out" dissent and provide legitimacy, and in the meantime make education more modern, efficient, economical — all those things which it has to be, to serve the needs of American capitalism better. The Carnegie Commission on Higher Education is the example par excellence of this approach.

Reform from above is often directly in touch with the relationship between the corporate order and the universities, since the reformers themselves usually constitute that very relationship. So here the problem is of a different order. What this approach to reform seeks to provide is not reform at all, but more of the same, with some slight adjustments.

To groups like the Carnegie Commission, a "crisis" exists only because people are acting funny; they do not seem to like the institutions which have been handed to them. The problem then becomes one of changing people's attitudes — and if, to do that, one has to change the institutions a bit, that is the price which must be paid, so long as the fundamental functions of the university are not tampered with. They can even be improved (which is what reform comes to mean to these people), since some — doctors, tenured professors, recalcitrant administrators — act in a selfish way which is not good for the long-range, "whole-picture" view.

In his book Crisis in the Classroom, written with support from the Carnegie Corporation, Charles Silberman talks of making education joyful, humane, responsive, warm. Yet how can this be accomplished in a society which is racist, hierarchical, competitive, violent, repressive, narrowminded, and selfish? The real task, it seems clear, is to create a society that is joyful, humane, responsive, and warm, at which point education will take care of itself, with a little help from its friends. The only sure way to reform education, in short, is to abolish capitalism.

But we do not, and should not, sit around waiting for Lefty. Critics of this order must develop analyses which will help make the ideal the real. And it is at this point that the attitudinal change which has been produced in American colleges and universities in the past few years will have its impact. At one time in this country, nearly everyone who worked did so for a private company which was organized to make a profit. Now the nature of the society has changed, as more and more people work in public bureaucracies which serve large numbers of people. Hospitals, welfare centers, day-care centers, and mental institutions are all examples — but the primary example, in terms of number of people affected, is education. Just as those who wish to change it must work in the educational institutions as well, for that is where the people are.

One clear task is education itself. The kind of society I have been talking of is one that works for people, not against them. Education, in that context, means the liberation of people from the values taught to them by oppressive structures, including the nuclear family, the schools, the media, and other alienating institutions. The purpose is to enable people to think for themselves, something that this society tries its hardest not to permit. This kind of education can take place anywhere, even including the schools. But take place it must.

When education of this sort becomes a massive reality, more specific goals and tactics will be developed. To lay out a plan and an "alternative" at this point is once again to tell people the direction in which they are supposed to go. On the contrary, it is the masses of people who live in this country who must set for themselves their own goals. Educators can, and must, create in people the desire to think independently, but they cannot, and must not, do their thinking for them. The more we adhere to that, the closer we will be to building a mass movement which will seek the elimination of the oppressive society we have now, a pre-condition for any major change in our educational institutions.

Though students have not occupied many buildings in the last two years, the effects of the 1960 ferment are everywhere, as they no longer accept so much of the junk that used to be given them. It is ironic that it is at this point that the media have pronounced the student revolution dead, for it has in effect just begun.

The Vermont Cynic will be holding elections for new editorial positions before Christmas. Anyone interested in serving as an editor from January, 1973 through December, 1973, must submit a brief resume with their name and previous experience before Thanksgiving recess. Letter: Steaks For Football Players

To the Editor:

Guest who's been dining on thick juicy steaks served on silver trays the past four Monday nights?

Give up? The football team. Yes, every Monday night, following a victorious showing on the proverbial turf, an "x" number of Catamounts and coaches eat steaks that far surpass Saga's usual Saturday night special. After the first win it seemed a deserving treat, but it has blown up into an unwarranted tradition.

The argument for these meals usually runs along the lines of "they work hard," "they represent the school," etc. It's hard to believe that they would play differently if they had to eat dinner where they normally would.

Or, if the case could be strong enough to warrant these meals, then, where does the track team eat? Where is the swimming team at dinner? Will the hockey team get steaks after their winning games?

This inconsistency in regards to allocations — or misallocations — of money bothers this writer. We pay our money for a certain number of meals and I don't enjoy the thought that Saga is feeding these people on our leftover punches.

If it doesn't bother you, then go through the line on Monday evening to see the backfield coach in front of you receive a silver platter of steak, while you have a choice between baked fish (very bony) and corn fritters. Student on Saga.

Polanski's "Macbeth" Violent

by Lisa Charles

Just as an individual may view a film with certain expectations in mind, he must acknowledge the possibility of being disappointed or disappointed. Hostile criticism does not always compensate for what one may term "disappointment," but may truly be a misunderstanding.

Such is the case of Roman Polanski's film adaptation of William Shakespeare's play "Macbeth." It seems that the majority of the Burlington community was not receptive to this "brutal," "violent," "devastating" disturbance. For this reason alone, the film has already left the local area, concluding its duration of a mere seven days.

Granted, any sensitive individual has the right to be offended by the extreme course of violence throughout "Macbeth." However, it is necessary to at least respect the employment of such mayhem. For what reason? Because the film in its entirety is simply an expression of an artist's interpretation of Shakespeare's world of Macbeth. Thus, just as one may imagine this medieval age to be more glorious and chivalrous, another such as Polanski, has a much different impression of this era.

Surely, Roman Polanski does an excellent job in painting Macbeth's world with a supernatural, brutality, and a surreptitious malice. This director combines an advanced cinematic technology with the acting and imagination required to create such a devastating, supernatural effect. He has the ability to elaborate and distort events to the point of absurdity, yet remaining within the realm of credibility. This particular skill is exhibited through such scenes as the prophecy of the three weird sisters warning Macbeth to "beware Macduff." During this scene, Macbeth encounters over a hundred nude witches, preparing a prophetic broth which sordidly reflects his future. Another effective scene occurs at the banquet held after Macbeth's coronation. Fearing the rivalry over his throne, Macbeth orders the execution of Banquo, also involved in the sorceress' prediction. At this feast, the ghost of Banquo haunts Macbeth to a point of insanity.

Macbeth's conflict and suffering from malicious ambition is excellently portrayed by John Finn. While exceptionally confident in the film "Sunday Bloody Sunday," Finn surpasses this level of performance to one of uncomparable proficiency. His submission to the prophecy, and his efforts to become King, mark the frightening transition from man to beast.

It is rumored that Polanski filmed "Macbeth" after the killing of his wife, Sharon Tate. Perhaps this substantiates why Lady Macbeth, played by Francesca Annis, closely resembles Miss Tate. With this in mind, it is difficult to judge her role play objectively. With or without the Tate image, Miss Annis does handle the role with adequacy. Polanski, along with his other marks of personal interpretation chooses to represent Macbeth and his wife at a younger age (perhaps 30) than at the usual middle age.

Of course, in a movie as violent as this, the dialogue appears to be secondary in importance to the action. Although Shakespeare may have disapproved of such literary delinquency, it seems to aid the viewer in comprehending a relatively complex medieval plot. Consequently, Polanski may not consider it essential to expand upon Macbeth's famous literary soliloquy: "Tomorrow and tomorrow..."

Whatever the case may be, one must make a conscious effort to accept (not necessarily enjoy) Polanski's presentation of "Macbeth." For if he chooses to shadow the film with uncanny thunderstorms, mutilated sorcerers, and spare the viewer nothing from the visual shock of sordid brutality, he does so for a reason. Perhaps it is the same reason why John Huston avoids the use of violence in his film "Fat City"—to deliver a message, an interpretation about time and man. This is the prerogative of the artist, and while it demands no immediate approval, it deserves a certain amount of respect.

Question: Did the reviewer enjoy watching the film? Answer: No, in that it is not that "type" of a film; it's not any "Funny Girl." But she did enjoy viewing the imagination and creativity exhibited in this particular interpretation of Shakespeare's play.

Entertainment For Elizabeth A Delight

by Tom Simons

Last Thursday night in the Memorial Auditorium the Lane Series presented the New York Pro Musica in their current production AN ENTERTAINMENT FOR ELIZABETH: A RENAISSANCE SPECTACLE. Surely this presentation must rank as one of the most enjoyable shows the University audience has seen within the last couple of years.

The New York Pro Musica has long been the most successful and prominent American group devoted solely to the enlightening and authentic presentation of classical and folk music before Bach. Under its founder and late director Nolan Greenberg, the Pro Musica has brought to life such marvelous works as the medieval religious music dramas PLAY OF DANIEL and PLAY OF HEROD (both available on Deco records along with many other of their performances).

ENTERTAINMENT FOR ELIZABETH is a continuous hour and a half event that blends the brilliant recreation of Elizabethan costumes, dances, songs, and instrumental music with a popularization of Elizabethan ideas of order. The production is staged against a backdrop of tapestries which portray Orpheus, the mythological Greek poet and singer, and the dance of the seven muses. In this setting which might reflect the great hall of an Elizabethan castle, court musicians tune up their authentic instruments and then strike up a processional tune. Nobles arrive by way of the main aisle and sing a hymn to Queen Elizabeth. With the Queen's arrival, the entertainment begins.

The set piece of the production is the performance for Elizabeth of a mask or allegorical opera with elaborate dances. While the music and words of all the other numbers of the ENTERTAINMENT are authentic Elizabethan, the mask of "Terpsichore," the muses' patron, along with prologues and concluding dialogues were written by the American poet John Hollander. The mask represented the struggle between Pattern, attired in white with converging geometrical figures all over, and Variety, cloaked in a cape of psychedelic colors. Their object of contention is Terpsichore, muse of the dance, who has been enchained by the chaotic opportunities of Variety. The whole thing is meant to play the ideal Elizabethan belief in the interlocking levels of order in the universe against a modern appreciation of individuality and variety. The enchainment of Terpsichore appears in front of a grotto (revealed when the tapestries were parted in the manner of stage curtains) and her art is shown forth in the seven motions of the dance in the maskers Up, Down, Left, Right, Back, Forth, and Around. I could not help seeing these figures as counterparts in Elizabethan dress of the Cookie Monster and Grover on SESAME STREET, giving instructions in up and down to children. After Elizabeth, the symbol of English order, releases Terpsichore, the grotto opens into a depiction of the zodiac and the movements of the court dance are revealed as planets in the cosmic dance.

While the mask was enjoyable and drew some fine singing from Ray DeVoll as Pattern, the idea seemed falsely Elizabethan and perhaps a bit patronizing. Also, although the visuals of the production were effective, the sound and words were somewhat lost by the barn acoustics of Memorial Auditorium. The words were clear in the front, but anyone more than ten rows back had to listen to the music without much benefit from the ideas, wit, and dirty jokes of the words.

Most of the production consists of dances, songs, and madrigals loosely ordered by the plot of Elizabeth's flirtation with numerous suitors. Roberta Senn danced the Queen's Galliard and the spirited La Volta, where the woman is lifted high in the air by her partner, wonderfully well. However, Elizabeth did not dominate the scene as she might have. This may be because the comparatively articulate monarch was portrayed here in a role that was wordless.

After the mask, the music covered the range of Elizabethan moods from melancholy song to madrigal, spirited dance, and bawdy lyric. An Elizabethan form of Post Office was enacted in the group song and dance "John (or Joan) Sanderson will not come to." A pillow is dropped in front of the reluctant partner who must kneel and kiss the provoker. "he must come to." "Amariella" was the best job by substitute counter-tenor John Williams, but the song is just fire anyway. Amariella protests against the singer's passion, but as the song goes: "when we come where comfort is, she never will say no." Oh, if sex were as witty and musical today.

The Pro Musica went to great lengths in their preparations of ENTERTAINMENT to reconstruct the authentic steps and motions of the dances. The intimacy of patterns were impressive both in their variety and vitality. But on top of the patterns, the dancers recreated the sense of spontaneity and improvisation which parallels the ornamentation of Renaissance and Baroque music.

To me some of the best moments of the evening were ones where the quiet harmonies and melodies of the instrumental music were allowed full attention. Even in the vastness of the auditorium, the music opened out into genuine calm and beauty.

Most of the instruments were familiar to Burlington residents through the performances of the UVM Baroque Ensemble, particularly in their Renaissance moods of the last year. A viola da gamba and lute have been missing here, but I am advised by people who know that a gamba will soon be revealed to the public. We do not have a bass shawm (the large recorder like affair that seemed to be dragging on the floor). The Fro Fro must, however, be reprimanded for wondering at the "rauschpfeife" (rough pipe) in the Pro Musica. Prof. Metcalfe and friends have been ransacking their cellars for the last two semesters.

The whole ENTERTAINMENT FOR ELIZABETH was directed by George Houle and researched by John White. Although there may be some minor reservations, everyone in the audience seemed to agree that the evening was a delight. The only major objection I heard was that there wasn't enough music. Perhaps, with an eye to a better hall, the Lane Series will bring the Pro Musica back in the near future.

King Of Rock & Roll To Appear

Chuck Berry, billed as King of the Rock and Roll, will sing in the Lane Series on Wednesday, Nov. 29, at 8:30, in Memorial Auditorium.

Berry fills the "Major Pop Artist" slot in this year's Lane Series. Tickets marked "TOP SINGER" will be honored at this concert.

Single concert admissions are also available at $3.75, $4.50, $5.25, and $6, and may be purchased now at the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. All seats are reserved.

Chuck Berry's influence on the music scene as a singer, musician and writer is without parallel. His songs were hymns to a generation and, in fact, completely altered the direction of music in the fifties. Chuck Berry is, and was, a legend in his own time.

And now with writers and musicians digging deeper into the bare roots of rock and roll, there is a renewed awareness of Chuck Berry, a new demand for the man who continues to rock on.

Needless to say, the name Chuck Berry and the term rock and roll are synonymous. Along with Fats Domino, Little Richard and Bill Haley, Berry helped define the rock trends of the late 50's, and unconsciously shaped most of the current "in" sounds that we have been listening to since 1955.

It was in 1955 that the former Baptist-hairstylist scored his first major claim to fame with "Maybelline," a catchy love song that skyrocketed the Berry sound to notoriety. History would have it that "Maybelline," along with Berry's 27-odd smash followups, were to serve as rhythmic barometer and music scorebook for the youth of that era. In fact, most of the tales related to Berry's musical discography remain just as valid in 1972 as they were in 1955.

Since 1955, anyone who's anybody in the rock world has revered Chuck Berry as the monumental black figure who almost singlehandedly gave birth to the white man's rock and roll. John Lennon, who as a member of the Beatles launched his career with several of Berry's early hits ("Roll Over Beethoven," "Rock and Roll Music," "You Can't Catch Me," etc.), has recently called Chuck his "hero" and "one of the all time great rock poets."

The Rolling Stones not only rock on Berry as "the Guv'nor who started it all," but have also been dubbed "The Children Of Chuck Berry" themselves for coming up with the definitive interpretations of such Berry greats as "Round and Around," "Little Queenie," "Bye Bye Johnny," "Let It Rock," "You Can't Catch Me," "Carol," and of course their first single release back in 1963—"Come On."

In '63 the Beach Boys made their national reputation with a note for note swipe of Berry's "Sweet Little Sixteen" dressed up in a fresh set of lyrics and retitled "Surfin' U.S.A.," while nine years later the effish Marc Bolan would have been first to admit that his two million seller "Band A Gong (Get It On)" was nicked straight from a mixture of Berry riffs.

And so it goes on down the line from Johnny Rivers' antiquated '60's version of Berry's "Memphis" to the Faces' '72 rendition on "A Nod Is As Good As A Wink"; from Bob Dylan, who feels that Berry is "the one man most responsible for defining rock and roll," to Jo Jo Gunne, who took their name from a Berry tune.

Chuck Berry's latest record release is "The London Chuck Berry Sessions" (Chess 60020). Not only does the new LP contain some updated live versions of the old Berry war horses ("Johnny B. Goode," "Reelin' & Rockin'," etc.) it also features as sidemen a couple of those "groovy" Anglo-Saxon music men who are usually overshadowing Berry by playing his own music. First off, on the live side (recorded at the Lanchester Arts Festival, Coventry, England—February 3, 1972) you have the Roy Young Backing Band plus ex-Rare Bird pianist Dave Peter Gaffney filling in and romping through three Berry standbys, including the never before recorded, sexually musical "Ding-A-Ling," which is a double-edged musical sword cascading with double entendres and flowing sexual anecdotes.

I did not say Berry was my idea of Doyle's Watson, but he was a good actor, and fits as Watson—only he would be so much better if he stopped emulating the speech mannerisms of Marlon Brando (The Godfather).

I did not say Berry was my idea of Doyle's Watson, but he was a good actor, and fits as Watson—only he would be so much better if he stopped emulating the speech mannerisms of Marlon Brando (The Godfather).

I did not say Berry was my idea of Doyle's Watson, but he was a good actor, and fits as Watson—only he would be so much better if he stopped emulating the speech mannerisms of Marlon Brando (The Godfather).

Every so often, I get the urge to tell somebody that Universal Pictures has it all wrong—and what I'd do if I was directing things.

Since the excellent Basil Rathbone is no longer with us, I'd use, of course, George C. Scott—and who for Watson? Why not David Niven?

But then, I have to admit that there's something special about these films—no matter how we may rant about effects, or style, or competence—that makes Nigel Bruce Dr. Watson, and Basil Rathbone, indisputably, Sherlock Holmes of Baker Street.

Coming tomorrow at Life Sciences: "Sherlock Holmes and The Spider Woman." Tickets $1.00 at the door or available by reservation; Lane Series office in Waterman or telephone: 551-3210. 8:00 p.m. and 9:30 p.m.

Whatever happened to Ira Allen Chapel's clock?

ANSWER: My consultant on hairy problems advises me to pass on the following words of wisdom. The ends of your hair are probably rubbing against the tops of your shoulders to a sufficient extent to cause mechanical irritating. It is possible that some residual oil on your shoulders or hair is making the matter worse. The most likely place is during sleep. Therefore, instead of getting a haircut, try wearing a hair net when you sleep. The hairnet will probably reduce tangles as well.

Lithograph Exhibits, Open Ceramic Workshop At Fleming

Hideo Okino

Two new exhibits open this week (November 14) at the Robert Hall Fleming Museum. Both consist of work by faculty members of the University of Vermont Art Department: Stoneware by Hideo Okino and Lithographs by Bill Davison.

In addition, there will be workshop-demonstrations in ceramics this Saturday, November 18, in conjunction with the stoneware exhibit.

Bill Davison's lithographs are part of a book entitled The Ship and All Things Sea. The book was a joint effort by Davison and T. Alan Broughton, of the Department of English, with the support of a University faculty grant.

Originating in Broughton's interest in the Aztec calendar, the book contains a poem, by Broughton, for each month of the year. The images, in turn, are based upon Davison's readings of the poems.

The book was executed at the George Little Press in Burlington and the Steinhour Press in Lunenburg, and boxed in maple by David Bredemeier of Charlotte.

The images were done in a technique developed by Davison which transforms the commercial press into a printmaker's tool. By manipulating the processes of offset lithography at the museum of printing, the work retains the physical immediacy of traditional hand printing techniques and the personal involvement of fine prints.

Printed in an edition of two hundred, copies of the book can be purchased through Bill Davison.

Hideo Okino's exhibit of ceramic forms, bowls, jars, plates and cups is the first Vermont showing of his work since he joined the UVM faculty in the fall of 1970. He is head of the Art Department's Ceramics Program.

A native of Hawaii, Okino studied ceramics at the University of Hawaii, where he received both his BFA and MFA. Although he has experimented with innovative techniques in ceramics, including the introduction of plastic, his work here follows the traditions of the Japanese potter. Most of his pieces are for sale.

In conjunction with this show, Okino and his students will conduct a walk-in demonstration-workshop from 9:30-11:30 a.m. Saturday, November 18. It will take place in the UVM Pot Shop located just west of the Museum in the basement of the Old Art Bldg.

Those attending will have a chance to watch firing of pots and to try their hand at the potter's wheel themselves. If you plan to participate, however, you should dress in old clothes.

The workshop is mainly for collectors and others interested in what pots are all about. Youngsters who want to join their parents, however, are welcome. There will be a place for them to work too.

Following the demonstration, coffee will be served in the main gallery of the Fleming Museum and visitors will then have a chance to speak with Mr. Okino about his art.

Bill Davison's lithographs and Hideo Okino's Stoneware will remain on view through December 5.

Next Arena Theatre Play Set In Italy

by Lisa Charles

The next play to be presented at the Arena Theatre will be Luigi Pirandello's "Right You Are If You Think You Are." Directed by Mr. Christopher Lane, the presentation is scheduled for December first through the fourth.

As in most of Pirandello's work, the central theme of this particular play deals with the distinction between reality and illusion. The plot revolves around a family which has just moved to a provincial town in Italy. While the husband and wife reside in a poverty-stricken tenement building, the mother-in-law is placed in an extravagant apartment. This domestic discrepancy becomes a frequent topic of conversation among the townfolk. However, the gossip increases with various reports concerning the method of communication between these three relatives. It seems that the daughter and the mother-in-law only converse in the courtyard of the apartment with a distance of five floors between them.

By a certain point, the entire town is concerned and upset with this situation. While Pirandello's "observer," Landini (or pseudo-narrator) relates the tragic history of this family, the townfolk counter this solemnity with their humorous gossip. In a sense, these provincial citizens are the true protagonists. As the plot progresses, two completely conflicting and credible stories are offered in an effort to resolve this mystery. However, both the townfolk and the audience are forced to individually decide between the two accounts. Thus, one returns to the distinction between reality and illusion; one is "right if he thinks he is."

Luigi Pirandello (1867-1936) was an Italian playwright who concerned himself with serious subjects. He is considered an important late nineteenth century writer, and Italy's greatest playwright since Goldoni, who wrote during the eighteenth century. When auditioning students for this play, Mr. Lane admitted to calling five seasons instead of the usual two.

"This is a difficult play to cast," Mr. Lane stated. "Pirandello calls it a parable, where people are real but not totally real. The work itself is very serious, but there is humor in the characters. However, this humor must not dominate the idea of the play, or the message will be lost," he concluded.

Out of a cast of fourteen, there are three major roles. The mother-in-law, Frola, will be played by Teresa Elwert. The son-in-law, Ponza, will be portrayed by Mark Casella, and the "observer," Landini, will be played by Ed Chomley.

Originally from Ohio University, Mr. Lane is spending his fourth year at UVM as a visiting professor. Lane teaches at the University during the school year and directs the Monocoy Theatre in Cape Cod during the summer months.

Those Senators that voted against the motion were: Sir Davidopoulos, Chittenden, Edward Pasquill, Coolidge, Gunther Meach, Hamilton, Debbie Shorley, Harris, Cheryl Stone, Jeanne Manoe, Gary Shaw, Mark, Dick Cassidy, Mason, Glenn Aublin, Mills, Dan Maslam, Shide, Randy Volk, Will, Carolyn Notkoff, Wing, Matthew Cole, Wright, Delta Delta Delta, Sharon Reed, Gamma Phi Beta, Kappa Alpha Theta, Pi Beta Phi, Alpha Gamma Rho, Alpha Tau Omega, Phi Gamma Delta, Sigma Nu, Sigma Phi, Tau Alpha Phi, and Terry Demas, Town Senator. The rest of the Senators were absent.

After the vote, representative from the Buckham Hall Council told this reporter that they had started the petition because they did not feel that their Senator was representing their interests and they felt that there might be other Senators as well who might be representing their private interests and not the interests and views of their constituents. This is the reason that they felt an important issue such as this allocation of $3,000 to Medical Aid to Burlington through the Committee Against the War should be submitted to the students for the final decision. The referendum will take place in five calendar weeks, which will be during final exams.

A motion to allocate $1,700 to the UVM Rescue Squad was passed. The breakdown of this allocation is as follows: vehicle insurance fee, $250; oxygen, $60; dressings and supplies, $300; office supplies, $80; repair of radio, $100; $800; replacement of walkie-talkie batteries, $100; flares, $10.

Defeated was a motion to set up bi-weekly meetings of the Senate starting next semester. Nominations were placed for the office of Senate Chairman. Person nominated were David Mahan, Sharon Reed, Lori Serrattelli, Dick Cassidy, Gary Shaw, Tom McMillan, Ace Bugher, and Jim Sioman. Further nominations, if any, and balloting will take place at the beginning of the next Senate meeting.

Album Review: Santana Explores Some New Directions

by Doug Collette

CARAVANSERAI
Columbia KC 31610

Santana's fourth LP is a logical progression from its predecessor which was a refinement of the band's early music: in that third album, the furious and the ferocious melted into the soft and melodious with the utmost ease and grace.

On Caravanserai, a restructured Santana plays a freer, tremendously sensual music that moves with the power of a river, the various instruments creating ripples, currents and waves of evocative, linguistic music. The production is much crisper than on their previous records and necessarily so, for there's such a great deal going on that too much of the impact of this performance would be lost if the necessary subtlety was obscured by faulty recording or a less-than-perfect mix. If you want to hear Doug Rauch's spectacular bass runs, they're as easy to single out as Michael Shrieve's sensitive drumming.

But just as mentioning particular musicians doesn't do justice to Caravanserai—each musician is an indispensable contributor to a constant instrumental interaction—it would be equally useless to mention individual cuts. The tracks are so programmed that a complete listening of this album is hearing one forty-five minute piece; it's hard to imagine each track as a separate entity unto itself, since the music progresses in a logical fashion, beginning gently, surging strongly, then subsiding softly only to build again to a conclusion that, even though it leaves you satisfied, leaves you hungry for more.

In fact, the album ends on a note of expectation with an implicit assurance that Santana is one inspired band, teeming with ideas only waiting to be explored.

Following intercourse with a particular woman, I frequently develop a rash on the glans of my penis, which disappears within a few days. Neither of us have a venereal disease. Other encounters have left my apparatus quite normal.

ANSWER: Perhaps fortunately, human beings are not allergic to each other. Most likely your friend is using a particular chemical contraceptive which is producing your skin irritation. If she is using one of the popular brands of contraceptive foam, Delfen or Emko, ask her to switch to the opposite brand and see what happens. If the rash on your penis still persists, try using a condom. If you still get the rash with the condom, the likelihood is that something other than intercourse is causing it and a physician should be consulted by you. If your friend is not using a chemical contraceptive, she should visit a physician to determine if she has a vaginal infection that is causing the trouble.

With 11 consecutive victories, the University of Vermont Debate Team, composed of Jan Murray, a junior from Barre, Vermont and Samuel Press, a freshman from Burlington, swept through the Brown University Invitational Debate Tournament this past Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. All the top schools of debating in the northeast, including the University of Vermont, participated in the tournament.

At the National last year, were in attendance. On Friday, the Vermont debaters met and defeated Harvard, Emerson, and Pace College. Saturday, they defeated the University of Maine, Boston University, the University of Rhode Island, and Anselm's. With this record of 8 Wins and no losses, the Vermont team was rated the top team to go into the Elimination Rounds defeating Boston College in the Quarter Finals, Tufts College in the Semi-Finals, and the University of Rhode Island in the Finals.

This is the second consecutive championship that Murray and Press have won since being teamed together four weeks ago. At the GENESCO Tournament two weeks ago they, likewise, won the championship team having won nine debates and lost only one during the Seeding Round. With the present 11 Wins, their record stands at 20 Wins and 1 Loss, the best record of any school in the northeast at the moment.

As individual debaters, Samuel Press got the 4th highest number of points in the tournament, while Murray achieved the second highest. The debate question was: RESOLVED: That the federal government should provide a program of comprehensive medical care for all citizens.

novice debaters consisting of Mary Ellen Smith, Donna Baker, Sally Kirk, and Kathy Bigelow had a total of 12 debates. The affirmative team of Donna Baker and Mary Ellen Smith made the excellent record of 5 Wins and 1 Loss.

The record for Sally Kirk and Kathy Bigelow was 2 Wins and 4 Losses. However, the best record of any negative team in the tournament was only 1 better than they had, 3 Wins and 3 Losses. In that tournament, affirmative wins in the Novice Division seemed to predominate. Also attending the Southern Connecticut Tournament were: Michael Schwartz, Extemporaneous Speaking, and Oratory, and Larry Doten, in Oratory.

Competing in Oral Interpretation were: Donna Baker and Allison Davis, Jan DePrato, John Mahoney and Elaine Peterson.

On Monday and Tuesday, Karen Olio and Daniel Moore as the affirmative team and Jeff Potash and Dan Mulcahy as the negative team, accompanied by their coach, Michael Cronin, attended the Debate Days in Detroit Debate Tournament. This is an unusual tournament sponsored by Wayne State University on the national health topic question with all debates being held in front of audiences. For example, the debaters for one round may be in front of a high school assembly, a second round in a social events class, a third round in a Business Men's Club, fourth round in front of a Women's Club, and a fifth round in front of a college student audience.

The decisions are made up both by a critic judge and by an audience shift of opinion ballot. Before the debates started, the audience is polled as to their beliefs on the question and then polled afterwards to see if there has been any change and the team with the greatest amount of change is judged the winner. As the Cynic goes to press, the results were unavailable.

complaint of Nigel Bruce as an incompetent Watson. Nigel Bruce is a good actor, and fits as Watson—only he would be as much better if he stopped emulating the speech mannerisms of Marion Brando (Gollum).

I did not say Bruce was my idea of Doyle's Watson, but he did not look garishly out of place; he merely fit. I also wished to point out that through the fumbles and bumbles of human error so prevalent in the character of Watson, I could see a real person, sensitive, loyal, with great admiration for his fellow colleague and a very human wish to be more like him.

The Watson of the film screen is not the Watson of the books, unfortunately. But he is certainly tolerable, if the scriptwriters would stop trying to emphasize the differences between himself and Holmes.

Every so often, I get the urge to tell somebody that Universal Pictures has it all wrong—and what I'd do if I was directing things.

Since the excellent Basil Rathbone is no longer with us, I'd use, of course, George C. Scott—and who for Watson? Why not David Niven?

But then, I have to admit that there's something special about these films—no matter how we may rant about effects, or style, or competence—that makes Nigel Bruce Dr. Watson, and Basil Rathbone, indisputably, Sherlock Holmes of Baker Street.

Coming tomorrow at Life Sciences: "Sherlock Holmes and The Spider Woman." Tickets $1.00 at the door, or $0.50 in advance. Last Series office in Waterman or telephone 656-3418. Time 8:00 p.m. and 9:30 p.m.

Colonel Haponski Comments

On Changing Role Of ROTC

by Jeri Covey

The following are excerpts from an interview with Lt.
Colonel William C. Haponski of the Military Science Department of UVM.

Q. What is the scope of ROTC at UVM?

A. This year we have seventy-three students, which is the lowest amount ever.
Unfortunately UVM is participating in the downward trend of ROTC with the rest of the country. The low number doesn't exactly bother me, at this stage anyhow, because I feel that we have a quality program. If we continue to go very much lower then I will be somewhat concerned. Of interest is the fact that although the number of ROTC students is lower, we are increasing the enrollment in our courses of non-ROTC students including some women.

Q. What type of courses do you cover? What are the main topics of your courses?

A. The departmental course offerings total nineteen credit hours for the four years, that's one course per term. They are broken down basically into halves; that is, the first two years of courses are designed for both non-ROTC and ROTC students to give an opportunity to investigate broad military affairs. These are educational courses of broad content and extending credit to ROTC courses among all colleges at UVM. Is there any program this year that has brought the subject up again?

A. The question of credit is very much an alive one, it was commented on by the Dean of Arts and Sciences just recently on television. I don't prefer to get into the details of the feelings of various faculty members within the Arts and Sciences.

Q. Last year in the faculty senate there was a debate over

Jack Anderson Shares His Mistrust Of Politicians With UVM Audience

by Steven C. Rice

Syndicated columnist Jack Anderson came to the University of Vermont's Patrick Gymnasium Tuesday evening to share in a speech some of his memories as a writer for the Washington Post over the past 25 years.

Throughout his one hour and a half talk, Anderson pleaded with an audience of 200 to never trust the word of men in powerful political positions, especially the President of the United States.

He alleged that presidents have purposely lied to the public through the use of America's free press to cover up mistakes that could threaten their political future.

Anderson cited last year's discovery that President Nixon had, in fact, sent fighter planes to East Pakistan by way of Jordan to support the Pakistanis in the Bangladesh War. At that time, on December 6, 1971, according to Anderson, Nixon had conferred with Congressional leaders to tell them that the White House would maintain a position of "neutrality."
However, it seems Nixon's top foreign policy advisor, Henry Kissinger, had persuaded the President to do otherwise; the planes were sent, and the public simply wasn't told, said Anderson.

Though the columnist had begun by speaking of the Vietnam conflict, claiming that an end to the war was indeed much more complicated than anyone felt, Anderson was obviously more concerned with the government's threat to a free press. He asserted that too many meetings involving the President and top-level advisors have been conducted secretly, and many decisions have also been kept secret. In this perspective, then, Anderson said it was the job and the right of a free press to be the "watchdog" and find out what the leaders weren't telling the public, or, if they were telling something publicly, then to ask whether this was all of it.

Anderson alluded to the case of the Pentagon Papers, where presidential intervention had for a short time eliminated freedom of the press in America. He referred to President Nixon's blocking the printing of the documents by the New York Times and the Washington Post, though, in fact, officials near Nixon had admitted that there was nothing "contained within the papers that threatened the nation's security," and, therefore, they were a "historical document".
However, the Supreme Court overruled President Nixon's action, and the papers were published in their entirety.

Anderson's voice erupted when he asked the audience to consider the possibility which might have happened had Nixon been fully successful. He said, "If the President had succeeded... he would establish as his right... anything he doesn't want you to read..."
Then, the writer leaned forward on the podium to observe questionably: "Is it because he's a dictator at heart?"

Paradoxically, it seemed Anderson at times tended to be sympathetic with men who became president. He remarked that they do have the best information possible and do indeed have the ultimate responsibility for the country's welfare. Yet, somewhere along
presidents tend to forget that they are still "servants of the people," rather than "masters of the people." The columnist said that this was, in a way understandable, especially when the president had three jets at his disposal as well as a "whole mountaintop" for himself.

Anderson also warned that the bureaucracy under the president increases his power day by day by controlling and manipulating the flow of news.
The writer asserted that the bureaucracy is turning into a "Frankenstein monster."

Anderson remarked that the downfall of a democracy begins when the government has successfully won control of the nation's press. Other personal liberties are then lost, he continued. In emphasizing this, Anderson remarked that a close friend of his, a decorated World War II soldier who had

'OATMEAL' Experiments
With Photographic Imagery

During the week of November 14, many students and faculty members were rathery surprised one morning to find dozens of wooden posts stuck all over the green with photos attached to them.
Pamers by who took the time to examine the pictures found that the photos were taken at the very spot where the observer stood, and aimed in the same direction. This was Project-Oatmeal.

No prior publicity was given to Oatmeal so that the element of surprise would be maximized. Kevin Osborn, director of the project, specifically requested that the Cynic refrain from publicity until after the end of the experiment. Oatmeal was done by "Image Eye" a photography group in the Experimental Arts Department. The group had taken photographs of scenes on the Green, on downtown Church Street, and in Simpson Dining Hall.

Participants included Alec
Marshall, Cathy Clayton, Rich Fornes, Mike Kinsler, Ed
Tracy, Ted Waldman, Kathy Derrick, George Whitehead, Wally Weiss, Rich Rollins, Luca
Corruba, John Owen, Gunner Menich, Kim Borgavage, and Van Powell.

The object of Oatmeal was to: (1) Extensively photograph an area as non-subjectively as possible, that is, with the least interpretation; (2) Expose the images exactly where they were taken; and (3) Leave them up for an extended period of time. The first two were achieved, however, due to numerous "rip-offs" several pictures disappeared within a short amount of time.

Image Eye passed out questionnaires to various persons who saw the pictures on the Green. Ages varied from 18 to 42. In answers to various questions, responses indicated a generally favorable reaction.
"A good change of pace..."
"one of the finest things I've seen done in the community in the last 8 years..." "A good idea in helping to initiate more thorough thought on the extent of our everyday observations..." However, there was some unfavorable reaction, expressed by one student: "Why would anyone go to so much trouble to take a picture of a scene that is on display where the true image is right there and in the same perspective? Not even in color!" Another student's observation, one not expressed by others, was very straightforward and probably very true: "I'm afraid too many people ignored the pictures."

Kevin Osborn gave his personal views on the project and its significance:

"The image is the major artifact of our age. It is photography, television, and film. Its use is widespread from picture-taking (the largest hobby in America) through the cultural significance of film to the ubiquitousness of television. Both hindering and helping our vision the image is, the most extensive myth-maker of our time. Yet when we look at reality do we see reality or an image? When we look at an image do we see an image or reality? Metaphorically, are we in a bowl of oatmeal where nothing is clear but only bland and sometimes confused?
Fundamentally, do we see what we are looking at? And again do we look at what we are seeing?"

"Oatmeal attempts a realization and an understanding of the image and its significance in our culture by making the direct tie between image and reality.
Usually the two are separated.
We see a photograph in a magazine or gallery, television in our living room, and film in a theatre. We then make an association of the image with the reality, yet the association is a distant one involving individual and limited (to our own imagination) participation.

Even though the image should make us feel more the danger is that it will make us see less. We begin to see in terms of a picture and not the reality. When people seeing a beautiful scene or vista say,
"Oh, that would make a pretty picture!" are they seeing the image of the scene or the scene itself?

Oatmeal is a confrontation of image and reality. One is with the other. The exposition of photographs is not away in a gallery or magazine but directly in the environment from which they came. We can see that an image is not reality and that reality is not an image. Having made a redefinition of the image we can begin to interact more strongly with it. Place and time essential to both the image and to ourselves now become increasingly evident.

"Moving into any area we instinctively establish its space by 'looking about', that is through varied and different eye-movements. As a whole the images scattered throughout a space imitates our perception and the basic looking about process. In relation to each image this scattering of images as we scatter our own glances intensifies our basic participation, for we see one image and then a whole spread of them. An end result the space and not its abstraction takes on importance.

"The second factor is time.
Between the instant the photograph is taken and the

New Plans Outlined For Billings

by Linda Goodspeed

Terry Demas, chairman of the Billings Center Governing Board, has outlined a number of auspicious plans for the future of Billings Center. The main objective of the Governing Board, according to Demas, is that the Billings Center should be a university in itself.

As a result, the Governing Board, although still largely inactive, has been turned into a type of program board and a large number of committees have been created to determine what services are needed. "The composition," said Demas, "is completely new and open—anyone can come in and create their own program.
There are no rules except that the students are satisfied and that a quality job is done."

Instead of Billings being a receptacle for all other activities, the Board wants to set up its own activities and put out a calendar of events.
Events mentioned included films, speakers, free entertainment, theater, Baroque ensembles, and Roundhouse entertainment. Art exhibits are another important aspect in the conversion of Billings into a true student union, because it is felt that the majority of students congregate in Billings rather than in the art galleries and the primary concern is "having as many people as possible see the exhibits." Debates, formal and informal discussions, and a series of noon concerts for next semester in the North Dorm are other goals. In the Dorm, the focus this year has been on changing the atmosphere. Under the direction of John Puck, a great deal more friendliness and flexibility prevails. As Demas said, "Billings should be more than just offices. A student union should be a place where activities are planned and happening—a place where students don't have to get involved in academics, but can just come and do things."

As a result of these plans, Billings is gathering momentum and are being slowly incorporated.
The roundhouse has been providing student entertainment every Friday night, a few films, Com Brío and Baroque Ensemble concerts have been featured, and there are plans for a number of exhibits and speakers. A long-range goal of the Governing Board is the construction of a new building for a student union. A committee headed by Dean Powers is investigating this possibility. Demas feels that "there is no focal point—no union place designed as a student union—on this campus where students can meet."

Obviously Billings can't handle all the students on campus and we feel there is justification for a new building.

A major problem, he noted, in instituting these new programs was a lack of cooperation on the part of the other departments. He always receives a number of complaints from students when it is necessary to close down a certain room for some scheduled activity. He feels that "studying is not all there is to do at this university—activities are another. Student activities grow incredibly fast and it is our duty to meet these needs. If kids don't have enough places to study, they should put the pressure on the administration to provide space for them." Demas also noted that the Governing Board meets every Thursday in Billings at 4:30 and that anyone is welcome to come and complain or suggest.

CALENDAR/ANNOUNCEMENTS

UVM Undergraduate Journal

A new publication, the UVM Undergraduate Journal, will consist of the best (most creative, thoughtful and knowledgeable) papers written by undergraduate students at the University of Vermont. For ready access by all students, it will be placed on reserve at the Bailey Library. It will serve as a source of material in a particular discipline and for examples of exemplary student work.

Papers can be submitted by either the professor or the student and will be judged by a board of editors consisting of both students and faculty. The most worthwhile papers will be selected for the journal. A short summary of the works will be posted each semester. Any student's work is potential material; writings, graphics, analysis, photography, and reviews. It is hoped that all students will make an effort to submit their creative scholarship so as to add to the education of others. Works can be dropped off at the Philosophy Department, 481 Main St. c/o Douglas Fritz.

Two Senior Recommendations

Two senior appointments in the University of Vermont administration will be recommended to Trustees at their meeting here December 2. President Edward C. Andrews, Jr. announced today.

Acting Dean of Students Richard W. Powers, of Shelburne, is nominated Dean, succeeding Roland D. Patzer, who is in Washington with the U.S. Office of Education.

H. N. Muller, of Burlington, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, is named director of the University's new Living/Learning Center complex, now under construction in the Main Street-University Heights area, which is to provide academic, activities, and living space for 600 students-plus selected faculty.
Dean Powers was the unanimous choice of a search committee chaired by Arts and Sciences Dean John G. Weger. He came to Vermont as Dean of Men in 1967 and in 1970 was given the additional title of Associate Dean of Students.

Elections Closely Prognosticated

UVM Political Science Professor Morris Simon provided a prognosticator in the election just passed.

Prof. Simon, who has served the American Broadcasting Company as a political analyst for Vermont in each of the last three national elections, came within a whisker of predicting Vermont's vote for the presidency and for the Congressional race between Congressman Richard Mallary and William Meyer.
The Friday before the election, he estimated for ABC that President Nixon would receive 64 per cent of Vermont's votes; Congressman Mallary 65 per cent. The final tally, according to newspaper reports two days after election, showed Mr. Nixon won 63 per cent; Congressman Mallary 64.7 per cent of the votes cast by Vermonters for the respective offices.
In another race - the gubernatorial contest between

Two Senior Appointments Recommended To Trustees

Two senior appointments in the University of Vermont administration will be recommended to Trustees at their meeting here December 2, President Edward C. Andrews, Jr. announced today.

Acting Dean of Students Richard W. Powers, of Shelburne, is nominated Dean, succeeding Richard D. Fitzer, who is in Washington with the U.S. Office of Education.

H. N. Muller, of Burlington, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, is named director of the University's new Living/Learning Center complex, now under construction in the Main Street-University Heights area, which is to provide academic, activities, and living space for 600 students plus selected faculty.

Dean Powers was the unanimous choice of a search committee chaired by Arts and Sciences Dean John G. Weger. He came to Vermont as Dean of Men in 1967 and in 1970 was given the additional title of Associate Dean of Students.

Earlier he was associate director of residence halls, counseling and activities at Indiana University, and prior to that served on the student personnel staff at Kent (Ohio) State University. A graduate of Allegheny College, he earned his Ph.D. in higher education and government at Indiana University.

Dr. Muller will assume his new duties upon the selection of a successor in the College of Arts and Sciences. His choice followed consultation with faculty and administrative representatives, as well as an institution-wide search and a series of interviews conducted by the University's Council of Academic Deans.

He earned an A.B. from Dartmouth College and a Ph.D. in history from the University of Rochester and taught at Dartmouth and at the University of Canada, before coming to UVM in 1966. At UVM he has taught and written about Vermont history and has been active in the Canadian Studies Program, support services for university students, and the development of new facilities for the fine arts. At present he is serving as President of the Vermont Archaeology Society and as a trustee of the Fletcher Free Library, the Vermont Historical Society, and the Vermont Academy of Arts and Sciences.

The Living/Learning Center at UVM is scheduled to open in the fall of 1973, and will provide facilities for academic programs from all of the colleges in the University. Resting on the traditional disciplines, it is planned that the present faculty will design vigorous programs that enhance the opportunities for relating academic pursuits to living facilities and encourage students to learn independently and make rapid progress toward the degree.

President Andrews characterized the appointments as "first-class" and said the University was "fortunate to have the talent to draw upon for both of these most important posts."

Elections Closely Predicted By Professor Simon

UVM Political Science Professor Morris Simon proved a canny political prognosticator in the election just passed.

Prof. Simon, who has served the American Broadcasting Company as a political analyst for Vermont in each of the last three national elections, came within a whisker of predicting Vermont's vote for the presidency and for the Congressional race between Congressman Richard Mallary and William Meyer.

The Friday before the election, he estimated for ABC that President Nixon would receive 64 per cent of Vermont's votes; Congressman Mallary 65 per cent. The final tally, according to newspaper reports two days after election, showed Mr. Nixon won 63 per cent; Congressman Mallary 64.7 per cent of the votes cast by Vermonters for the respective offices.

In another race—the gubernatorial contest between

Democrat Tom Salmon and Republican Luther F. Hackett—Prof. Simon advised ABC on the Friday preceding election day: "too close to call."

As part of his assignment for the network, Prof. Simon gave mid-September and October reports as well as the pre-election Friday report.

In an ecumenical aside, he spent election evening in the studios of WCAX-TV, a CBS affiliate, and made periodic reports to ABC from there.

Toys For Tots Collected

Again this year the Office of Volunteer Programs, Kappa Alpha Theta, and Tau Epsilon Phi are sponsoring the Toys for Tots campaign. This program provides less fortunate children with toys for Christmas.

The main drop off points for the toys will be:

WDOT 395 College Street
TAU EPSILON PHI 383 College Street
KAPPA ALPHA THETA 215 South Prospect Street
THE OFFICE OF

VOLUNTEER PROGRAMS Billings Center

There will also be a door-to-door pick up of toys on December 14 from 5 pm to 9 pm. Both new and used toys will be picked up. Please call either 863-9294 or 864-9051 if you would like to have toys picked up.

The coordinators for the campaign are Bob Griffiths (Tau Epsilon Phi), Martha Baker (Kappa Alpha Theta) and Mrs. Pat Matteri (10 York Drive).

ECHO VERMONT Premieres Next Week

Thetford Center—ECHO VERMONT Magazine has arrived and will be available at newsstands the first week in December, according to its publisher. The state's only environmental magazine, which began as a dream several months ago as a way to educate the public on the need for preserving and enhancing their environment, features some hard hitting articles on land development, according to Charlotte McCartney, publisher and editor.

"We believe that we have captured in our first issue of ECHO VERMONT the importance of making people aware that we can no longer tolerate environmental devastation, land exploitation, and public apathy, if we are to save our rural quality of life," Ms. McCartney said.

The editor, who publishes the unique 40 page magazine out of her home in Thetford Center, added the ECHO VERMONT articles include the dangers of ski area expansion, the controversy of snowmobiles, crafts in Vermont, the doom of a land use plan under Act 250, the need for public monies to support re-cycling efforts, the impact of salt on our highways, and a look at the "real" Quebec lakes.

The quarterly magazine also includes photographs and sketches on the lighter side, such as building your own privy, or buying a living Christmas tree, or some alternate uses of land. Plus much more.

Available at newsstands or by subscription, ECHO VERMONT magazine offers Vermonters a chance to learn about themselves and what they are doing or not doing to their environment.

IRA Meetings

Snowshoes Available, Housing Costs

The meeting was called to order in the Harris-Mills recreation room. Hall representatives were present from: Austin, Buckham, Chittenden, Christie, Conover, Davis, Jeanne Mance, Miller, Redstone, Robinson, Tupper, Wilks, Wills, Wing, and Wright. Dr. Miser and Dean Thompson were present.

REPORTS: Current IRA treasury balance is $2722.

The hours for the Woodworking shop were announced.

The Bike shop will be finished after Thanksgiving. Sig got the name of the traffic board chairman; Dr. Martin will probably be at the next meeting.

The Ski show on Nov. 18th in Wright Dining Hall (instead of MAT lounge) will have ski representatives from different phases of the ski equipment industry present.

Bill Root spoke about snowshoes. There are 13 pairs available at Converse to be checked out there because there is a supervised desk there. He will also order snowshoes for other people or dorms if desired, but they are welcome to use these.

Regarding the Fleming Museum, Sig thinks we should donate $50, but that it's not really IRA's place to give more since students will be on vacation at the time of the showing.

Jeff Wilson from the S.A. concert bureau was there to answer questions. Contracts must be reviewed by the presidents of the UVM office. Opening up the gym involves a large expense ($1500-2000). Perhaps have S.A. fund the concert and sign contracts and use IRA manpower to put it on.

A motion was made and seconded regarding having a feasibility study of the possibility of a joint effort SA-IRA concept. The committee should be made up of chairman and treasurer of concert bureau, executive SA member, and treasurer and president of IRA. Also anyone else considered useful in this respect.

Dr. Miser talked about SAGA. It is time for renewal of their food contract, and he requested options: open one dining hall for Sunday breakfast; try another food company; early provisions for guest; lines too long at Waterman.

Dr. Miser said that housing costs will go up in three years. He also spoke about the new Living/Learning Center that is in the process of being built.

Studies are in the process of determining possibilities of TV hookups for Chittenden-Buckham-Wills halls. They will check with Family Associates regarding the donation of an antenna.

There being no further business to discuss, the meeting was adjourned. The next meeting will be held in Hall Rec. Room next Monday at 7:00.

machine knobs. Sig also asked the Council to consider setting up craftshops for jewelry, leather, metal, and photography. Discussion was held but no action was taken.

Welfare Vice President Jim Kelly reported that the Saga Food Committee meets every other week on Monday nights in the Wright Dining Hall. The first meeting went well and a suggestion was made that students rotate dining halls so the quality level of food in all cafeterias would be raised. Jim stressed that the Saga people are very receptive to student opinions and urged anyone with complaints or ideas to attend the meetings.

Dean Thompson announced that the Residence Hall Handbook, published jointly by IRA and the Office of Residence Halls was being put together now for next year. The Handbook is to be sent out with the Housing Contract. IRA volunteers are needed to work on this project.

NEW BUSINESS: A motion was made to allocate $200 to MAT to fund a Ski Shop. This shop will be open for about 3 hours a night with unpaid volunteers covering the shift. The motion was tabled until the next meeting.

On a suspended rules vote the council voted to give $30 to the Fleming Museum to help pay for Christmas Season Activities.

It was decided not to hold a meeting Nov. 20; the next meeting will be held on Nov. 27.

There being no further business, the meeting was adjourned at 7:45.

Respectfully submitted, Mary Ashcroft, Allison Milne, Secretaries of IRA

C-N Center.

Christmas Bazaar Planning

Many people will walk next Sunday, others will sponsor the walkers. Bishop John A. Marshall of Burlington will have a unique part in the Hunger Walk. He will interrupt a busy schedule to celebrate the 4:15 Mass at the Cunningham Newman Center, Dec. 3. How will this involve him in the walk? By celebrating the Mass at the Newman Center, he will enable the staff (Fr. Holland, Sr. Lindora and Fr. Moccassello) to take part in the walk. Money collected from the sponsors will be turned over to an ecumenical organization which exists to feed the hungry.

Father Dan Daly, instructor at Rice Memorial High School and Trinity College will be guest preacher next weekend, Dec. 2 and 3, at the Cunningham Newman Center. In keeping with the Advent theme, Father Daly's topic will be "Jeremiah, a prophet of our Times."

Would any students be interested in displaying and selling their Crafts at a Christmas Bazaar at the Cunningham Newman Center, on Sunday December 10th? Contact us at the Center (tel. 862-8403) sometime during the week if you would like room for your Display! A Food Sale will also be held on that day. Anyone wishing to Donate some home-cooked foods for this booth? All are welcome at the Bazaar and Food Sale that Sunday, December 10th, following the 9 A.M. Liturgy, and continuing on during the day!

"The Bridge"

The Committee Against The War will present the film "The Bridge" on Tuesday, December 5 at 7 and 9 PM in Benedict Auditorium of Life Sciences Hall. "The Bridge" is a German film made in 1959 about German youths who desire to join the army, and was shown recently on late night Canadian television. Admission will be free.

Letter:

$3000 For Vietnam

To the Editor:

The Buckham Hall Council originated the petition concerning the $3000 to Medical Aid to Indochina because the constitutionality of such an appropriation is dubious. The Student Association's Constitution provides for a student activity fee to be paid by all full time undergraduates to support activities that are "cultural, social, educational, and recreational." Recognized student organizations are eligible to receive a share of the collected fees, as determined by the Senate. The UVM Committee Against the War is a recognized organization, and were it to spend the $3000 for the benefit of the entire S.A. membership, our objections would be less strenuous. Because there are a number of students who do believe in the need for humanitarian gestures to offset the suffering in Southeast Asia, the Committee could conduct a campus wide fund raising campaign with as little as $100 or so in S.A. funds for publicity purposes. Such an action by the Committee would conserve

S.A. funds, which are currently low, and eliminate a constitutional problem. Unfortunately, we will never know if such an appropriation is constitutional, because the Supreme Court of the S.A. has not been elected.

Judging from the Senate's actions in the past months, we are not confident that all Senators are being responsible to their constituencies. Town Senators are few in number but represent large numbers of students, and are quite powerful in relationship to Senators from individual living units. We are not concerned about arbitrarily selecting the number of at-large town senators; we do protest the misuse of this power. Read the minutes of this year's S.A. meetings and decide how many bills have actually pertained to matters directly affecting the S.A. membership. We can only be thankful for those Senators who have sought to preserve the integrity of the Student Association Constitution by opposing irrelevant motions.

Buckham Hall Council

SA Money For Non-Campus Activities

by William Beaudoin

The Student Association Senate passed a resolution giving $3,000 to Medical Aid for Indochina. The resolution now faces a campus-wide student referendum. In the last issue of the Cynic published before Thanksgiving recess there were certain misconceptions propagated by the lead editorial concerning Medical Aid for Indochina. It is, with the purpose of clearing up those misconceptions that I write this article.

1. The University Community does not exist apart from the outside world. The people who are educated at this institution are citizens before they are students.

In the past, Student Association funds have been used for various non-campus activities: blood drives, Parent defense fund, etc., hence, it would set no precedent for the SA to donate money for Medical Aid (from SA activities it would seem that they had better start setting precedents).

2. Medical Aid donations go to buy medical supplies in Europe, which are then shipped directly to northern Vietnam for distribution in the north and in the liberated areas of the south. (Northern Vietnam has a standard of medical care comparable to that of Western Europe; the government of Thieu has done nothing to provide medical care for its civilian population.)

3. Medical Aid for Indochina is not connected with the Red Cross. American doctors who are on the Medical Aid Committee determine what supplies are needed; they are bought and sent.

The people of Indochina suffer regardless of their political commitments. We as citizens and fellow human beings can help; this is the essence of Medical Aid for Indochina.

COMMITTEE AGAINST THE WAR

Medical Assistance For Indochina

by Gene Bergman

On December 13, a general referendum will be held concerning whether the students of UVM should allocate $3,000 to the Medical Aid to Indochina project.

What is Medical Aid?

Medical Aid for Indochina is a non-profit organization formed in 1971 to send supplies and medicines to war victims in Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia. It began as a small group of concerned physicians and healthcare workers, and grew as more concerned individuals realized the need for medical aid. In its first seven months of operation, MAI forwarded over $40,000 worth of surgical equipment and supplies to Indochina, and National MAI Week (Oct. 8-14, 1972) resulted in the distribution of 25,000 cardiac pacemakers, oxygenators, polio vaccine and other supplies.

How does MAI operate?

MAI collects money through individual and collective contributions. Medical equipment and supplies requested by teams in Indochina are purchased in the United States or Europe and shipped to Hanoi via Europe or Asia. The Liberation Red Cross in southern Vietnam and the Vietnam Red Cross in Northern Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia distribute the supplies to medical teams as needed for use in hospitals and mobile health units. Mobile emergency clinics and operating rooms travel to areas with the greatest immediate medical need, and can be at the site of a bombing attack within a short time. American MAI teams make periodic inspection trips to Vietnam to make sure that the supplies have arrived and are being distributed.

Why is Medical Aid necessary?

While claiming that "peace is at hand" the Nixon Administration is waging the most brutal war known to man against the peoples of Indochina. Every day record numbers of B-52 bombing missions are sent. There have been more civilian casualties in Nixon's first four years than in the rest of the ten years of conflict. The transformation of the "ground war" into the "air war" under Nixon has resulted in the unprecedented antipersonal nature of the war: weapons (pineapple and guava bombs) designed not to destroy tanks or factories or even to kill men but to maim. B-52 saturation bombings which leave a barren crater marked countryside have led to the rapid spread of malaria, tuberculosis and other contagious diseases in South Vietnam, all of which remain untreated due to the Thieu regime which places repression of opposition newspapers over health care as a top priority. Therefore MAI becomes a positive way that the American people can collectively aid the victims of their own government's brutal bombing campaigns (the Kennedy Subcommittee on War Victims attributes the vast majority of casualties in Vietnam to American bombings). In effect MAI voices solidarity with the Vietnamese struggle against genocide and for self-determination. To reclaim some of the humanity lost by the American people to their government's conduct of the war we urge you to vote YES on MAI.

Environmental CommentIn Pursuit Of A Sustainable Society

by Gene Beaudoin

We all make decisions at various points in our lifetime. They vary in nature; some deal with the immediate future, some deal with long range plans. They also vary in whom they affect. Usually they affect one's self and those people in one's immediate environment. The longer range and larger decisions are usually made for us by politicians or economists, or others, like scientists or engineers who in effect determine much of the future.

This article is concerned with making some of the decisions now. Some decisions have linear effects and others have logarithmic effects. It appears that the ones with logarithmic effects should be dealt with first in that in the final analysis they have the largest effects and they also in the short run have much more perceivable effects. The decisions to be dealt with in this article will have their effects in larger proportion in the relative distant future. They also will have effect on large numbers of people.

THE TASK

It will be the single most important task of the present generation of humans to create a society which is sustainable and will also give to its members the fullest possible satisfaction. The nature of this society will be that it is based on these two concepts first and foremost, other considerations will be given only consideration which is secondary to them. It cannot be based on expansion and constant growth. Before anyone gets scared off, this does not mean that the society should in any way stagnate. It does give a better chance for peace and fulfillment for more people than the present society does. Immediately, a critic of this paper would say that I am referring to Utopia. It would seem strange to me that any one would want to pursue any other course than one that would lead to peace and human fulfillment. Because of our present goals of growth and technological efficiency, our present course would appear to not have peace or human fulfillment as end products.

Human fulfillment would have to be based on the social system which must allow the individual to grow, not as a function of material wealth, but rather grow in a free, unrestricted manner, with respect to his mental or intellectual person. The society which is sustainable must be ecologically sound. In this aspect of ecological soundness are the subjects of population, minerals and resources, energy, agriculture, and the condition of the environment.

It is said that only fools and economists believe that there can be continual unrestricted growth of the exponential type. It is evident that a society that is stable or sustainable must have growth patterns that are ecologically sound. Sustainable does not mean sustainable after hitting the upper asymptote in a J shaped curve, for in ecological systems the J shape in the curve means, to put it euphemistically, that there are some uncomfortable times ahead for the society. If it is the plan to use the earth's ecosystem to its fullest extent (and perhaps that shouldn't be the goal but for my purpose I shall assume it), the ideal growth rate for the population for example might be the following:

k = the maximum number (again there is a philosophical question here)

b = base of the logarithm

c = g/k

gr = the growth rate

t = time

The other choice is to reach the peak of the J shaped curve which simply amounts to famines, starvation, epidemics, and/or other unpleasanties.

I use population as the example in the ecosystem because it is one of the aspects we do know about. We also know about the economics of the ecosystem. We do not know enough about the total physical system to make any clear points about some aspects of the hydrosphere or the atmosphere. We also know very little about the biosphere, which is a sad truth. What we do know however is clearly ecological and the question at hand is clearly ecological.

The decision has to come soon on the nature of the growth curve for the population in the earth ecosystem.

The use of minerals and resources must be examined and there must be a determination made as to their uses. Some of the projects have already been made in books like Limits to Growth and the questions are immediate ones. The curves on a graph of availability versus time are somewhat different than for that of population. The lower asymptote is the final goal of the present curves. This basically applies to non-renewable resources. It would then appear that the sustainable society must manage its non-renewable resources and also examine its other resources in terms of their real values and real costs.

Real costs must include the purchase price, the effect on the environment during production, during use and during elimination, its relation to the amount of the resources that are used in its production, use and elimination, that are left for future generations, the real value, and the effects on the energetics of the ecosystem.

Real value is not based on GNP or other market prices. Real value is a function of real costs and also would distinguish between electric toothbrushes and penicillin. The economic costs are reliable, but at present the real costs and real values are not reliable.

The answers must lie then in an evaluation of the real costs and real values of the society. This of course is monstrous. Political labor is only as good as the intellectual labor that precedes it and I believe that some of that intellectual labor is already under way. With an evaluation in hand, the mechanics are somewhat easier. A value added tax would be most likely the best mechanism and this of course would be real value added tax as opposed to economic value added tax. The V.A.T. would be based on real costs, real value, and its life which probably would be included in real value and real costs.

The decision has to come soon on the nature of the use and misuse of the resources in the earth ecosystem.

In a study of man and nature one would be completely amiss to not include a study of energetics. When we speak of biogeochemical systems, microorganisms, animals, plants, web life patterns, trophic levels, populations, food sources, and their interrelationships we can tie it all together by examining the pathways of energy through the various levels, patterns, and systems. At the dawn of mankind the systems were sound ecologically and relatively simple. There was a balanced ebb and flow of energy and simple energy sinks for the various small populations. In effect, the early populations were protected by the natural systems that existed before man appeared. The early simple ecosystems were based on the energy of the sun with occasional imports (fire, geologic heat, etc.). Now man has added to the import category with his use of concentrated fossil fuels, coal, oil, hydro-generation, chemical, wind generation, tidal generation, and now nuclear forms of energy. (While these vary in form and origin they all obey the laws of thermodynamics.) The protection of the natural ecosystem or sound ecosystem (with a futuristic definition) are lacking. Man's capability of hurting himself is becoming greater all the time. The patterns of energy flow are becoming more and more unwieldy. The combination of money flows, energy flows, causal action flows, and other new variations on the theme are not only making the system more complex, they are also making the individual in many cases to be much further away from the basic energy inflow or import, the work done, the original force that caused the stress. Because he is much further away from the original act he begins to lose sight or has lost sight of where it was. A "simple" model for the piece of paper that I am writing on: (see below)

While the model is not perfect, which is the case with all models, it does show why the question is really complex. The point is that when we think about electrical energy, for example, we must not look just to the electric lights, but rather the much larger picture of energetics. Energetics can well be worked into the V.A.T. based on real costs and real value. In terms of energetics which might be a second tax it would have to be graduated. Realists often speak of the dinosaurs and why they became extinct. Dinosaurs were too large and complex and had complicated systems. The nature of complexity is a precarious role in the basic theme of stability. It may well be that the ultimate system for allocation of resources, goods, materials etc. may be a form of energetic budgeting. Obviously there must be a great deal of study in the area which must start soon.

In terms of the sustainability the question of heat must also be raised. Man's energetics obviously fall under the laws of thermodynamics. All of what we do on this planet in terms of energy is either transformed into another form of energy, is dissipated in space or absorbed into the system as heat. This latter point is one for some concern. In much the same way as when one cuts down the trees at the headwaters of a stream and temperature increase below that point and the trout populations are affected we must look at the ecosystem as being somewhat downstream from the new energy inputs. As in the original point we are no longer protected.

The decisions about energy, energetics, heat, and the related decisions must come soon in order to deal with questions effectively for the ecosystem of the planet earth. Agriculture only should be looked at in the light of the other major variables. This is true of any of the variables. None of them exist in a vacuum. It is not often enough we ask how much fossil fuel does it take to grow a potato. I

Dear Sir:

It is unfortunate that Mr. Parker did not acquaint himself with the facts about the Vermont Public Interest Research Group (VPIRG) before writing his column of November 16.

VPIRG is an independent citizen action group initiated, funded and supervised by students from Castleton, Goddard, Johnson, Marlboro, as well as UVM. It has no affiliations whatsoever, with Ralph Nader or other state PIRG's. VPIRG is a state program which is concerned only with Vermont issues.

Nor were outside or out-of-state contacts involved in the petitioning process, as Mr. Parker contends. Furthermore, we believe it is an insult to UVM students to assume they did not know or care what they were signing at the time.

Refunds, as was publically announced, were available all day in the main lobby of Billings Center—Monday through Friday, the third full week of classes—and not in a far corner of an isolated building off campus.

Mr. Parker's allegation that students have no voice in VPIRG projects is blatantly false. Any individual paying the VPIRG fee has the right to suggest, approve, or discourage any and all local and statewide projects.

Mr. Parker also questions the necessity and validity of the food price survey. In view of the fact that at least eight hundred people requested the report, we feel its usefulness is self-evident, and in light of this large demand we contend that the cost of the survey (a full eight dollars—$8.00) was not exorbitant.

Annoyed At Cover

Dear Sirs:

I am writing to express my annoyance at the almost total lack of an accurate picture, that your paper has presented, of the S.A. Senate. In your article about last week's meeting, there is no insight given into the conditions under which the voting on Medical Aid to Indochina was conducted. Before any vote was conducted I made the point to the other senators that it did not matter how we voted since it was the referendum that would actually decide the fate of the proposal. It was clearly understood by all those voting that their vote could be nothing more than their own personal convictions since the matter was out of the senate's jurisdiction and was now up to the student body to decide. Your articles and editorials are completely devoid of any mention of this situation which, I believe, is vital. If students are to understand their S.A. Senate, furthermore there is no mention of any new proposals placed before the Senate during the meeting. A proposal on "defence" was presented to the senate, that if enacted, may be more far reaching and beneficial to the student body than any proposal in recent memory. But you insist on devoting 90% of your space to 10% of what goes on. Hopefully, in the future, you will choose to give the students of this university more than just the choice tid-bits that suit your purposes.

An Explanation Of VPIRG Program

Dear Sir:

It is unfortunate that Mr. Parker did not acquaint himself with the facts about the Vermont Public Interest Research Group (VPIRG) before writing his column of November 16.

VPIRG is an independent citizen action group initiated, funded and supervised by subscribers from Castleton, Goddard, Johnson, Marlboro, as well as UVM. It has no affiliations whatsoever with Ralph Nader or other state FIRC's. VPIRG is a state program which is concerned only with Vermont issues.

Nor were "outside" or out-of-state contacts involved in the petitioning process, as Mr. Parker contends. Furthermore, we believe it is an insult to UVM students to assume they did not know or care what they were signing at the time.

Refunds, as was publicly announced, were available all day in the main lobby of Billings Center—Monday through Friday, the third full week of classes—and not in a far corner of an isolated building off campus.

Students have no voice in VPIRG. The fee is blatantly false. Any individual paying the VPIRG fee has the right to suggest, approve, or disapprove any and all local and statewide projects.

Mr. Parker also questions the necessity and validity of the food price survey. In view of the fact that at least eight hundred people requested the report, we feel its usefulness is self-evident; and in light of this large demand we contend that the cost of the survey (a full eight dollars—$8.00) is not exorbitant.

Besides the food survey, other accomplishments VPIRG can cite include reports uncovering the conflicts of interest of members of the Blue Cross/Blue Shield Board and the Environmental Board, and released the indepth study of Warren, Vermont, concerning the economic effects of the ski industry. We have issued a strong statement on the public's "right to know" and attacked the Governor's attempt to exclude press and public from some official meetings, in addition to supporting the Federal Environmental Protection Agency's interpretation of a hearing on the "right to know" section of the Vermont Air Quality Plan.

When Senator Stafford reversed his crucial vote in a secret session of the Senate Public Works Committee defeating an attempt to open the Highway Trust fund to rail mass transit, VPIRG (together with Vermont Tomorrow) broke the news to Vermonters. VPIRG intervened as a party before the Public Service Board hearing on a rate increase requested by the Vermont Electric Corp., Inc., and reversed the legal action involved in the Burlington "jughandle" highway case. With other groups, VPIRG has been working for the protection of Spruce Mountain in Plainfield, Orange, and Groton, against strip mining; in addition, VPIRG sponsored a consumers' health conference in Montpelier less than a month ago which attracted hundreds of concerned Vermonters.

Already in progress is Citizens' Lobby. Its two-fold intent is to create a network of Vermonters who will contact their district representative and voice their opinions on the issues before the legislature, and to research in depth the impact some bills may have on Vermonters.

We hope the above examples demonstrate our commitment to Vermont students' interests in consumer and environmental protection, government and corporate responsibility, health delivery systems and so on. We repeat that VPIRG is funded and supervised by students, and we encourage your active participation at our Monday night meetings held in the lower lobby of the Billings Student Center at 7:00 pm. Furthermore, student trustees are available for your questions and suggestions: VPIRG Student trustees: Dick Couture 658-1942 Sue Irie 862-8418 Peter Cobb 863-3280 Sharon Frink 862-4306

'Aid' Would Help Thousands

Sirs:

The editorial that appeared in the Nov. 16 Cynic was most disturbing. It appears that the larger and more important issue of whether or not the University should be involved in sending Medical Aid to Indochina was circumvented by dwelling on the proper role of the Student Association. The charge that the SA overstepped its bounds by not being truly representative of the students of this University might be legitimate—that question will be resolved by the upcoming referendum. However, in that the constitutionality of the SA's actions are not of any real significance outside the UVM community, this letter must remain, in essence, an appeal to the sympathy of the student body. The statement that the appropriation of funds to Medical Aid to Indochina would be purely a humanitarian effort that fails to be educational, cultural or recreational is indicative of the largely egocentric and politically and socially isolated character of this University. The war in Vietnam has exerted a tremendous effect on the social, political and moral framework of this country. Students who are

Give America A Chance

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to an essay by William Bowman in the November 16, 1972 issue of the Vermont Cynic.

Yes, Mr. Bowman, from your essay it appears that America is in real trouble. It would appear, sir, that if the President of the greatest nation ever conceived on the face of this earth, the chosen leader by 61% of the vote of a population so diverse in so many ways, that one sometimes feels the love for our country is the only point in common; that if this man is the scandalist thief, the puppet of big business, and the power-seeking war maniac that you say he is, then sir, I grant you, America is in real trouble.

But, of course, Mr. Bowman, by the very nature of your affiliation with this weekly newspaper, a columnist, you have become a self-appointed expert with unmatched insight and firsthand knowledge of those acts of alleged scandal and thievery that you profess to know about. And yet sir, neither you, nor this country, will benefit from such demeaning and derogatory misconceptions that you write for thousands of columnists throughout this land write the same kind of negativist trash, that if it has had any effect at all, only tends to demean our country and its President. I grant you, however, that it is your right to do this and thousands of Americans have given their lives to assure you of this right. How you use or misuse it, is up to you.

Maybe, Mr. Bowman, this scandalist melting pot of a nation is just not the place for the "all-knowable" elite. Maybe you would be better off somewhere else.

But I for one, have not given up on this nation or its President. In fact, I wake up every morning, and thank God that our flag still waves and that I am in the land of the free; and I ask Him to give me the strength to make America just a little bit better today.

Mr. Bowman, I ask you and those who read and support your ideas, to give it a chance and to pledge yourself, as you did so many times in grade school, to our nation, America. Get behind America and as a goal, look for the day when America is truly at peace, when all men and women are truly equal, and the day when every American, with all his pride and prowess, proclaims his full support for America; its President, and its citizens.

Editor's Note: In our opinion, the vote of the Senate on Medical Aid to Indochina was more than a registering of the Senators' personal convictions. Senators are elected to vote on issues according to the wishes of their constituencies, not according to their individual sympathies and political persuasions. Every vote of the Senate is indicative, supposedly, of the students' wishes, although very often that is not the case.

Regarding our reporting of the Senate meeting. If we were to report a complete transcript of all the innuendo and worthless rubbish which has concerned the Senate in recent weeks, we would have no room left for anything else. If students wish to find out what exactly went on at a Senate meeting, they should consult their Senators, if they can find them. We print what seems to be the most important issue(s) of every meeting, on a basis of limited space.

Best Kind Of Learning: OVP

by James Anthony Pietrovito

Those of you familiar with the Billings Center are aware that I don't have a private stairway to my perch on the balcony. I have spent hours sitting there waiting for someone to come and talk with me however the vast majority of people coming up those stairs never make it to my desk. At the top of the stairs they turn to the right and enter the Office of Volunteer Programs. So I've decided to investigate OVP a little bit to see if I can draw some of its many customers.

Last week's Cynic is evidence that OVP is very alive and healthy. The more than two pages special sections provided an excellent description of programs and activities available under the auspices of OVP. As a matter of fact I left little for me say, however, I'll come up with something.

In surveying what I feel to be the main components of Student Activities at UVM, I find OVP to be unique among them. "OVP" is a partnership between the UVM administration and students. UVM provides space, staff and operating expenses for the office, administration services in funding, planning, publicity, accounting, etc. Students programming funds for student projects, transportation of volunteers, publicity materials, seed monies for projects, etc. via appropriations from SA. This puts OVP in a favorable light with the several constituencies of the university in that no one group is responsible for the entire program so that several share the good and the bad parts, success of the program and the cost of its operation. Also, among the several components of UVM's Student Activities, OVP is, I feel, potentially the most valuable co-curricular experience we have to offer. It seems to me that it covers every type of academic and extra-academic activity one might possibly think of. Plus the weight of planning and implementing are heavily laid upon the individual students.

The College of Education has given support to OVP by granting academic credit for those involved in the University Year for Action (UYA) and by providing other undergraduate credits to volunteers through its personal component course. The greatest support for OVP has come from the more than 1000 volunteers which make it the largest single activity group on campus. This is indicative of the trend on campuses nationwide. Volunteer programs are becoming widespread in higher and secondary education. They provide young people a more than cursory look at some of the many differences which exist in our pluralistic society.

These programs give the student a chance to apply his education to real life situations and perhaps most importantly they allow the student a chance to put them in proper perspective. Usually these other people are less fortunate than the volunteers, wither socio-economically or perhaps because of physical or mental handicaps. To them, the programs give them a chance to learn from other people what they might otherwise never experience.

OVP provides perhaps the best kind of learning situation. First of all it is a reciprocal situation the volunteer learns from those he is helping and working with while they learn from him and his skills. Second it is "real" learning; it can be applied to ones experience first hand and with viable results. Thirdly, the volunteer experiences commitment to something and to other people. Finally, it provides for a situation of caring, from person to person, plain and simple.

These decision, too, must come soon if we are to effectively deal with the questions at hand.

Lastly in the discussion is the social systems that will do all of this for us. First, there is no system that will do it for us. No system ever invented on the earth can effectively deal with what I am suggesting.

The basis of the social system shall be our two premises: creation and maintenance of a sustainable society and the creation and maintenance of a society that can have all humans develop to their fullness.

The social system for the first premise will have to be strong, in that, it will have major obstacles in the imposition of the new programs which will have to be by and of the people. It will also have to have in it all of what I have mentioned in the way of changes like the no growth concept. It shall also have to be less centralized to put the government back into the hands of the people. The only way for a government to be of the people is to have a much greater concentration back at the local level. Also in this is the concept of thinking small: small farms and small businesses or suppliers of necessary goods and services. It is also important that the change to a "new" system or the absorbing of new policies into a structure similar to the one we have, not be the crunch, that we have heard from groups like the MIT Associates or the Potomac Associates, have so clearly told us are on the way. If the crunch, if you will, is on the way and we only force it sooner because of our chagrin, then we have defeated the purpose of the attempt.

The second part of the social system must deal with our moral and ethical values. We cannot have as a basis to our morality, things. "Things" is materialism and it clearly leads to where we are. A change of emphasis towards health and education and well being for all men could certainly occupy our time and fulfill the vast majority of us. No I'm not saying to do away with "things" but rather not have them be the emphasis which they are so clearly today. Our outlook toward our fellow man anywhere on the earth is also one of the components of the change. We must realize that we really are brothers in the ecologic sense in that we are all in the same house. This may be the hardest part of all.

A final word about timing. If the crunch comes in the next ten to twenty or thirty years it will be impossible for us to change it. If that's the case we all might just as well pack up. In all likelihood it will be further away than that. The sooner we get to the decisions the more likely is the possibility that we can create our "new" society. Because of the nature of the effects of decisions like the ones I have been talking about it is mandatory to make some of these beginnings now.

Lane Committee Memberships Open: Advantages Are Many

The Lane Committee, which operates the Lane Series, is now conducting its annual recruiting campaign for new student members.

The Lane Committee is made up of seven voting members, six students and five faculty staff. The principal duties of the Committee are to select the artists for the series, to stage the attractions at Memorial Auditorium, and to set the policies by which the Series operates.

Meetings of the Committee are held every Thursday at 4:00 p.m. in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. The next meeting is this Thursday, November 30.

If you are interested in joining the Lane Committee, please come to this meeting, or leave your name and address at the Lane Office and notice of future meetings will be sent you.

All students are invited to join the Committee, but particularly freshmen and sophomores. No special ability is required, but interest in and knowledge of the performing arts—music, dance, and theatre—are desirable.

Advantages of being on the Committee include getting to know some of the outstanding members of the faculty staff at UVM such as Dr. Lidal, chairman of the music department; Prof. Feldner, professor of theatre; Mr. Lawrence Van Benthuyzen, director of public relations; and Mr. Charles Wolf, comptroller.

Committee members also get to hobnob with the visiting artists, often attending post-concert parties with them. And, of course, Committee members receive complimentary tickets to all the concerts.

Current student members of the Committee are the student chairman, Kevin Berry; Philip Grime, House Manager; Bruce Dettmer, production manager; Susan May, publicity director; Bekki Davis, secretary and assistant house manager; Philip Holloway, treasurer; Leslie Morrison, assistant house manager; Tom McCormick, assistant production manager; Jim Walton, assistant publicity director; and Ken Aiken, assistant treasurer.

Film Review: Streisand Brings Humor To 'Funny Girl'

by Jonathan Lief

The major problem in the movie "Funny Girl" is that it is a musical, and not even one of the dozen or so good musicals produced over the last two decades. Added to the well-known fact that musicals are very difficult to make into good movies, "Funny Girl" is half-defeated before it ever begins.

A weakness of both film and musical is that its characters are not developed to anything near their potential. Fanny Brice, the great vaudeville comedienne of the twenties and thirties, is presented simply as one-half of a love-story (the other half being the suave gambler Nick Arnstein). If an old vaudeville buff has gone to see his beloved Fanny on stage, he will be disappointed. Except for the first twenty minutes, there is no treatment of Fanny Brice's growth as an entertainer or her relationship with anyone but Arnstein, (Florenz Ziegfeld, her "boss," for example). Admittedly, this is a love-story, but even "Love-Story" had better "relationships" than his father for a side interest.

At least there is Barbara Streisand to improve the picture. Her dynamic ability to sweep everything else along with her is enough reason to see the movie. When her role requires her to be unhappy or tragic, as at the end, she overdoes it. She makes up for it, however, by bringing to the film its only good and original humor.

Aside from looking the part, Omar Sharif adds nothing to the already shallow role of Nick Arnstein. This may be partly director William Wyler's fault for not extracting Sharif's obvious acting ability. (as Dr. Zhivago, he was excellent). For a good two-thirds of the film he plays little more than a smilingly sophisticated ladies man, mysteriously drawn to ugly-duckling Fanny Brice. Then the movie, without warning, suddenly becomes a tear-jerker when Arnstein loses money gambling and resents Fanny (now his wife) and her success. In love one day, asking for divorce the next!

Kay Medford plays Fanny's mother, just another stereotyped Jewish mother, with all the accompanying predictable dry wit. When will someone create a believable Jewish mother?

I must admit ignorance about directing, but Wyler's seems sufficient here. "Funny Girl" doesn't need brilliant directing; it needs better characterization and better acting. The final shot of Streisand on stage is, however, wonderfully imaginative.

The Julie Styne-Bob Merrill music and lyrics range from the great "People (Who Need People)" to the exuberant "Don't Rain on My Parade" to the idiotic "You are Woman, I am Man" (sung by Sharif in a man-eat-man with an Egyptian accent). The rest of the songs are not especially memorable, but Streisand's singing makes up for them. Her style does not really appeal to me, but her artistry certainly cannot be questioned, or its ability to strengthen an otherwise weak movie.

Streisand has been called one of the finest movie comedienne since the forties; I agree. For her performance, and only her performance, I recommend "Funny Girl".

'Right You Are' Premier Tomorrow At Arena

Luigi Pirandello's Right You Are If You Think You Are will be presented at the University of Vermont's Arena Theatre on December 1 through December 3. A parable in three acts, Pirandello's comedy presents the audience with a confusing situation and a great philosophical question. Pirandello, probably best known for his play Six Characters in Search of an Author, is one of the most widely translated and most popular Italian writers since Goldoni. In Right You Are If You Think You Are he uses comedy and suspense to point out the fine distinction between illusion and reality. Directed by Christopher Lane, the cast includes: Ed Chemaly, Teresa Elwert, Mark Camella, James Wimsatt, Barb Gratz, Susan Kovarick, Jennifer Allen, Robert Miller, John Falconi, Eric Raymond, Jean Embree, Susan Selig, and Paul Rivenberg. The box office is open daily from 10 AM to 4 PM. Tickets cost $1.00 with UVM ID's, and $2.00 without.

Holmes Film Combines Two Entertaining Plots

by Margo Howland

Holmes est mort! Vive le Holmes!

I don't know about Holmes, but this film comes fairly close at time to being mort. But then, Sherlock Holmes and the Spider Woman seems to perk up and revive itself at critical points. The Rialto reviews called it "not particularly exciting." It was exciting enough.

The lighting techniques were unusually good, and the viewer's attention was at once captured by a most sudden rash of "pyjama suicides"—people jumping out of upper story windows for no discernable reason whatever!

What excitement there was, however, was marred by a somewhat lagging pace and an overabundance of corniness. The film, based on no particular Doyle chronicle but with flavors of "The Final Problem" and "The Adventure of the Devil's Foot" thrown in, is entertaining, if somewhat peculiar.

In the midst of all this furor, we find Holmes and Watson blithely fishing in Scotland. Holmes has told Watson he is not feeling well, he feels a cerebral hemorrhage coming on, and he may just retire from crime altogether! Watson cannot resist sneaking a look at the London paper he has brought with him but Holmes apparently has no plans to devote his vacation to anything but fishing. This of course is a signal to the Doyle reader that Holmes is not only interested, but will resort to rather drastic plans in his search for the cause of the crimes.

Indeed, Holmes' next action is to disappear effectively from the scene—by drowning! Watson here appears more than ever the loyal colleague, always trying to be more like Holmes; always being left in the dark. Somehow he is a more-to-be admired character on Baker Street.

Inspector Lestrade of Scotland Yard. Lestrade's know-it-all attitude is too irritating: Watson is one of us. Holmes of course reappears again, testing theory after theory (and he must be pardoned for his nineteenth-century, chauvinistic Victorian comparison of women with cats) and almost becomes the next pyjama victim in a chilling sequence. The villainess is routed out—a charming lady with a weird-o little kid named Larry who has a penchant for jumping up and down and catching blue-bottle flies—not to mention tossing around deadly candy-bar wrappers.

Of course Basil Rathbone makes the cerebral, logical Holmes come alive for us once again, and Nigel Bruce (in my opinion) is again the warm, human, much-abused Watson, in two very decent performances. Often the actors make up for what sparkle may be lacking in the plot. It is difficult to say just what would have to be added (or taken away) to make this "all-right" movie a really great movie. I liked it but I can see that it didn't really measure up. The ending with the carnival bears a resemblance to the old Superman movies and could have come across with its message better in a different setting.

One final word—these movies, good, bad and indifferent—have been worth seeing—and will continue to be so—as long as the spirit of Holmes and Watson can come alive on the screen. When they cannot, there are always the books.

And as long as there are the books and people to read them, then Sherlock Holmes and Doctor Watson are with us, tracking down criminals from their dwellings on Baker Street.

Solti Conducts In Third

The final Lane concert of this semester will be the prestigious Chicago Symphony Orchestra, performing on Thursday, December 7, at 8:30 p.m., in Memorial Auditorium. Conducted by its music director, Sir Georg Solti, whom New Yorker characterized as "none greater at this moment in history," the Chicago will be making its third appearance on the Lane Series.

A limited number of tickets are available at $3.75 and $5.25, obtainable in the Lane Office. 234 Waterman. Reservations may be made by telephoning the office at 656-3418.

Thursday night's program will be Weber's Overture to "Oberon," Stravinsky's Jeu de Cartes, and R. Strauss' Tone Poem, Ein Heldenleben.

Chief critic Harold C. Schonberg of the New York Times (April 21, 1972) wrote of this orchestra and its conductor as follows: "Solti is in the happy position these days of being untouchable. Solti Conducts Chicago Symphony In Third Lane Appearance

During the 1955-1959 season, Fritz Reiner was the conductor of the Chicago at its Lane Concert, and in 1964-1965 Jean Martinon conducted in Burlington.

Born in 1912 in Budapest, Hungary, Sir Georg Solti studied with Bela Bartok, Ernst von Dohnanyi and Zoltan Kodaly. Early in his career he was a conductor of the Budapest Opera and assistant to Arturo Toscanini at the Salzburg Festival.

The American military government of Bavaria in 1946, invited Mr. Solti to conduct a performance of Beethoven's Fidelio in Munich. The success resulted in Mr. Solti's appointment as Music Director of the Bavarian State Opera. He also conducted performances at the Salzburg Festival and traveled extensively, making appearances as a guest conductor in Vienna, Berlin, Paris, Rome, Florence and Buenos Aires.

He made his United States debut with the San Francisco Opera during the 1953-1954 season, and first conducted the Chicago Symphony at the 1954 Ravinia Festival. In the United States he also has conducted the orchestras of New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Dallas, and Los Angeles.

He has conducted frequently at New York's Metropolitan Opera, where in 1964 he led two performances of Verdi's Requiem in memory of President John F. Kennedy. Shortly after his debut in 1959 at Covent Garden, Mr. Solti was named Director of the Royal Opera House.

Recently Mr. Solti was named a Commander of the Order of the British Empire by Queen Elizabeth, an honor seldom extended to non-British subjects.

For his recordings he has received the French Prix du Disque six times. His most celebrated recording achievement is the entire Ring cycle, which took seven years to complete. Mr. Solti conducted the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra for the series on the Decca label.

The final Lane concert of this semester will be the prestigious Chicago Symphony Orchestra performing on Thursday, December 7, at 8:30 p.m., in Memorial Auditorium. Conducted by its music director, Sir Georg Solti, whom critic Winthrop Sargeant of the New Yorker characterized as "none greater at this moment in history," the Chicago will be making its third appearance on the Lane Series.

A limited number of tickets are available at $3.75 and $5.25, obtainable in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. Reservations may be made by telephoning the office at 656-3418.

Thursday night's program will be Weber's Overture to "Oberon," Stravinsky's Jeu de Cartes, and R. Strauss' Tone Poem, Ein Heldenleben. Chief critic Harold C. Schonberg of the New York Times (April 21, 1972) wrote of this orchestra and its conductor as follows: "Solti is in the happy position these days of being untouchable. It is unanimously agreed that he has brought the Chicago Symphony to a state of perfection matched in orchestra annals only by the great days of Szell and the Cleveland Orchestra. It is also unanimously agreed that Solti has developed into the complete conductor, as much at home with the dodecaphony of Schoenberg as he is with the inner fires of Mozart.

"Of his (Solti's) stature there can be little argument. He is a musician of remarkable projection—one with a powerful personality, an infallible ear and the authentic big line."

Final Holmes Thriller This Friday

The final Sherlock Holmes film, "The Scarlet Claw," will be shown tomorrow night (Friday, December 1) at two showings, 8:00 p.m. and 9:30 p.m., in Marsh Life Sciences Building, Auditorium, under the auspices of the Lane Series. Tickets, $1.00 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door. Reservations may be made by telephoning the Lane Office at 656-3418.

"The Scarlet Claw," with a screenplay by Roy William

Neill in collaboration with Edmund L. Hartman, is based on an original story by Paul Gangelin and Brenda Weisberg. Neill also directed. Special effects are by John P. Fulton, who worked on most of the Universal horror classics of the 'thirties and 'forties.

Starring Basil Rathbone as Sherlock Holmes and Nigel Bruce as Dr. Watson, the film has its opening scene set in the fog-drenched marshes of La Morte Rouge, Canada, where a series of grisly murders takes place, with the victims' throats torn out.

The imaginative direction of Roy William Neill is shown to superlative effect, especially in the sequence where the fiend, disguised as a maid, Nora, moves stealthily through the shadows toward his unsuspecting wheelchair victim.

'Why Dontcha' Fulfills Group's Potential

by Doug Collette

West, Bruce and Laing
Columbia/Warner Bros. 31929

Any band such as this one is an easy target for comparisons not only to the respective members' previous groups, but to groups of similar concept as well. Even though such comparisons are usually unfair because the new group isn't given ample credit for being something new, this sort of analysis can still be useful in trying to see how the musicians will utilize that previous.

The first band that comes to mind in any discussion of "heavy" bands is Cream who served as a prototype for Led Zeppelin, Mountain, Grand Funk and many others. Their fatal flaw was that Clapton, Bruce, and Baker were too interested in themselves as individuals to be able to work together as a single unit; even their most sophisticated album, Wheels of Fire, sounds somewhat disjointed as if it were an effort of supreme will power for each of the three to subdue their personal musical desires for the sake of the band.

West, Bruce, and Laing don't fall prey to this at all. Why

Dontcha can be seen as an extension of the directions into which Cream first ventured on the studio portion of Wheels of Fire, but the crucial difference here is that Leslie, Jack and Corky are more sensitive to each other as partners in a cooperative effort, able to compromise willingly, offering their particular talents to make music of a band not as a solo with two sidemen.

The furor of publicity that greeted this new alliance harkens back to the days of Blind Faith whose career was prematurely coopted and its artistic identity nearly completely destroyed by commercialism and hype. They were rushed to produce an LP and the result was a haphazard album which bore some resemblance to Cream and Traffic, but which lacked a central synthesis from which the four musicians could create something uniquely their own.

West, Bruce, and Laing must surely have taken a lesson from that ill-fated extravaganza for

Why Dontcha never bogged down into excesses of any sort. Even five minutes of slow blues isn't as bad as you might imagine. West's rocketing guitar conclusion would have put "Third Degree" on par with the rest of the album if it had served as a break in the middle of the cut instead of being tacked on at the end for all too short a time. Still, it never reaches the nadir of "Do What You Like."

These three are craftsmen as well as fine artists and the thought and care they put into their album is evident, particularly in the variety of the cuts. "Out Into The Fields" and "Pollution Woman" display those extraordinarily beautiful and unorthodox progressions characteristic of Jack Bruce's songs: a self-consciousness—Bruce's cascading piano imparts just the proper delicacy of self-consciousness—Bruce's cascading piano imparts just the proper delicacy in contrast to the sharpness of West's gruff vocal and "Turn Me Over" sung by Corky is a jumpy number which, like most of the group's major songs, is thoroughly enjoyable nevertheless.

But it's when West, Bruce, and Laing rock that the big surprise arrives: instead of the heavy-handed plodding of most bands of this type, they play aggressively and energetically. West's guitar owes more to Townshend and Richard than Clapton or Page and he makes more imaginative use of doubletracked guitars than either of the latter. Bruce's fast-fingered bass gives the music fluidity even on a simple riff song like "Love Is Worth The Blues" the only composition of its type on the record. The title track, and "The Doctor" bear some resemblance to the Who, but West, Bruce, and Laing are more straightforward, having little of the majesty of the English band.

Perhaps the most satisfying aspect of the album lies in its unpretentiousness; the three did not set out to make the moment it is put up, the area will have changed. We will see what is and what was. In fact because of the variations of light, it is changing while we look at it illustrating an important factor in time, light. In addition the interaction of time and place though weather is emphasized by leaving the images to the weather. We not only see the changes that occur to the reality due to weather, but also the changes that happen to the image itself. Finally, the still human figures captured in the images have now disappeared showing our own transience.

"What was the aim of this project?"

First of all, to create other projects, other ideas. Oatmeal is not a total action in any sense, but a catalyst.

Secondly that we will see more of what we are looking at and look at more of what we are seeing. This very basic visual awareness might increase our consciousness of the community in which we live.

It could be said to lead to a discovery of where and when we are... which is really fundamental when we begin to think about it.

for the debt, but a granting of an appeal by the traffic board would be a voiding of the ticket fine. The amendment was passed by a division of the house vote; the motion was amended was passed with no further debate in a thirty to four vote.

However the major debate concerning the jurisdiction of the Senate came under a discussion of a proposed motion that asked the Senate "to support and endorse the strike and demonstration of November 29 by (five construction unions) against Pizzigalli (and four other construction companies)." President William Sisco made an appeal to the Senate that they not set themselves up as "self-appointed experts" to deal with a situation that they did not have first-hand knowledge of before hearing both sides of the issue. Senator Richard Cassidy commented that even though he personally intended to support the demonstration he did not think that endorsement of the strike by the Senate was the "jurisdiction of the Senate" and made an objection to the consideration of the motion. The objection was overruled by the Senate. At this point, many of the Senators who felt that the Senate should not consider this matter walked out and quorum was called. Having no quorum the meeting was adjourned.

In other business that was considered before adjournment a motion was passed that called for a referendum be held during the March presidential election asking the students "as to whether the ROTC program may remain on campus as it now stands."

Among the several thousand colleges and universities to attract funds from the US Dept. of Health, Education, and Welfare during fiscal year 1971, the University of Vermont ranked near the top in the amount of support received, according to an HEW report.

Colonel Haponski's View Of ROTC's Role Now And In The Future

Sciences College on this question. Let me just sketch for you the situation regarding credit in the university as a whole. All colleges, except Arts and Sciences, allow credit for at least some of our courses. For example the Agricultural College allows full credit. Certain colleges like Education because of their two-year programs allow only partial credit. The College of Technology voted last year to restore credit for the first two years of our program. This is on a tentative basis which will be reviewed this year. So, the College of Arts and Sciences with the exception of crediting the one college of Business for us, that is History 101, U. S. Military History, does not allow any credit for Military Studies courses. Q. How do you think the institution of an all-volunteer army will effect the ROTC program in the future? A. First of all let me comment on the all-volunteer army in its broadest aspects. I am one of the ones that are probably in a very small minority that feels that the volunteer army is less than Utopia. We are departing very much from the standard tradition of the citizen-soldier concept. I am just afraid that in the next few years this country will have some serious misgivings about the volunteer army concept and will perhaps reverse this trend.

...in an all volunteer army we have increased the risks of narrow-minded professionalism beyond those that currently exist to a large degree. I just don't think that the country wants this kind of risk to increase. Secondly, just in terms of cost the volunteer army is going to be a very expensive thing economically. Congress is just beginning to awaken to how expensive it is and will continue to be. As we go down in numbers within the army, as we withdraw from Vietnam, the Congressmen have discovered that in fact the military costs are mounting instead of declining. They should have realized that this was going to happen all along. If we are to "buy" soldiers, if we are to pay them competitive wages with industry, then we are going to have to expect that it is going to be a very expensive program. So, for these reasons, philosophically we have departed from the long standing citizen-soldier tradition, and economically the program is becoming very expensive. I feel that there is some to be a serious and profound reassessment of the trend of the volunteer army.

Specifically regarding your question as to how it is going to affect ROTC, in the short range it is going to be one of those factors that will decrease the enrollment. I think that ROTC's enrollment is still going to go lower, however I do foresee that next year or the year after that, that given the draft and the volunteer army that we will see a discounted by the last four years of withdrawal.

Q. Do you foresee in the future, particularly at UVM, that women students will be admitted to ROTC? A. Women in ROTC is one of the newest things in the Army, in fact the Air Force has had women in Air Force ROTC for some time now. It had to come, it should have come earlier; I am all for it, as a matter of fact, I have requested that UVM be one of the schools that is allowed to enroll women, that is grant them full enrollment status in ROTC not just to let them take the courses as it is now. I think the next step would be within the next five years.

Q. How will the withdrawal of ground troops from Vietnam, particularly with a peace treaty under consideration, affect the students entering ROTC? A. I think the withdrawal has been anticipated, and in fact it has been carried since 1968 across the last four years, so that it is not a question of kind but of degree. We are withdrawing, we have been withdrawing, some people of this country have realized that the trend has been down in terms of ground commitment in Southeast Asia. The question as to whether there will be any dramatic impact will be minor that it will not be dramatic, that it will be largely discounted by the last four years of withdrawal.

Q. Do you foresee in the future, particularly at UVM, that women students will be admitted to ROTC? A. Women in ROTC is one of the newest things in the Army, in fact the Air Force has had women in Air Force ROTC for some time now. It had to come, it should have come earlier; I am all for it, as a matter of fact, I have requested that UVM be one of the schools that is allowed to enroll women, that is grant them full enrollment status in ROTC not just to let them take the courses as it is now. I think the next step would be within the next five years.

QUESTION: My wife and I like to do not quite sure what our two year old child. Particularly, I wonder if it might be attitude toward us is the grown older.

ANSWER: Ideally, children should grow up feeling unembarrassed and people's bodies and how they function depends upon attitudes which are instilled rather early age. With nudity and sex in our society, parents are often in a quandary. Fairly negative attitudes toward the child, by using highly artificial means, undressed in front of the child or, by guilty or uncomfortable for the observer.

A common sense approach to question, and one need not invoke fancy psychology to decide what to do. The parents have provided the child with some guidelines outside of the family setting where exposure and privacy are acceptable. A child who is both parent and undressed until the child reaches an age indicate some appreciation of privacy, usually in the pre-school or beginning of such a point onward, it becomes more the child understand that parents, a privacy, especially the parent of the child can learn standards of personal behavior presented by the parent of the same recognize the child who is having difficulty by his or her excessive inquisitiveness which can mirror parent's.

In the above framework, sleeping in more different for your child than seen in other contexts. You will have questions as to whether or not the curiosity on the part of the child causes you any discomfort. The likelihood your child is a little older, if you could you would at least have some policy with regard to your bedroom. Your child has its own room and is not your bed with you.

QUESTION: What is the cause of pain in the chest area and what are they? Does eating cause them? How can they be prevented to make them go away when you do more frequently in men or women as predictors of a heart attack or other disease.

ANSWER: Sharp stabbing pains, mild sensation of feeling the heart beat or palpitations localized to the left side of the chest, common. Such pains may occur while following exercise or during exertion characterized by a change in the nature of body position. These pains, the pains associated with heart disease more deep in the chest, have a vice-like often spread down the left arm or side. The type of pain associated with heart disease occurs with strenuous activity but ceases; they are more common in color for no reason and are quite persistent.

Young people quite commonly have these are of no significance. Often, attention to the pain if they have a history of heart attacks or had experienced member have a heart attack. I have concerns about such pains than I have this is due to the greater preoccupation disease since it affects them more often. Sharp chest pains in young people have predictors of future heart attacks. When first time in older people, they should be out by a physician, however.

The cause of such pains are not increased gaseousness from eating certain air can produce them; anxiety certainly worse, and reassurance seems to make them go away.

What's The Underground?

It's a store. Actually, it's a store within a store.

The Underground is the name of a department at the Mayfair that caters to the taste and style of young women.

Some have thought that it was named after "the movement" or the alternate life style. Such was not the case. What we had in mind was the London subway or, as it is generally called, "the underground". In the Mayfair district of London there is a subway stop called—appropriately—Mayfair.

By chance we came across the London subway sign and hung it over the stairway leading down into our basement shop. Ergo, the Underground.

We invite you to visit our underground and see what we have in the line of clothes for the young woman. We have pants, tops, shirts and a whole variety of clothes that we think will please you enormously.

Come in and browse. Buy only if you wish... only if you are pleased with what you see.

Q. Do you foresee in the future, particularly at UVM, that women students will be admitted to ROTC?

A. Women in ROTC is one of the newest things in the Army, in fact the Air Force has had women in Air Force ROTC for some time now. If had to come, it should have come earlier; I am all for it, as a matter of fact, I have requested that UVM be one of the schools that is allowed to have ROTC.

Withdrawing has been a problem since 1968, and in fact it has been a problem for four years. We are now in a position where we have been able to get some people who have realized that it will not be a problem for them. YOU'RE HAVING MORE THAN ONE

by Arnold Varner M.D.

QUESTION: My wife and I like to sleep in the nude. I am not quite sure what our two year old daughter thinks about this. Particularly, I wonder if it might arouse her or affect her attitude toward us as she grows older.

ANSWER: Ideally, children should have an opportunity to grow up feeling unembarrassed and knowledgeable about people's bodies and how they function. So much of this depends upon attitudes which are instilled in the child at a rather early age. With nudity and sex being as linked as they are in our society, parents are often confused as to how to handle being undressed in front of their children. A child's inquiries often leads to further embarrassment on the part of the parents. Fairly negative attitudes can be fostered in a child by using highly artificial means to avoid appearing undressed in front of the child or, by making the child feel guilty or uncomfortable for the observations it makes.

A common sense approach to questions of nudity works fine, and one need not invoke fancy psychological theories to decide what to do. The parents have a responsibility to provide the child with some guidelines that will be applicable outside of the family setting where different amounts of exposure and privacy are acceptable. It becomes perfectly sensible that a child sees both parents in various stages of undress until the child reaches an age where it begins to indicate some appreciation of privacy for itself. This is usually in the pre-school or beginning school age child. From such a point onward, it becomes more appropriate to help the child understand that parents, enjoy some degree of privacy, especially the parent of the opposite sex. The child can learn standards of personal behavior based on the role presented by the parent of the same sex. One can often present the child with a having difficulty with matters of undress by his or her excessive preoccupation and inquisitiveness which can mirror parent's uncertainties.

In the above framework, sleeping in the nude may be no more different for your child than seeing you appear in the nude in other contexts. You will still have to answer questions as to whether or not this provokes excessive curiosity on the part of the child and whether or not it causes you any discomfort. The likelihood is that by the time your child is a little older, if you continue to sleep in the nude you would at least have something of a closed door policy with regard to your bedroom. I have assumed that your child has its own room and is not in the habit of sharing your bed with you.

QUESTION: What is the cause of pains in the chest or heart area and what are they? Does eating certain types of food cause them? How can they be prevented and what can you do to make them go away when you do get them? Do they occur more frequently in men or women and are they in any way predictors of a heart attack or other serious condition?

ANSWER: Sharp stabbing pains, mild twinges or sharp pains, a sensation of feeling the heart beat or pound and other assorted phenomena localized to the left side of the chest are rather common. Such pains may occur while sitting, after eating, following exercise or during exercise. They are often characterized by a change in the nature of the pain with a change of body position. These pains are much different than the pains associated with heart disease which feel as if they are more deep in the chest, have a vice-like or crushing quality and often spread down the left arm or straight through the back. The type of pain associated with heart disease very often occurs with strenuous activity but ceases when the activity ceases; they are more common in cold weather, or they start for no reason and are quite persistent.

Young people quite commonly have pains in the chest and these are of no significance. Often, such people pay more attention to the pains if they have heard stories of people dying of heart attacks or had experience of having a family member have a heart attack. I have seen more men with concerns about such pains than I have women, and I suspect this is due to the greater preoccupation men have with heart disease since it affects them more often than it affects women. Sharp chest pains in young people have not been shown to be predictors of future heart attacks. When they do occur for the first time in older people, they should be immediately checked out by a physician, however.

The cause of such pains are not known. It may be that increased gasconness from eating certain foods or swallowing air can produce some anxiety certainly seems to make them worse, and reassurance seems to make them better.

QUESTION: Ever since our marriage, over two years ago, my husband has complained of an irritation around the anus. He itches constantly. I believe he has worms, but when he went to the doctor to see if he had worms, the doctor laughed him right out of the office. I keep trying to get him to go to another doctor but he is too embarrassed from the first experience. He only has time to take two showers a week but he wipes well after each bowel movement. Do you have any idea what the problem can be? He is getting desperate because he scratches himself raw.

ANSWER: An itchy anus can be caused by many things. There are certain parasites pinworms, for instance, that cause very severe itching and if you have pets or if your husband has contact with other animals, it is certainly a worthwhile thing to consider. Rather than have laughed him out of his office, the doctor should have obtained a stool specimen for parasites and their products and checked the anal area for the presence of the eggs of parasites that cause itching. Children not infrequently pick up pinworms from pets and pediatricians are very skillful at making such a diagnosis. But, pinworms are easily transmissible, and I'd expect that you would have a sore bottom, too.

However, there are other causes of bad anal itching. Sometimes it is a case of simple anxiety but at other times it may be the result of a residue of soap left in the area, especially if he takes hasty showers and doesn't rinse off completely. If he is wiping himself especially vigorously after each bowel movement he could be causing irritation. Two showers a week is just about enough to keep clean in cool weather, so it would be hard to invoke the usual matter of personal hygiene unless he sweats quite profusely or there are some other unusual circumstances. In any case, most situations of rectal itching can be defined and treated rather easily by most physicians who are willing to look rather than laugh.

Art Education Majors & Minors

There will be a very important meeting Wednesday, December 6th for all art education majors, minors and anyone else considering the program. Attendance is mandatory. If you are unable to attend the meeting please notify Betsy Sherman at extension 2014. The purpose of the meeting is to discuss program in general and proposed changes.

The location of the meeting is 2nd floor Wm. Science Hall.

Federal Civil Service Opportunities

Are you still wondering what to do after graduation? Do you still need ideas about what vocational options are available for people with your major? You might investigate what Federal Civil Service opportunities are available that may interest you.

On Tuesday, December 5, 1972 the University of Vermont will host A Federal Career Day in the North Lounge in Billings Center from 9:00 A.M. until 4:00 P.M. Federal representatives from a variety of fields such as: Department of Housing and Urban Development; ACTION; Postal Inspection; National Banking; Internal Revenue Service; Small Business Administration; Forest Service; and many others will be on hand to provide information and literature about their programs and recruiting needs.

Students from the following schools have also been invited to attend: St. Michael's College; Champlain College; Johnson State College; and Lyndon State College.

Students from all majors are encouraged to participate in this event. Stop by the exhibits and displays at anytime to talk informally with the representatives concerning your field of interest.

If you would like more information about the programs, please call the Placement Office, University of Vermont at 656-3450.

Nationwide Demand For Engineers Developing

A nationwide demand for engineers is developing. It will provide many opportunities for young men and women who have not yet begun their engineering education.

This is the estimate of Acting Dean Joseph A. Izzo of the University of Vermont College of Technology.

"For this reason, high school students who plan to go on to college should take a long look at the opportunities offered in engineering," he advised. "Stores of engineers taking jobs taking leaves have frightened many prospective engineers away from the profession. As a result we are training fewer engineers nationally at a time when we should be preparing for a greater demand in the future."

A study of national trends has led Dr. Izzo to these conclusions:

1. A brighter economic picture nationally has led many firms to rebuild their engineering staffs.
2. Basic national problems—a dirty environment, growing use of power, needs for improved airports, hospitals and other services—are creating demands for more engineers.
3. The arithmetic of the future—the U.S. Labor Department and the Engineering Joint Council say at least 48,000 engineering graduates will be needed each year for the remainder of this decade. Last spring only 43,000 received degrees, and drops in enrollment indicate a further decline in graduates. Indications are the total number of graduates may drop to 32,000 by 1975.

4. There is still unemployment among engineers—but it is 3 per cent of the engineer labor force, half the percentage for national unemployment. Reluctance of engineers to move to areas where there are jobs is one reason for the unemployment. Another is that many of the unemployed engineers are trained and experienced—in narrow specialties for which there is no demand, and find it difficult to transfer to other engineering positions.

The University of Vermont, offering four engineering programs, has seen enrollment remain steady this year in civil engineering. Its graduates move into such areas as urban planning and water and air pollution control. The enrollment has dropped in both mechanical engineering and manufacturing and management, and the sharpest drop is in electrical engineering, with an entering class of 17 where there was space for 40 entering students.

"If we are to meet the future demand for engineers, we must act now to increase this enrollment," said Dr. Izzo. "We believe we have one answer."

In the past too many students have enrolled in engineering, then become discouraged and dropped out or transferred because of the heavy load of mathematics, physics and chemistry given them their freshman year.

"This happened before they had had any engineering, or any feel of what engineering would be like," explained Dr. Izzo. That load has been reduced.

This year, to avoid the drop-outs and to encourage others in college to move into engineering, an Engineering I course was developed and is being offered for the first time. It introduces a student to all aspects of engineering through direct exposure to engineering.

Previously it has been difficult for students to change from, as an example, mechanical to electrical engineering. But no longer.

"That decision can now be made at the end of the first year of study," said Dr. Izzo.

THE INSIDER

by Eli Tubbs

As we rode home from the North Country Hockey Tournament in Canton, New York, we had plenty of time to ponder what had happened during the past three days. We had indeed crushed two fairly well regarded Division I teams, and lost to an above average Division I team. But more importantly we, as a team, assembled ourselves into a unit which acted as one. We learned a lot about each other.

Coach Cross may accept a berth on the U.S. Chess Team. His devastating development of his attack annihilated this writer quite handily. Larry Snow and John Kiely may soon be auditioning for led Mack. They put on an exciting singing performance from the depths of the bus. Their repertoire included such great hits as "Yellow Submarine" and "A Taste of Honey." Jocko Clifford's impersonations were well received by all of us, and Rick Burns' dog calls got top billing our version of the Talent Roundup.

All kidding aside, we did come out of the tournament with some very valuable experience. Steve Eckerson's pressure goal tending eased us out of trouble numerous times. Our defensive ranks were solid. Very few attackers broke through to our net. Our centermen held the lines together very skillfully. Patty Wright's constant hustle, Willie MacKinnon's tenacious forechecking, and Tim O'Connell's adept stick handling all contributed to the winning effort. Between them they set up numerous goals.

A word must be said about the Black Aces, the fourth line (whose membership has not yet been clarified.) The "glue-like" aggressiveness of Private P. Watts was a treat to behold, and we were sorry to see Rick Burns lost to us, but he will be back.

All in all, the trip was a success, and we were all looking forward to Massachusetts this Saturday at 7:30.

Stunt Competition Results

by Joan Mollica

UVM hosted the thirteen teams that participated in the stunt competition in the Eastern Intercollegiate Synchronized Swim Conference (E.I.S.S.C.). The final team standings saw Vermont with three points in a tie for eighth place with SUNY at Geneseo. SUNY at Albany placed first with 16.5 points, next came UNH with 12 points and third was U. of Maryland with 10 points. Other schools in the competition included Brandeis Univ., Mt. Holyoke, Hunter College, Cornell, Skidmore, SUNY at Cortland, and SUNY at Stony Brook.

Stunt competition is open to both men and women and is divided into three levels of competition: beginner, intermediate, and advanced. Each competitor performs three compulsory stunts and two optional stunts before two different panels of five judges. Each competitor receives scores for each of the compulsory and each of the optional stunts.

There were forty-seven beginner competitors. Paula Morton from SUNY at Albany took first place with a total of 13.8 points. Gail Bigwood was UVM's top scorer with 13.08 points which gave her 5th place. Other Vermont scorers were Patricia Hayes, 12th place with 12.53 points; Joanne Schumann, 14th place, 12.52 points; Merrill Dickinson, 15th place, 12.51 points; Vicki True, 25th, 11.16 points; Bernard Reynolds 27th place with 10.80 points and Karen Krieger in 43rd place with 9.76 points.

The intermediate division had forty-two competitors and four UVM swimmers placed. Kathryn Hall of UNH won with 18.9 points. Vermont's competitors included Roanne Kellner in 23rd place with 15.4 points; Lawrence Westover in 24th place with 15.3 points; Linda Liston in 31st place with 14.5 points and Paula Yankauskas in 34th place with 14.1 points.

The third division, advanced, had twenty competitors and was won by Janice Koblosk of Cortland State with 24.5 points. In 7th place for Vermont was Kathy O'Keeffe with 21.56 points. Next for Vermont came Patricia Sauer in 10th place with 19.87 points. Cindy Matheson finished 14th for UVM and tallied 18.13 points.

The next competition for the synchronized swim team will be next semester at UNH on March 17th and 18th. It will be an E.I.S.S.C. Routine Competition.

THE BASKETBALL INSIDER

by Mike Brown

For some guys the game of basketball has become a way of life. A way of living each day and planning for the next. All else is secondary to these fellows because its basketball which they eat, talk, and sleep.

As a coach this is one of the first things you can tell about a ballplayer, how much he loves the game. UVM is blessed with Bernard Palmer and as one of his coaches its quite evident to me that he loves basketball. Naturally he does, it has become a way of life for him. Bernie hails from New York

Hockey Tickets Are Available

The University of Vermont's first home game of the hockey season is this Saturday against the University of Massachusetts at Gutterson Field House. Coach Jim Cross has announced the following policy for the sale of tickets for all home games:

There will be 2000 seats available. Tickets will be sold on the day of the game at the UVM Bookstore and Gutterson Field House. If the game takes place on a Saturday tickets will be on sale Friday at the same locations plus 9 to 12 am Saturday. Cross, in announcing this, emphasized that there will always be close to 2000 seats, despite rumors that anyone without a ticketbook would be unable to see the Catamounts in action.

Swim Season Opens

The University of Vermont swim team — undefeated in dual competition last year — hopes to continue that unblemished record as they prepare for Colby College, Saturday (Dec. 2), at Waterville, Me., beginning at 2 p.m.

Les Leggett will return a veteran squad, minus its captain, Bruce Willard, for the meet with the Colby Mules.

Some of the top veterans returning from last year include John Ackerson, a breaststroke and freestyle specialist; Fred Alexy, freestyle; Dana Lawrence, individual medley and freestyle; Roger Pelli, breaststroke; George Potekhen, breaststroke and freestyle and divers Bob Noid, Doug Picke, Bob Wood and Gary Slahor.

Following the opening meet at Colby, the AquaCats will host two consecutive home meets before the first semester ends. Plattsburgh State moves in Dec. 9 (2 p.m.) followed by the University of Maine, Dec. 16 (1:30 p.m.).

City. "The Basketball Capital of the World," and for as far back as he can remember he has been "playing the pill" (city talk for playing basketball). Winter, spring, summer or fall, rain or shine, in doors or out, half-court or full.

Basketball has been more than a game for this guy. It's been a way of proving himself to the guys on the block, it's been a way of gaining the respect of all those who watch him "take somebody to the hole" with his best move. (city talk for scoring on your opponent). Basketball has been a way to stay out of trouble on those humid sweltering days in the city. It's been a way to obtain an education which might not necessarily have been possible otherwise. But above all I'm sure it's been a great deal of fun and some of the experiences that Bernie has obtained from the "pill" are invaluable.

Bernie loves basketball, it's what he knows best and what he does best and he does it well. He has so much raw talent it's unbelievable.

When he learns to be the great ballplayer he has the potential to be he'll be a great one.

When you watch Bernie play "the game" as we call it, remember one thing its a lot more than just "a game" to him. It's a way of life.

Trustees Meet; Concern Over Tenure Voiced By Andrews

by Steven C. Rice

The University of Vermont Board of Trustees met Saturday morning at the Waterman Building, and they were informed by UVM President Dr. Edward C. Andrews that the university could be overburdened by tenured faculty in five years.

Andrews noted the university faculty would be "90-95 per cent tenured in five years," assuming a policy of slow university growth as well as assuming faculty would receive tenured appointments at the present pace. Earlier this semester, at the September meeting of the Faculty Senate, the president had used the same figures.

Apparently, when trustee Allen O. Eaton, chairman of the educational policy committee, reported 40 of the 43 faculty members eligible for tenure this academic year have been recommended. Chairman of the policy committee of the Faculty Senate, Professor Paul Hilberg, had supplied these figures.

UVM vice president of academic affairs Alfred B. Rollins commented that these figures were somewhat misleading. Although a high percentage of those now eligible for tenure have indeed been recommended, he claimed many others have been screened from eligibility or lost eligibility earlier.

President Andrews accepted, with some hesitation, a request by trustee Paul Low to prepare a plan to resolve the tenure problem by the trustees' April meeting.

Concern over tenure derives from the fact that once a faculty member is awarded it, he is hardly ever removed from his teaching position.

Other business Saturday included the following:

The board rescinded an August 1970 offer to the state of 35,000 acres of deeded lands sequestered for the use of the university.

They agreed unanimously, at the suggestion of trustee Robert Boardman, that a "parcel-by-parcel" survey of this land should be conducted with the purpose of retaining those areas with present or future educational value.

Also, the board passed a motion authorizing UVM executive president Wayne C. Patterson to recommend change in the status of existing lease lands; he may negotiate only after gaining approval of the real estate subcommittee of the trustees' building and grounds committee.

Reporter Thomas Slayton of the Vermont Press Bureau and the Rutland Daily Herald informed the board a member of the news agency would begin covering the closed-door committee meetings of the trustees; at present, it is the board's policy that these meetings be kept secret because of the delicate nature that discussion may focus on controversial issues and personalities.

Board chairman Dr. Robert O'Brien was sympathetic to Slayton's desire that meetings become open because the trustees are spending public monies. O'Brien promised that the trustees will take some action on the matter, possibly as soon as the trustees' January meeting.

For the most part, the meeting moved briskly, and at times, was light-hearted.

Plans To Revive Winter Carnival Await Finance Committee, Senate Approval

Plans to resurrect the UVM Winter Carnival apparently achieved fruition as this week, when an ad-hoc committee came up with a tentative format for a Winter Carnival on February 1, 2, and 3.

Last week the SA Coordinating Committee appointed a committee consisting of Leslie Bieber, Gary Haslam, Jeff Yacker, Steve Woodkind, Andy Leinwand and Susan Taylor, with the express purpose of coming up with a carnival agenda agreeable to all student groups, i.e., dorms, Greeks, townpeople. Several efforts had been made during the semester to formulate concrete plans, however, no definitive action was ever taken on them.

At Tuesday's SA meeting, Susan Taylor, committee member and town senator, outlined plans for Winter Carnival '73. The Faculty Senate has granted students a day off on Friday, February 2. The highlights of the weekend would be the NCAA Eastern Ski Races which will be held in nearby ski areas on February 2 and 3. However, the event which would kick off the whole carnival would be an Ice Show at the Gutterson Field House on Thursday evening, February 1. This would consist of a professional show of approximately thirty minutes duration, to be followed by skits performed by living units and townpeople. Preferably, all the skits, each 5 minutes long, would follow one central theme. The skits would be judged on a competitive basis, with winners announced at the conclusion of the event. On Friday morning bus service would be provided for students without cars to Bolton Valley, site of the ski races. UVM students would be entitled to a lunch at the lodge for a nominal price, to be followed by guitar players and folk singers. UVM students would also be eligible for a special rate on lift tickets from Bolton Valley Corporation. On Friday evening the Carnival will shift back to Gutterson for a hockey game between UVM and Colby College. On Saturday morning the giant slalom will be held at Bolton Valley, however the ski jumping competition, which would hopefully attract a large number of students, will be held at the UVM ski jump in nearby Williston. After the jumping, "winter games" will commence on the green here at UVM. The main events will be a "broomball" tournament. Broomball is a modification of hockey which uses brooms instead of sticks, and a soccer ball instead of a puck. Players play in boots, as opposed to skates, but the game is still fairly rigorous. Competition, male and female, in broomball would begin on the days preceding the carnival, and only semi-finals and final matches would be held on Saturday afternoon. In addition, other snow games would be held, with teams and individuals from all quarters eligible to enter.

On Saturday evening the Winter Carnival would draw to a close with another hockey match against UVM's rival, Bowdoin. During the first intermission, the winning ice skit from Thursday night would be performed, and during the second intermission, winners of the snow sculpture competition would be announced. Snow sculpture would have been constructed the weeks preceding the carnival, with all living units eligible to enter.

Inasmuch that the activities for the Winter Carnival will be administered by the Department of Medical Microbiology, the SA Finance Committee and the Senate itself will have to approve the activities. The Finance Committee meets this afternoon, and the Senate will meet again on Tuesday to take final action. There were indications that in the event that the Senate, the Finance Committee, or both turned down the request for funds, Greek-letter houses would proceed to organize a Winter Carnival, using their own resources.

Task Force Recommends Extensive Reorganization Of University

by Jeffrey Yacker

The Task Force on Collegiate Reorganization issued its report last Friday at a press conference. The report included the guidelines which the members followed, problems which they considered outstanding, general recommendations, and specific recommendations.

The Task Force was established by President Andrews several months ago to investigate the problems relating to the organization of UVM into colleges and departments. Members of the committee were W.W. Christensen, Professor in the College of Agriculture and Home Economics and Chairman of the Task Force, Charles W. Case, Associate Professor of Education, Jeremy Felt, Professor of History, Mary Ellen Pisanelli, '74, student representative, Dolores Stocker, Administrative Assistant for the President, Brian F. Smith, '74, student representative, Engineering, and Dr. Alfred Rollins, Vice President of the University for Academic Affairs, serving on the committee Ex-officio.

General Recommendations

1. All college curricular structures, requirements, and guidelines should immediately be reexamined by the respective college faculties to ensure curricular breadth and depth in the arts, humanities, sciences, and professional study, and to appraise the influence of recent reductions in distribution requirements and standards upon the intellectual rigor of our programs.

2. It is imperative that the University recognize the need for a variety of alternative learning and teaching strategies appropriate to particular student learning needs. The current emphasis on FTE's and FTE's could return the University to many, large lecture classes and thus impeding individual learning needs. Furthermore, the emphasis on FTE's has threatened the intellectual integrity of students and faculty.

3. The University should develop clearly defined cross-college decision making processes regarding curricular matters.

4. Interdepartmental and program cooperation must be carefully enforced and rewarded by the appropriate university academic officers, to eliminate present program duplication.

5. It is essential that University and college academic and administrative officers develop analytical procedures regarding (a) the acceptance or rejection of monies from private philanthropy and state and federal funds that may deflect academic units from their primary missions, and (b) to ensure that projects are not undertaken without substantial interaction with other logically related departments, programs, or colleges.

6. The University must begin to provide opportunities, in addition to the sabbatical leave system, for faculty members to learn new applications of their skills and knowledge as current applications become obsolete.

7. The University and each college should reexamine and, if appropriate, modify its specific mission statements every five years to reflect changes in emerging societal needs and in the pursuit of knowledge.

8. We recommend that the University begin an intensive study of matrix-organization designs for possible adoption. It is essential that such a study be provided with the necessary resources to insure that it will be comprehensive.

Specific Recommendations

1. That the College of Technology and the College of Agriculture and Home Economics be dissolved.

2. That the College of Education be renamed the College of Education and Human Resources.

3. That a Department of Statistics be created (regrouping existing personnel).

4. That a Department of Computer Sciences be created (regrouping existing personnel).

5. That a College of Applied Sciences be instituted to consist of the following departments and services:

a) Department of Agriculture (to include present departments of Animal Pathology, Animal Science, and Plant and Soil Science).

b) Department of Business Administration (including Resource Economics faculty).

c) Department of Engineering (including Civil, Electrical, Manufacturing and Management, and Mechanical Engineering programs).

d) Department of Forestry (including Recreation Resources Management program).

e) Department of Home Economics (including present programs in: Clothing, Textiles & Design; Housing and Home Management; Hospitality Industry-Food Service Administration; Dietetics and Institutional Administration; and Human Nutrition and Food).

f) Department of Statistics

g) Department of Computer Science

h) Agricultural Experiment Station

i) Engineering Experiment Station

j) Extension Service

k) Technical Information Center

l) Related Services

It is further recommended that because of the proposed organization of the new College of Applied Sciences, a search committee be appointed to find a dean and to develop a statement of mission.

6. That the Department of Chemistry and the remaining programs in Mathematics be placed in the College of Arts and Sciences.

Student Referendum Set For December 13

by Jeri Covey

Quoting Jim Slocum, Chairman of the Student Association Senate, Tuesday night's Senate meeting was "a good meeting, it was just a lot was done." The meeting convened at four o'clock in the afternoon in order to give visiting Vermont legislators attending UVM's Legislature Day a chance to sit in on the proceedings.

Announcement was made that a student referendum will be held next week on Wednesday, December 13.

There will be four issues on the referendum: 1) should the Student Association allocate $3000 to the Committee Against the War to be given to Medical Aid to Indochina; 2) should the Student Association consider resolutions and motions concerning non-University affairs; 3) should the administration and Student Association work for a new Student Union; and 4) should voting machines be used in future Student Association elections. Balloting will be done with voting machines from 8:30 am to 5:00 pm in Billings Center, Bailey Library, Waterman, and the University Bookstore.

Four motions proposed by Treasurer Tom Grant were passed. The first was allocation of $100.00 to Supplies and Services to cover the cost of the upcoming referendum; it had been pointed out earlier by Grant that it would cost no more to use the voting machines than to have paper ballots. A motion was passed that allocated $1,600.00 to the Photographic Interaction Club. $1,000.00 of this will be used to fund the first two issues of a photography publication containing the work of student photographers. The SA Films were allocated $750.00 in a new budget request. This additional allocation was needed in order to continue the extra showings of the Marx Brothers' movies. In an amendment proposed by Richard Cassidy $375.00, instead of $200.00 as was originally proposed by the Financial Committee, was allocated to the East Asia Club; this money will be used primarily for films.

A motion proposed by John Franco that would create a Central Committee to coordinate the ad-hoc committees of the Senate and provide for more effective research of and action upon the issues facing students was passed by the Senate. Jim Slocum advocated this motion (continued on page ten)

Colchester Center For Women Offers More Than Abortions

by Dan Haslam

A poster on the wall reads "Sisterhood is Powerful" and serves as a summation of sentiment for the Vermont Women's Health Center in Colchester.

Having been open since September 1 and operating since September 15, the VWHC offers a variety of gynecological services. Besides the center's controversial role as an abortion clinic, it performs gynecological check-ups and screenings for both venereal diseases and pregnancy. Contraceptive devices and birth control prescriptions and information are also available.

The Center is most noted for its function in performing abortions. Only one type of abortion method is administered, vacuum aspiration, in which the contents of the uterus are sucked out by a vacuum apparatus. To qualify for an abortion, a woman must be 18 years old or secure parents' consent, medically healthy, and within the twelfth week of pregnancy, which is a state law.

Deborah Helvarg, a staff member at the VWHC, outlined an abortion procedure. First, a confirmed pregnancy test and pre-abortion physical are needed. In general, an abortion will follow within a few days and will be preceded by laboratory work and counseling for the woman. The abortion procedure is explained to the woman before and during the abortion. This is crucial, elaborated Helvarg, because "we think it is important for a woman to understand what is happening to her body." The two, small operating rooms are equipped with mirrors for this purpose. The aspiration process will take between ten to twenty minutes followed by a two-hour recovery period in the center's two recovery rooms. Recovery One consists of four beds for

by Jeffrey Yacker

The problem of canines on the UVM campus is getting more serious every week, and action from various quarters will soon be forthcoming. Ms. Karen Wedge, Director of Student Activities, expressed great concern this week over the possible results of dogs in Billings Center and other parts of the University. Ms. Wedge stated that as of December 14, affirmative action will be taken to rid Billings Center of dogs, preferably with student cooperation. She noted that the State Board of Health has threatened to close down the Den if canines are permitted to roam at will. This would result in 1,000 students daily doing without a snack bar, and several persons losing their jobs. The Director noted that if students are uncooperative in keeping their pets out of the Den and Billings Center, the dog catcher would be notified.

Dr. Wayne Patterson, Executive Vice President of the University, also noted concern. His office is responsible for issuing any new directives. While reviewing the problem in Billings, Dr. Patterson cited the insurance risks involved: "If a student is bitten by a dog on University property, and is injured seriously, the University would be in very rough shape in terms of a law suit." One obstacle in curtailing canine activities, he noted, would be student cooperation. The Vice President also stated that several of the rules relating to dogs on campus were verbal, rather than written. However, he did state that written directives may be set down very shortly. "The dog problem is presently one of

Speech Majors Meet

UVM Undergraduate, and Graduate students, in speech pathology, charter members of the second chapter in the Northeast of The National Student Speech and Hearing Association, met last week to organize and elect the new UVM chapter's slate of officers.

They are Sharon Smith, president; Joylynn McCraw, vice-president; and Marilyn Bryant, Secretary-treasurer.

The NSHA chapter was established for pre-professional exposure to extra curricular considerations of interest to the student speech clinician and to undertake service projects to aid communicative handicapped children and adults in Vermont. The chapter will also initiate an annual Honor Award to the graduating speech path student who best emphasizes achievement in scholarship and clinical skill.

A first project, now being developed by the new student organization, is aimed at providing free driver re-education instruction to former stroke patients who may meet exacting standards to gain licenses but who for other reasons are unidentified as candidates for automobile licenses.

Faculty advisor is Don Shields, Assistant Professor of Communication and Theatre, and a speech pathologist.

Marine Corps Information

The U.S. Marine Corps Officer Selection Team will be at the University of Vermont on Wednesday and Thursday the 13th and 14th of December 1972 to discuss officer programs available to students.

The Platoon Leaders Class (PLC) Program is available to the undergraduate in both the ground and aviation fields. Successful completion of PLC Training is culminated with commissioning as a lieutenant of Marines upon graduation from college.

Eligible PLC members can earn $100 a month every month of the academic year - up to $2700 in a college career. The PLC Program also offers a chance to learn to fly free while in college.

Seniors and graduates may enroll in the officer candidate course and attend after graduation.

Law school deferments are available to qualified students. The team visiting the campus will be located in the Billings Student Center from 10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.

Information on the Marine Officer Programs can be obtained by contacting the Marine Officer Selector Office, Post Office Building 135 High Street, Hartford Connecticut 06101 - Phone (203) 244-2168 or 244-2169.

College of Education Relocates Offices

The College of Education has moved, both physically and in other significant ways. The Reading Center has moved to the 406-412 area of Waterman, the History Department faculty no longer hears the patter of little feet as children come to the Reading Center for remedial assistance. A Curriculum Laboratory is now located in 427 Waterman where "A Place to Learn" once called home. "A Place to Learn" has moved up, to the fifth floor of Waterman, that many Teacher Education offices are now located on the fifth floor where the Nursing Department used to be. The new office of the Teacher Education Chairman also is located in 533B Waterman, however, the office (with a fantastic view of the lake) is empty while a university search committee has been charged by Vice-President Rollins with the responsibility of finding a new Teacher Education Program Chairman to replace Dr. Betty Boileau in that role. The offices of faculty for graduate programs in Personnel in Higher Education are now located in 228 Waterman area. It now can be said the College of Education is fully operational at all levels in Waterman Building. The Art Education Program has moved to the newly renovated Williams Science Hall. However some things do remain constant amidst all this mobility, the Physical Education program is still located in Patrick Gymnasium for fairly obvious reasons. The Special Education Program faculty offices are still located in Booth House at 86 South Williams Street.

CBF To Meet Thursday

Campus Bible Fellowship meets Thursdays at 7:00 pm in Clement House (the Admissions Office on South Prospect Street). CBF, as it is called, is open to all students, faculty, staff and their spouses. It is coordinated by a Christian leader designated by Campus Bible Fellowship (university ministry of Baptist Mid-Missions in cooperation with local Baptist churches) to encourage the understanding of the Bible, Christian faith, through Bible study, discussion, prayer and counseling. All are welcome at all meetings.

Dog Problem...

Whatever policy is decided upon in appropriate quarters, the people who will have a major role in implementing it will be Campus Security. Chief Barrett said that his men merely carry out policies set by others. He noted that when security men have had to remove dogs from classes, they have run into severe hostility on the part of students. "One young lady brought her female dog to class, even though it was in heat. Well, the inevitable happened when a male dog wandered in. It must have been very distracting. When the girl was questioned, she said that, after all, they were only human."

SA Referendum

The Student Association announced that a referendum on several questions will be held on December 13. All Student Association members are eligible to vote.

The four questions on the ballot will be:

- 1) Shall the S.A. allocate $3,000.00 to the U.V.M. Committee Against the War for donation to Medical Aids for Indochina?
- 2) Shall the S.A. Senate entertain motions and/or resolutions pertaining to non-university affairs?
- 3) Shall the University explore the feasibility of a Student Union?
- 4) Shall the S.A. use voting machines in future S.A. elections and referendums?

UVM Rescue Volunteers

UVM Rescue, a volunteer student organization, is looking for people interested in Ambulance-Rescue work. A meeting to explain the purpose of and work involved in UVM Rescue will be held in the Memorial Lounge, Waterman, on Tuesday, December 12th, starting at 6. It will be an informal meeting, and all are invited.

If any information is required before the meeting, it can be obtained by simply calling UVM Rescue's non-emergency number, extension 3353, or coming to the squad room located in the rear of Wason Infirmary.

Rock & Roll Rescheduled

Chuck Berry, King of Rock and Roll, originally set for November 29 on the Lane Series, has been rescheduled for Saturday, February 10, at 8:30 p.m. Memorial Auditorium.

IRA Discusses Craft Shop, Ski Show; May Sponsor Concert

The meeting of the Inter-Residence Association was called to order at 7:00 by President Sig Hailer in the Harris-Mills Rec. Room. Dr. Mier and Dean Thompson were present.

REPORTS: Welfare Vice President Jim Kelley announced that IRA would hire an experienced woodworker to oversee open hours at the Art Department's workshop in Williams Science Hall. He is to be paid $1.60/hr. or a total of $77. The workshop will open next semester. Jim urged all students to use these facilities; possibly the hours open/week will be increased if the shop is well used. Students are asked to supply their own hand tools as these are limited in number. Hours the shop will be open: 8-12 pm Friday; Saturday 12-4, 8-12 pm. Paul Vey reported a balance of $1900 in the IRA treasury. Sig announced that Social and Cultural Vice President Stan Braden has resigned, and asked for a volunteer to fill the position.

OLD BUSINESS: The council voted to allocate $170 for the MAT Ski Shop. The shop should be ready for use by mid-January, and will be manned by Ski Club members. All students on campus may use these facilities.

NEW BUSINESS: A motion was made to allocate $77 to hire a supervisor for the Art Department craft shop. The motion was tabled.

A proposal was made to set up dorm movies but no action was taken for lack of Social and Cultural Affairs Vice President to work organizing this.

IRA may help sponsor a concert thru the S.A. Concert Bureau. Anyone having ideas on this subject is asked to contact Sig at extension 2262. Bill Root spoke of the possibility of building a student union, and asked for student volunteers to help discuss feasibility and plans. Dr. Mier answered questions related to his work with the Housing Office and offered to speak to any dorm groups interested when he has a free evening.

There being no further business, the meeting was adjourned at 7:55.

With Mass Transit, You Could Leave Car At Home

To the Editor of the Cynic:

While driving home this past weekend a thought occurred to me. I realized I was enjoying the passing scenery. And, I thought how wonderful the automobile was. And yet, this kind of beauty wouldn't last long if present development continued.

I started listing some of the car's bad points. Obviously, it is a polluter. It leads to congestion and noise in the city. It leads to destruction of natural areas in the course of highway and parking lot construction, and finally, it has a tremendous operating cost. I wonder if all that is necessary, and whether money could be spent in other ways. I wouldn't need a car if the following existed: a reliable bus or train service to get home. By reliable, I mean a regular, fast system which with the help of federal and state financing wouldn't be too expensive. I certainly don't need a car on campus. Also, an adequate bus service in town would be helpful. (I've just heard that the Burlington Bus Company is going out of business next year. Now might be a good time to stage a "Save the Bus" campaign while there are unpopular feelings about the Jughandis construction. It should be pointed out to the people of Burlington that future "jughandis" will be necessary if current trends aren't reversed.) Finally, I wouldn't need a car if people pooled rides when going to ski areas. Since we have many cars now, the ride board should be used more extensively. Maybe in the future if enough interest is shown there could be a shuttle to areas.

Anyway, when I put all this together, I came to the conclusion that I don't need a car - and what a relief that would be, not having to worry about insurance, depreciation, gas and repairs.

The next problem is obvious. Where do we get the money for such systems? Federal and state money saved on highway construction and maintenance plus private investment in cars could be used. For those concerned about the livelihood of those working in the car industry, they could get jobs in the mass transit industry.

All of this centers on a most fundamental question: Can people make a personal sacrifice for the environment? Can they give up a little luxury to make the quality of life a little better?

Anyone. Learning?

An Open Letter to the Cynic:

We are students and we are concerned about the stifling academic conditions at the University of Vermont. "Education" seems to consist of exams, grades, and courses around here. We ask, is anyone learning? If you are, it's under the pressure of finishing this paper or studying for that exam. It seems like at the beginning of each semester we look ahead and know that soon we'll be unhappy with academics, yet we let it rule us. We pay to be unhappy with the educational system of UVM. We're all suckers! Why aren't any extensive research being done concerning the present grading system and ways to replace it? One idea might be having just a pass grade or not having any grades at all. But these ideas take faculty-administration endorsement so that the only way would be through a formal, recognized committee with students' voices, voted in by the students. Why don't students have a definite choice in the hiring and firing of faculty? We're getting the education and we should choose our teachers. The power-play among faculty should not be the concern in hiring and firing teachers. Actually we should also have a voice in the appointment of Board of

12. The Task Force has examined the location of the Speech Pathology program in the Department of Communications and Theatre and concludes that, in view of the combined undergraduate and graduate teaching duties of its faculty, this program should continue in its present college location. However, the Task Force strongly encourages increased interaction between that program and appropriate units of the Division of Health Sciences and the College of Education and Human Resources.

13. The Task Force recommends that the Departments of Chemistry and Medical Biochemistry institute, as promptly as possible, mechanisms for developing cooperative academic ventures.

14. Considering that recommendation that chemistry, mathematics and the Department of Biological Sciences be located in the College of Arts and Sciences, and considering that these areas represent some student constituencies presently outside this college, it is particularly necessary that the College curriculum distribution requirements be reevaluated so as to provide effective academic opportunities for these students. The Task Force further recommends that the College of Arts and Sciences institute B.S. degree programs in appropriate areas.

Reactions Varied

Reactions from various individuals concerned and affected by the report differed considerably. Vice President Rollins, in an interview Tuesday, stated that the Task Force Report was "a step in the right direction." Dr. Rollins noted that no final decision on any of the proposals would be reached before April, and that during the months of January and February, President Andrews would be holding open meetings to solicit the opinions of individuals and groups concerned. Rollins also felt that the general recommendations of the report were more important than the specific recommendations. "It will be worth it if we can hit on a new organizational structure for the University." The Academic V.P. did comment favorably on the specific proposals, noting that they will "strengthen professional education," and "bring together related service programs in the College of Arts and Sciences." He also stated that he felt the "environmental thrust" would be stronger than the proposals of the committee.

Thomas Dowse, Dean of the College of Agriculture and Home Economics, and Gerald Donovan, Associate Dean, expressed a markedly different point of view. Dean Dowse stated that he was "quite concerned" about the proposals which would dissolve the College of Agriculture and Home Economics. "I am not opposed to change, but I feel that the College of Agriculture should play a strong role in that change." The two deans noted that several service functions of the College could be jeopardized if the specific proposals of the report were implemented. The Extension Service and the Experimental Station are both Federally funded under the Land-Grant Act, and if the College of Agriculture and home economics were dissolved, those monies might have to be forfeited. The College of Agriculture was established in 1862 under the Morrill Land Grant Act and was, until 1955, the only part of the University which was publicly funded (hence the official title: University of Vermont & State Agricultural College). Dean Dowse stated that it was "important to maintain a College of Agriculture as a distinct entity."

Joseph Izso, Dean of the College of Technology, felt that it was rather early to comment on the Task Force Report. Reaction in the community tended to be negative, with an editorial from a local newspaper noting "intellectuals looking down their noses at Home Economics."

Truist members, for they hold most of the power. Why are classes so large and decent courses (like Philosophy 5) always filled up? Why couldn't a ceiling be put on enrollment so that concentration could be put on making university policies that fit the students. Enrollment could be increased when this has been fulfilled.

We're really down. Learning is so hectic here. We wonder if anyone feels thirst for those chem problems or would you rather be reading a book at your own pace or maybe studying one thing in depth rather than a splattering of this and that? We just hope we haven't hit another stone wall. There are many at UVM, (i.e. Administration). We suppose the policy of this university can best be explained by a sign on Dean Weiger's desk, "If you can't convince 'em, confuse 'em." We're tired of being confused. We want to react.

Thanks For Soul

We all know that Soul Food is the name given to the leftover food white people didn't want during the slave period. However, the Soul Food dinner held Thursday before Thanksgiving exposed the student body here at UVM to an aspect of Black culture. As an Afro-American student attending UVM I wish to extend a personal thank you to the Harris-Mills kitchen staff for their concern in our behalf.

Thank you

A Glimpse At Wasson Infirmary

by Bruce Madden

Wasson Infirmary provides much needed medical assistance and advice to the UVM community. Operating out of a pre-civil war edifice, it has managed to provide students with health care for many years.

Wasson provides service through its staff of three full time doctors and nine staff nurses. There is someone there twenty-four hours a day. At night, there is always a nurse on duty to handle the overnight patients and a doctor on call in case of emergency. Wasson can accommodate fourteen overnight patients and has two or three isolation rooms.

Many students have complained, however, that Wasson should be taken into consideration, however, that Wasson handles between 140 and 160 patients a day, usually with only three doctors and five or six nurses present. This is not a very good ratio, but the staff has amazing organization and efficiency considering the time and people available.

Besides the staff physicians on duty daily, there are various clinics during the week. There is a gynecological clinic every day and an orthopedic clinic in the middle of the week. This orthopedic clinic is especially helpful during ski season and presently handles approximately twenty patients a day. Aside from the regular services and clinics available, Wasson operates a referral service with many other agencies in Burlington. It refers students to dentists, psychiatrists, specialists and the Medical Center Hospital as well as the Educational and Testing Program.

Funds have been appropriated to add another physician to the infirmary staff, which would eliminate much of the waiting and congestion. Wasson operates on a University budget and on student fees. For the $25 a student pays, he gets much more than $25 worth of service. The health insurance, incorporated through the university, pays 80% of anything extra as long as it goes through the Infirmary's referral. For the money the Quality and the general atmosphere, it is hard to find a better or more efficient medical service around.

Aid' Proposal

University Student Association Treasurer Tom Grant has correctly pointed out that there are other alternatives for raising the money. But let us assume that the referendum is approved. Why should the money be used only to aid the injured areas?

The vote on this referendum will decide the direction in which the Student Government of the University will move. I urge all students concerned with the future of the Student Association to vote against the allocation.

(Continued from page ten) subject with a bit of caution, for it is entirely a matter of personal opinion. This reporter's first impression was that Robert Miller could use some lessons—from Henry Higgins. But then one will acquiesce to the genius of the theatre. I doubt if anyone else could play the part of the easily excitable, henpecked Signor Sorelli with as much humor, for it's not only what's in the lines—but how they are said that makes an actor fit a role. Miller is very good at that all-important task of Sorelli's—getting very excited and talking very fast—and being able to speak clearly in the process. When that is considered, then that distinctive Brooklyn accent of his does seem to be quite out of place in the Italian setting. But that football stance has got to go! The next production of the University Players will be The Tragical History of Doctor Faustus by Christopher Marlowe, scheduled for January 25-29.

Third Crazy Horse Album Exhibits Well-developed Musical Identity

by Doug Collette
AT CROOKED LAKE Crazy Horse
Epic KE 31710

At Crooked Lake is the third Crazy Horse album in as many years. The original group produced one strong LP marred only occasionally by an overly strong resemblance to the English groups that overran America during the middle sixties. When Danny Whitten and Jack Nitzsche split, a five-man Crazy Horse was born and the result of that incarnation was a record full of innocent songs and equally innocent musicianship, neither of which seemed to truly challenge the band's capabilities.

This new LP is a dynamic work that exhibits a well-developed musical identity for the new Crazy Horse; they're sure enough of themselves not only making moving rock and roll, but being adventurous as well—their inclusion of Sneaky Pete's outer-space pedal steel on "Vehicle" raises the track far above the ordinary. They can blend elements of pop, country and rock in just the correct proportions, so that they can let rip with driving rockers like "Rock and Roll Band" or be charmingly beatnik with "Outside Looking In" without losing their special sound.

New lead vocalist Rick Curtis sings with the taut emotion of Danny Whitten and the group harmonies soar over the music, but without the shrillness of Poco or the superhuman perfection that often blemished the singing of Crosby, Stills and Nash. Lead guitarist Greg Leroy, a holdover from the previous band, has improved as a vocalist, composer and especially as a bottleneck guitarist. His marvelously mellow acoustic work on "Love Is Gone" and equally superb electric slide on "Don't Keep Me Burning" are just two examples of many on the record.

Since not too many rock and roll groups display too much lightheartedness (the Who and Humble Pie being two exceptions), one of the most pleasing aspects of At Crooked

Lake is the emergence of a sense of humor within this band. Leroy's "85 El Paso" sounds as if Crazy Horse ran through the song live in the studio and, listening to the playback, decided that the spontaneity was worth the lack of polish. Well, they were right; the loose semi-facetious tone of country-colored vocals and lead guitar make this cut a refreshing success.

But even though the addition of Rick and Michael Curtis has added much that's positive, Crazy Horse remains plagued by lyrics that are often trite (don't burn your candle at both ends...) or, more often, clumsily married to the funky music. "We Ride," for instance, dealing as it does in a kind of spiritual belief, is awkward because the words don't quite mesh with the sweeping acoustic guitars and exotic congas.

Even in a case like this, though, it's possible to ignore the words and just go ride the music and whenever you can do that, you can be sure you're listening to high-quality rock and roll music.

ONE MAN DOG
James Taylor
Warner Bros. BS 2660

James Taylor stands as the prototype of all the post-singers that have inundated us over the past few years. It's hard to shoulder most of the blame for the plethora of pretentiousness that has captured the imagination of Madison Avenue and network television and fostered the likes of John Denver.

One Man Dog is nothing more than the fourth in what I hope is a soon-to-be-concluded series of albums that display the narrow scope of Taylor's art (and I use the word "art" very loosely indeed). I will grant that he has written some excellent songs, but they're all on his first two LP's and having used up all the not-too-plentiful creativity he once possessed, Taylor is now simply overworking what wasn't such a good idea in the first place. To deal effectively and perceptively with human emotion necessitates a far-ranging grasp of the way people deal with each other in all kinds of relationships and James Taylor just does not have the ability or the talent to make a craft of it.

Although he could once write fairly well, Taylor has never been a skillful interpreter of anyone's material, much less his own. He must confine himself to subdued musical arrangements to be bearable (even though those arrangements sound identical) and when he tries to go beyond such things, as on "Steamroller," for instance, he sounds like a fool; his macho strident chords, whether it's meant to be a parody or not.

This record is excruciatingly lackluster and one track in particular, "Don't Let Me Be Lonely Tonight," recapitulates the whole of the album's four-square vapidly. Deceptively adopting the stance of the poor sensitive man locked in solitude, he's trying to do nothing more than seduce a woman, and if that isn't degrading enough in itself—to both parties—Taylor's pretenses make it despicable. When the Faces sing "Stay With Me" at least they're not playing games with anybody, but Taylor is only fooling himself. I hope he didn't fool the woman who was so fortunate as to be the object of his affections.

One Man Dog is supposed to be a departure from his previous albums in that it's more musically oriented; the musicians get a chance to play and not just assist in presenting the songs. So what we get are eighteen cuts, some instrumental, which seem to be forging the way toward rock and roll music. There's hardly a thing distinctive about this sound, though it's admittedly of high technical competence and it would seem the perfectly appropriate thing with which to fill silence—it's not really worth listening to, but it fulfills its function just being in the background, only a few steps above the marshmallow you hear in the First National.

Taylor sings with all the emotive expression of a cardboard box; he sounds like he's ready to fall asleep, but then, I've never liked his voice anyway.

The new James Taylor album—sensitive, poetic and wimpy.

Junior Year
in New York

Washington Square College of Arts and Science of New York University sponsors a Junior Year in New York.

The College, located in the heart of the city, is an integral part of the exciting metropolitan community of New York City—the business, cultural, artistic, and financial center of the nation. The city's extraordinary resources greatly enrich both the academic program and the experience of living at New York University with the most cosmopolitan student body in the world.

This program is open to students recommended by the deans of the colleges to which they will return for their degrees.

There are strong and varied offerings in many areas, such as fine arts, urban studies, languages including non-European, mathematics in the College and at the Courant Institute, psychology, and others.

A qualified student may register for courses in all other schools of the University, including the specializations in Commerce and Education.

The University sponsors programs in Spain and France. Write for brochure to Director, Junior Year in New York.

Letter Pineapple Bombs Still Fall

Dear Editor,

It should be noted that Vietnam is still receiving 110,000 tons of American bombs per month. An equivalent of 400 Hiroshima's have taken place in Vietnam.

Since 1965, 6 million people have been killed, made refugees, or been wounded in Vietnam.

Consider the fact that one half of all American bombs have been anti-personal bombs designed to explode on contact with people. One such commonly used weapon is the "pineapple" bomb. When a single aircraft drops its load of these bombs the effect is equivalent to 13,160 infantry men each firing one clip from an M-16 rifle simultaneously into the bombed area. The big difference is that the pineapple bombs are effective against civilians only, not soldiers who have bunkers, sandbags, and helmets to protect them. To make things worse, the pellets in the pineapple bomb are made of plastic so they can't be found in the human body by x-rays.

The students at UVM now have the decision of spending $3,000 on Medical Aid to Indochina. This is a paltry sum in comparison to the $140,000 (more or less) that the Student Association gives out every year for the students' enjoyment. If we have any iota of humanity in us, we will vote for the appropriation of the money to Medical Aid to Indochina. Let's start now to begin to regress the American created hell in Vietnam.

Sincerely Yours,
Blaine Pierre Sargent

QUESTION: I am a 20 year old coed with a problem of sorts. Recently, while home from school, I took ill. My mother thinks that everytime someone in the house gets ill, they need a hot, soapy enema. The last time I argued violently, but to no avail.

My roommate at school agrees with my mother, and my doctor said it may not be helpful but there isn't much danger of any harm resulting. I contend that if an enema is a must, it should be neither hot nor soapy.

ANSWER: The role of enemas in medicine has declined in importance compared to what it was earlier in the century. In years past when much less was known, many illnesses were attributed to the large intestine and its contents. There was a theory of illness based on the absorption of bacterial toxins from the large intestine, for instance. The anus, by providing such ready access to the "filth" - containing intestines, became a favorite place to stick in things. Great imagination was shown in the diversity of enema solutions and means of administration. The best one I heard of was milk and molasses which may have been used more for its optimistic expectations of sweetness and wholesomeness than for its therapeutic efficacy.

Little children almost invariably greet an enema with terror and link it with punishment. For your mother to persist in giving you an enema at age 20 is not justified on physiological grounds and it places you in an inappropriately infantile position. Rape is unhealthy no matter what form it takes. Gentle enemas are recommended by physicians in cases of severe constipation and before certain diagnostic or surgical procedures, but are rarely indicated otherwise.

QUESTION: During orgasm, a friend of mine passes considerable air from the vaginal opening with accompanying noises not unlike the ordinary passing of gas. While it is true that the phenomenon is associated with some pattern of vaginal contraction, neither of us have encountered it in others. Would you comment on the cause and relative frequency of the occurrence among women?

ANSWER: During sexual excitement in a woman, the inner two-thirds of the vagina tend to expand considerably in size, ballooning outward. Air can become trapped in the vagina with the inserted penis acting as a one-way valve. With the contractions of orgasm or any other increase in inter-vaginal pressure, the air can escape noisily. The occurrence of the phenomenon would be dependent upon the vigoriveness with which intercourse is engaged in, the position assumed, the anatomy of the people involved, and auditory acuity. Be assured, there is no way that I can comment on the frequency of this occurrence. As with most other erotic phenomena, the fact that it can be explained on normal physiological grounds should be sufficiently reassuring, and the need for precise statistical definition is gliding the lily.

QUESTION: The housemate living in the room above mine has a girlfriend attending him often. She appears to have a very shy nature, but makes her presence quite conspicuous whenever she is engaged in sexual intercourse with him. She whistles loudly, cries and utters words which I certainly don't know how he reacts to this act but I certainly got disturbed and actively excited. I mentioned this to him, to the house owner and to the other housemates, but they appear to be enjoying this issue in their own ways. What would you suggest if I do not intend to leave my room or the house and still want to grow immune to the whole affair?

ANSWER: While the likelihood of me providing a solution to your problem is very low, the letter is sufficiently provocative to deserve publication even by itself. Some people are disturbed by sexual stimuli because they become sexually excited. Hearing or seeing people engaged in sexual intercourse is generally fairly exciting for most people, an occurrence which certainly would be classified as normal. In talks with a number of people who are violently against pornography, one of their chief complaints is that it sexually excites them and they think this is wrong. Without meaning to impose my value system on you, I don't think that becoming immune to sexually exciting stimuli is beneficial.

Why your housemate and his girlfriend choose to advertise their sexual activity in such a fashion can only be answered by them. For most people, sexual intercourse is something they desire to share only with each other, preferring to keep it a private matter. Others prefer to talk about or, in other ways demonstrate what they are doing in what seems to be a boastful fashion. In any case, the activity you describe should be dealt with as any other distraction that interferes with your privacy. Talking with the housemate involved makes sense, but going to the owner and other housemates would probably only provoke antagonism directed toward you.

Sexual intercourse and related activities rarely last more than a half hour and often less. Therefore, you might do better by ignoring it. You may try the simple expedient of turning up the volume on your radio, but under no circumstances would I suggest whistling back, applauding, crying or uttering words yourself.

Letter Pineapple Bombs Still Fall

Dear Editor:

It should be noted that Vietnam is still receiving 110,000 tons of American bombs per month. An equivalent of 400 Hiroshima's have taken place in Vietnam.

Since 1968, 6 million people have been killed, made refugees, or been wounded in Vietnam.

Consider the fact that one half of all American bombs have been anti-personal bombs designed to explode on contact with people. One such commonly used weapon is the "pineapple" bomb. When a single aircraft drops its load of these bombs the effect is equivalent to 13,160 infantry men each firing one clip from an M-16 rifle simultaneously into the bombed area. The big difference is that the pineapple bombs are effective against civilians only, not soldiers who have bunkers, sandbags, and helmets to protect them. To make things worse, the pellets in the pineapple bomb are made of plastic so they can't be found in the human body by X-rays.

The students at UVM now have the decision of spending $3,000 on Medical Aid to Indochina. This is a paltry sum in comparison to the $140,000

(more or less) that the Student Association gives out every year for the students' enjoyment. If we have any love of humanity to us, we will vote for the appropriation of the money to Medical Aid to Indochina. Let's start now to begin to regress the American created hell in Vietnam.

Sincerely Yours,
Blaine Pierre Sargent

QUESTION: I am a 28 year old coed with a problem of sorts. Recently, while home from school, I took ill. My mother thinks that everytime someone in the house gets ill, they need a hot, soapy enema. The last time I argued violently, but to no avail.

My roommate at school agrees with my mother, and my doctor said it may not be helpful but there isn't much danger of any harm resulting. I contend that if an enema is a must, it should be neither hot nor soapy.

ANSWER: The role of enemas in medicine has declined in importance compared to what it was earlier in the century. In years past when much less was known, many illnesses were attributed to the large intestine and its contents. There was a theory of illness based on the absorption of bacterial toxins from the large intestine, for instance. The anus, by providing such ready access to the "filth" - containing intestines, became a favorite place to stick in things. Great imagination was shown in the diversity of enema solutions and means of administration. The best one I heard of was milk and molasses which may have been used more for its optimistic expectations of sweetness and wholesomeness than for its therapeutic efficacy.

perish in giving you an enema of age 28 is not justified on physiological grounds and it places you in an inappropriately infantile position. Rape is unhealthy no matter what form it takes. Gentle enemas are recommended by physicians in cases of severe constipation and before certain diagnostic or surgical procedures, but are rarely indicated otherwise.

QUESTION: During orgasm, a friend of mine passes considerable air from the vaginal opening with accompanying noises not unlike the ordinary passing of gas. While it is true that the phenomenon is associated with some patterns of vaginal contractions, neither of us have encountered it in others. Would you comment on the cause and relative frequency of the occurrence among women?

ANSWER: During sexual excitement in a woman, the inner two-thirds of the vagina tend to expand considerably in size, ballooning outward. Air can become trapped in the vagina with the inserted penis acting as a one-way valve. With the contractions of orgasm or any other increase in inter-vaginal pressure, the air can escape noisily. The occurrence of the phenomenon would be dependent upon the vigorousness with which intercourse is engaged in, the position assumed, the anatomy of the people involved, and auditory acuity. Be assured, there is no way that I can comment on the frequency of this occurrence. As with most other erotic phenomena, the fact that it can be explained on normal physiological grounds should be sufficiently reassuring, and the need for precise statistical definition is gilding the lily.

QUESTION: The housemate living in the room above mine has a girlfriend attending him often. She appears to have a very shy nature, but makes her presence quite conspicuous whenever she is engaged in sexual intercourse with him. She utters loudly, and often utters words, probably to excite him. I don't know how he reacts to this act but I certainly get disturbed and actively excited. I mentioned this to him, to the house owner and to the other housemates, but they appear to be enjoying this issue in their own ways. What would you suggest if I do not intend to leave my room or the house and still want to grow immune to the whole affair?

ANSWER: While the likelihood of me providing a solution to your problem is very low, the letter is sufficiently provocative to deserve publication even by itself. Some people are disturbed by sexual stimuli because they become sexually excited. Hearing or seeing people engaged in sexual intercourse is generally fairly exciting for most people, an occurrence which certainly would be classified as normal. In talks with a number of people who are violently against pornography, one of their chief complaints is that it sexually excites them and they think this is wrong. Without meaning to impose my value system on you, I don't think that becoming immune to sexually exciting stimuli is beneficial.

Why your housemate and his girlfriend choose to advertise their sexual activity in such a fashion can only be answered by them. For most people, sexual intercourse is something they desire to share only with each other, preferring to keep it a private matter. Others prefer to talk about or, in other ways demonstrate what they are doing in what seems to be a boastful fashion. In any case, the activity you describe should be dealt with as any other distraction that interferes with your privacy. Talking with the housemate involved makes sense, but going to the owner and other housemates would probably only provoke antagonism directed toward you.

Sexual intercourse and related activities rarely last more than a half hour and often less. Therefore, you might do best by ignoring it. You may try the simple expedient of turning up the volume on your radio, but under no circumstances would I suggest whistling back, applauding, trying or anything worse yourself.

Last Sherlock Holmes Film Shows Most Imagination

by Margo Handford

In observing the Sherlock Holmes Series Film Classics for the past five weeks, I often wondered what Bertram Mithras and the other scriptwriters would have come up with if they wrote an original script—one that had nothing to do with any of Conan Doyle's chronicles. It appeared that in trying to give Doyle due credit by basing the films on some aspect of an original story, the directors sacrificed imagination for honesty of intent.

The Scarlet Claw, last in the series of six films starring Basil Rathbone and Nigel Bruce, is the welcome exception in this case. Based on an original story by Paul Ganssler and Brenda Webster, The Scarlet Claw is by far the best-directed, most imaginative and most chilling film in the entire series. There are, to be sure, some flaws, but they are more than outweighed by the excellent photography, lighting, and other suspenseful special effects. A good deal of credit must go to John P. Fulton, who worked on most of the Universal Horror Classics of the nineteen-thirties and forties, and to Roy William

In the fog-drenched marshes of La Mort Rouge, Canada, an ancient chieftain tells a grim warning of death. The inhabitants of the village tremble as they speak again, it is of the phantom of one hundred years past who has come again to terrorize the village. A mysterious glow has been sighted in the swamps and pastures—and in the morning the sheep in the area have been found dead, their throats torn out. The superstitious fears of the villagers cannot be allayed by the parish priest.

The bell of the village church is silent now, for below it lies the body of Lady Penrose, for whom the toll for help came too late: her throat had been torn out in the same manner as the sheep!

At a meeting of The Occult Society in Quebec, Canada, witnesses disappear; Lord Holmes and Watson have been Penrose for some reason listening to the eminent Edgar refuses to cooperate in the Penrose discuss psychic matter; Holmes meets the phenomena and the phantom on the marshes; Dr. Watson falls in and out of bags, re-appearance of the phantom Watson falls in and tries to garner vital that gave his home town its and tries to garner vital that gave his home town its and tries to garner vital that gave his home town its and skeptical as usual, declares what may appear as psychic phenomena is caused by human actions, often as a cover-up for crime. It is at this point that Penrose learns of his wife's tragic death, and is too shaken to reply civilly to the condolences of Holmes and Watson.

Much against the wishes of Penrose, Holmes is drawn into the case when he finds in his hotel room a frantic letter from a dead client: Lady Penrose, acting as a premonition, sought Holmes' help.

The suspense mounts as Holmes and Watson arrive at the Penrose manor, and manage to get a look at the body. They are both struck by the certainty that they have Penrose, for whom the toll for help came too late: her throat had been torn out in the same manner as the sheep!

At a meeting of The Occult Society in Quebec, Canada, witnesses disappear; Lord Holmes and Watson have been Penrose for some reason listening to the eminent Edgar refuses to cooperate in the Penrose discuss psychic matter; Holmes meets the phenomena and the phantom on the marshes; Dr. Watson falls in and out of bags, re-appearance of the phantom Watson falls in and tries to garner vital that gave his home town its and tries to garner vital that gave his home town its Holmes is struck by one fact: the victim, Lady Penrose, and two other villagers are troubled with similar premonitions of death all came to La Mort Rouge at the same time—two years previously—shortly before the reoccurrence of the phantom killer!

Holmes starts to put together his information—a torn picture, a sensational trial, a chemically treated shirt, a five-pronged garden claw, a mad actor, a trick phone call, and some extraordinary nocturnal visits—but not before murder strikes again—in a chilling sequence! Holmes knows now that the killer will strike again, and that he could resemble exactly anyone in the village! For it is mad, methodical actor Alastair Ramsay—out to seek revenge on those who brought him to trial for murder long ago—that is behind these grisly deaths. An interesting psychological twist presents itself as Holmes battles an unknown as elusive as the fog that shrouds the downs.

Paul Cavanagh as Lord Penrose and Gerald Hamer as the mysterious Ramsay do quite well, and I see no reason for Bodley Crowther of the New York Times to talk about "routine mystery drama" when describing The Scarlet Claw; it deserves a better word than that! Of course, Doyle is and always will be the one and only storyteller when it comes to Sherlock Holmes of Baker Street.

Coming Next Spring

Watch for a series of Six Great Trial Movies, to be presented under the auspices of the Lane Film Society. The films will be held Friday evenings at Marsh Life Sciences Auditorium. The films will be Judgement at Nuremberg, To Kill a Mockingbird, The Trial, Inherit the Wind, The Caine Mutiny, and The Pudding Case. HOW ABOUT A $600 KENWOOD/ADVENT SYSTEM FOR $399?

A special purchase of KENWOOD 707 control sections makes possible our most powerful $399 ADVENT system ever! The 707 has 90 RMS watts and a fine low noise tuning section. Included is a precision PE 2034 automatic turntable with PICKERING cartridge. The smaller ADVENT loudspeaker will put out awesome sound when powered by the 707. Most of the stereo magazines couldn't believe the low bass available from the ADVENTS. Come on in and surprise yourself (this kind of sound costs twice as much 3 years ago—if you haven't auditioned a stereo recently, you may be missing a lot!). The KENWOOD alone sold for $450. We think you'll enjoy paying $399 for the KENWOOD and the magnificent smaller ADVENT loudspeakers.

COMPONENT QUALITY - COMPACT PRICE

Before you decide your budget won't stand: component quality we'd like you to take a look at this CAMBRIDGE AUDIO music system. Unlike compact or gaudy home entertainment units, this system concentrates on the sound basics. The CAMBRIDGE AUDIO 1000 AM/FM receiver features clean audio power and a sensitive preamplifier to accommodate magnetic cartridge phonographs. The BSR 310X magnetic cartridge phonograph looks somewhat like the units in the home entertainment special, but tracks your records with less than half the force. The TDC II loudspeakers are true two-way design, acoustic suspension—less impressive looking than some thin walled open back units but much better sounding. Take the time to choose—everything but the kitchen sink or good sound. We think you'll choose components. List price: $280.

NEWS FROM PIONEER AND KLF

And good news for value conscious music lovers, it is. The PIONEER 424 receiver featured in this system gives you more performance than last year's 440, more features and looks much better. And costs LESS. The new KLF 38 loudspeaker, sounds like a $90 speaker, looks like a $90 speaker and costs $82.50 (even before Tech's generous discount!) we wouldn't want to disappoint your records so we've included the reliable BSR 310X with base, cover and SHURE magnetic cartridge. List price: $375.

BIG SOUND FROM SANSUI AND STUДИОCRAFT

If you've got a large room to fill with music this could well be the music system for you. The SANSUI 1000X has lots of power, a great tuning section and all the most desired control features (even two tape monitors). The 1000X can get lots of sound out of the STUДИОCRAFT 440 floor standing loudspeakers. You're assured of quality from the 440's because they're production controlled by the exclusive syncom audio computer. The high precision MIRACORD 625 automatic turntable with ADC 90E induced magnetic cartridge, base, and cover, gives you a choice of low wear record playing or AM/FM stereo from the tuner so you'll have good music to listen to for a long, long time. List price: $850.

saying that it would allow us to communicate with ourselves for the first time." The committee will be composed of the chairman of the Senate, the chairman of the Senate, two members elected at large by the Senate and anyone else appointed by the Senate Chairman. Another motion proposed by Glenn Austin calling for an audit of the SA Accounts by the Senate Auditing Class was passed. The Senate passed a motion that "directs" the Administration of this University and specifically the office of the Dean of Students to end its policy of keeping student donors which contain "secret" personality evaluations. We further demand that such existing files be open to the individual students discretion as far as what information they wish to

Two new motions were proposed to the Senate and duly tabled until next week. One of the motions asked that the Senate financial hearings held next spring be moved up by one month. The other motion asked that President Bill Sisco report in writing at every Senate meeting on his activities of the previous week.

INSIDER

by Zach Ramsey

This Saturday, on December 9, 1972, at 12 noon, the UVM Indoor track team starts its season with the third Annual Invitational Track meet.

Male and Female competitors alike will compete in this meet. Teams as far East as Washington D.C. to as far west as Detroit, Michigan, and of course our friends from Canada, will compete in the wide range of track and field events.

Coming off a good cross-country season, the indoor track team will be gifted with some outstanding freshmen, backed up by returning veterans such as Captain Frank O'Brien (the hippie). Sprinters and distance runners alike are looking good in this early season. In the field events, the shot put and hammerthrow will be bolstered by refugees of the football team, since Mike Bika, the premier shot putter of the Yankee Conference will not be with us.

There should have been a lot of names mentioned, but I feel that when this track meet is over, you will hear the names of those and others who will make the UVM track team one of the best in the Yankee Conference. Headed by Bill Nodde, assisted by Ed (Kool Kuz) Kuziak, the UVM track team is expected to do well this week and next week when they meet the University of Maine December 16. The meets will be held at the Gardner Collins cage, indoor track. Hope to see you there, supporting the efforts of our team. Note: UVM Girls' Track Club will make its debut in this meet. So come out and see what they look like, guys!!!!

Glimpses of the glorious Globetrotters.

Cats Trounce

UVM opened its 1972-73 season in a respectable way by defeating the Minutemen of UMass 6-4.

UVM was the first to score at 6:10 in the opening period when O'Connell scored on a rebound shot over the goalie Erickson, who was down on the ice after blocking a series of shots. O'Connell slammed in the first goal on a power play as the Minutemen's Lonnie Avery was in the box for tripping. Billy Koch and Roger Mallette had assists on the play.

Umass recovered quickly and took advantage of a UVM penalty at 10:08 to tie the score at one all. Andy Rickard had received a penalty to set up the power play for UMass. The score was set up when Bill Harris fed Steve Lowe. Erickson blocked this shot, but Avery pounced on the rebound and drove home the tying shot, while Erickson was down on the ice.

The first period ended at one all. UVM came out of the locker rooms for the second period like a shot. That they were fired up was plain to see.

Castle scored the first goal of that period and his first for this season 19 seconds into the period. It was set up with the help of Wright and Hunt. As these two came streaking towards the net, Patti took a shot which Erickson blocked and while the Mass goalie was on the ice, Castle flipped in the shot.

Thirty seconds later, Wright scored for the second goal of the period.

Castle had passed to Hunt and when the UMass defensemen came in on him, he slid a pass to Wright who drove it home into the right corner. That made the score 3-1.

A little less than a minute later, Billy Koch lit the lamp for the third time to make the score 4-1. Assists go to Murphy immediate post-abortion care in which the vital signs are checked for complications. Usually after thirty minutes a woman will feel normal and spend the remaining time in Recovery Two reading and talking.

Abortions and counseling done by the VWHC are confidential and non-profit.

The center works with UVM's Wason Infirmary, and Ms. Helvig pointed out that a portion of the cost of an abortion for a UVM student is covered by the health insurance. Of the two women physicians at the Center, Dr. Judy Tyson and Emma Wendberg, the latter is involved in work at the Wason Infirmary. There are four other part-time staff, of whom three are males, making a collective staff of twelve, which is increasing with volunteer help.

In the recent November 7 election, the Vermont Women's Health Center faced a challenge put to it by the Town of Colchester Selectmen. The vote was to determine whether or not an abortion clinic should be allowed in Colchester. A controversy was aroused by, as Ms. Helvig stated, "a few very vocal people who are opposed to the rights of women to make decisions about their own bodies." She felt that the outcome of the vote was a voice of acceptance by the women and young people in the Colchester community.

A major problem facing the VWHC is that as a non-profit clinic, they charge patients only their costs and have no organized program at present to solicit contributions.

"Right You Are" Is "Stunning"

by Margo Howland

There has been much written about the nature of truth, but one can never find all the truth. I Ching and other ponderous tomes of heavy philosophical thought. Luigi Pirandello says it all in his excellent parable, Right You Are If You Think You Are, presented this past week by the talented University Players of the Department of Communications and Theatre.

Set in Italy, the story concerns a group of curious neighbors that get more than they bargained for when they pry into the private affairs of a family of eccentric newcomers. Signor Ponzia, the new secretary of the Prefect, lives with his wife on the fifth floor of a wretched tenement, while he pays for the lodgings of his mother-in-law in a comfortable apartment. The family associates with no one; the fellow will not even let his mother-in-law into the house to see his wife, yet he sees his mother-in-law every day.

This state of affairs is of great interest to the constituents of Signor Ponzia, and causes a lively amount of discussion. The innocent moving and plotting of Signor Agazzi, his wife and daughter, and their friends the Signor Strelli, force the family to make some kind of explanation. The tragic loss the family suffered is related to the group by the only member present that shows any compassion - Lambert Laudisi, the brother of Signora Agazzi. Laudisi refuses to involve himself directly in the controversy but remains an interested and intelligent "observer." Laudisi's friends and relatives cannot leave well enough alone when they encounter two conflicting, credible and equally tragic explanations of the situation, but must race about in a futile attempt to garner facts.

Laudisi, manages to completely confuse everyone, and then observes that as long as the family is happy now, it doesn't matter - which explanation is accepted. His friends however will not let the subject drop, for they cannot distinguish between truth and illusion - the truth, being the facts as they exist, and illusion, being the explanations, neither of which can both be right, but either one sufficient in itself. The final confrontation with the one party that can supposedly resolve the whole matter is handled with great psychological insight and leaves us with a lesson: truth is only in the mind of the beholder, and nothing more or less than what one makes it out to be - right you are if you think you are.

This play, with its overtones of humor, tragedy and serious thought, was directed by Christopher Lane with stunning results. The role of Lambert Laudisi, played by Edward Chemaly, was very well done. He portrays the droll and compassionate uncle with intelligence and sensitivity. It is not easy to sit on a chair-front stage and gaze out at the audience, keep attuned to the rest of the performance, and maintain one's composure all at the same time. Chemaly does, and handles the observer-narrator role as well.

Teresa Elwert, as Signora Ponzia, the mother-in-law, maintains an air of dignity and credibility throughout the play. In an emotion-charged confrontation with Ponzia, she comes across so realistically that one gets the uncomfortable feeling of intruding on a troubled mother in time of sorrow, instead of watching an actress. The act becomes so real that one long to be able to calm this tormented spirit.

Mark Camella, as Ponzia, the man who cannot be left in peace, plays a demanding role with fine results.

Diana Schermerhorn is on the stage for the shortest amount of time, yet her role as the mysterious Signora Ponzia is so vital that the point of the whole play hinges upon her words. She is excellent!

Credit for a fine performance must also go to Jennifer Allen, the noisy, opinionated Signora Strelli, and to Susan Kovrick, who plays the charming, persuasive Signora Agazzi with an easy grace which belies the long hours of practice necessary in a play of this nature.

much and carries a lively amount of of discussion. The incessant prying and plotting of Signor Agazzi, his wife and daughter, and their friends the Signor Strellis, force the family to make some kind of explanation. The tragic loss the family suffered is related to the group by the only member present that shows any compassion—Lamberto Laudisi, the brother of Signor Agazzi. Laudisi refuses to involve himself directly in the controversy but remains an interested and intelligent "observer." Laudisi's friends and relatives cannot leave well enough alone when they recount two conflicting, credible and equally tragic explanations of the situation, but must race about in a futile attempt to garner facts.
Laudisi, manages to completely confuse everyone, and then observes that as long as the family is happy now, it doesn't matter which explanation is accepted. His friends however will not let the subject drop, for they cannot distinguish between truth and illusion—the truth, being the facts as they exist, and illusion, being the explanations, neither of which can both be right, but either one sufficient in itself.
The final confrontation with the one party that can supposedly resolve the whole matter is handled with great psychological insight and leaves us with a lesson: truth is only in the mind of the beholder, and nothing more or less than what one makes it out to be—right you are if you think you are.

This play, with its overtones of humor, tragedy and serious thought, was directed by Christopher Lam with stunning results—the role of Lamberto Laudisi, played by Edward Chemaly, was very well done. He portrays the droll and compassionate uncle with intelligence and sensitivity. It is not easy to sit on a chair front stage and gaze out at the audience, keep attuned to the rest of the performance, and maintain one's composure all at the same time. Chemaly does, and handles the observer-narrator role as well.

Teresa Elwert, as Signora Frola, the mother-in-law, maintains an air of dignity and credibility throughout the play. In an emotion-charged confrontation with Ponza, she comes across so realistically that one gets the uncomfortable feeling of intruding on a troubled mother in time of sorrow, instead of watching an actress. The act becomes so real that one long to be able to calm this tornamented spirit.

Mark Camilla, as Ponza, the man who cannot be left in peace, plays a demanding role with fine results.
Diana Schermerhorn is on the stage for the shortest amount of time, yet her role as the mysterious Signora Ponza is so vital that the point of the whole play hinges upon her words. She is excellent!
Credit for a fine performance must also go to Jennifer Allen, the noisy, opinionated Signora Strellis, and to John Kovarik, who plays the charming, persuasive Don Agazzi with an easy grace which belies the long hours of practice necessary in a play of this nature.

THE INSIDER

by Eli Tuttle
As we skated off the ice after the third period of the UMass game last Saturday night, the pressure was off.
However, it was not until that final whistle that we were able to relax, for the Minutemen of the University of Massachusetts never let up. They are a well coached team and have some top notch players on their roster. However, we were not to be denied.
Overall, the team did not play its best as a unit, but the key to the win was the outstanding effort put out by a few individuals. Goals: Steve Eckerson stands out as the first star selection unquestionably. This was the third game in a row in which he has pulled us out of many pressure situations. When he stuffed Pat Keenan on a breakaway, the game went our way. The second star must go to the line of O'Connell, Mallette, and Koch. Their consistent, two-way performances were a delight to watch. Their execution of plays was beautiful, and it resulted in two of our fine goals.
The third star goes to Ted Castle. We all knew "he was due," and he exploded Saturday night. He was in the right place at the right time on numerous occasions, and both his goals were rebounds. His effective size (6'1", 180) makes him immovable in front of the net. His game winning tally with just one minute remaining was an apt climax to a very exciting game.

A word must be said about the fans. They added a great deal to the game. The packed house of over 4,000 fans seemed to keep the spirit alive and stifle UMass more than once. Perhaps, an additional star-performance must go to all of them. We all thank you.

goal by Ted Castle. After John Murphy tried a slap shot which the UMass goalie blocked with his stick, Castle took the rebound and slipped it into the open net.
The final score of the game occurred with 14 seconds left.
O'Connell cleared the puck from the UVM blue line and sent it sliding toward the open net to make the score 6-4.

Cats Trounce UMass 6-4

UVM opened its 1972-73 season in a resounding way by defeating the Minutemen of UMass 6-4.
UVM was the first to score at 6:10 in the opening period when O'Connell scored on a rebound shot over the goalie Eckerson, who was down on the ice after blocking a series of shots. O'Connell slammed in the first goal on a power play as the Minutemen's Lonnie Avery was in the box for tripping Billy Koch and Roger Mallette had assists on the play.

UMass recovered quickly and took advantage of a UVM penalty at 10:06 to tie the score at one all. Andy Rickard had received a penalty to set up the power play for UMass.
The score was set up when Bill Harris fed Steve Lowe.
Eckerson blocked this shot, but Avery pounced on the rebound and drove home the tieding shot, while Eckerson was down on the ice.

The first period ended at one all.
UVM came out of the locker room for the second period like a shot. That they were fired up was plain to see.
Castle scored the first goal of that period and his first for this season 19 seconds into the period. It was set up with the help of Wright and Hunt. As these two came streaking towards the net, Patty took a shot which Erickson blocked and while the Mass goalie was on the ice, Castle flipped in the shot.

Thirty seconds later, Wright scored for the second goal of the period.
Castle had passed to Hunt and when the UMass goalie came out to clear the puck, he did a pass to Wright who drove it home into the right corner.
That made the score 3-1.

A little less than a minute later, Billy Koch lit the lamp for the third time to make the score 4-1. Assists go to Murphy who then passed to Koch on the left of the goalie. Billy then let loose a shot that streaked between Erickson's legs to score the fourth goal.

Right when it seemed to everyone that UVM had the game sewed up, O'Connell got socked with five minute penalty for interference with the goalie. During the five minutes he was in the box, UMass was able to score two goals.

The first goal was scored by Keenan at 7:01 with Avery getting the assist. At 11:42,

Don Riley scored for the Minutemen with assists going to Mulcahy and Connors.
Mulcahy took a shot from the corner and Riley deflected it in. Eckerson was effectively screened out of the play. These two goals made the score 4-3.
Four minutes into the third period, UMass tied the score on a power play goal by Bob Schillie. Murphy was in the box with an interference penalty.
With one minute and one second left in the final period, UVM went ahead for good on a Our's is a young look... easy, comfortable and practical. By practical, we mean outfits that can be worn at school, work, out on a date, for almost any occasion. For example: an Underground shirt can be worn with anything—pants, a skirt, jeans, with or without a sweater. Whatever you choose.

Something else. Price. Underground clothes are often more expensive than you

Budweiser Brewing Chart

ADOLPHUS BUSCH

Because malt is so important in brewing, we use the finest Western two-row barley available in addition to the Midwest six-row variety. The extra cost of this premium barley is worth it, since it makes for a milder, more pleasant beer. Here, our barley is first cleaned, graded, washed and steeped, then allowed to germinate for a minimum of five days under a gentle stream of humid air in slowly revolving drums.

Penetrating heat halts the sprouting process and dries the grain. Rootlets are screened off.

The cleaned barley malt is stored until needed for grinding in the Brew House.

Meanwhile, specially selected rice is crushed in separate mills and weighed. Budweiser is brewed with rice (including actual table-grade rice) even though many brewers use corn syrup instead because it is much cheaper. But corn syrup is not for Budweiser.

The ground rice and barley malt are wetted with clear, filtered water (absolutely ideal for quality brewing) and cooked. This mash is then strained in huge tanks, producing a clear amber liquid called wort.

The hopped wort is strained, pumped to cooling towers, and then to fermenting cellars. Yeast, made from our own special pure culture, is added and fermentation begins.

In these patented Anheuser-Busch fermenters, the brewers' yeast changes sugars from malt and rice into alcohol and carbon dioxide.

Many beers would be ready for artificial carbonation, filtering and bottling at this point, but not Budweiser. Instead, it goes to huge tanks in the lager cellars. Here, beechwood strips are spread across the bottom of each lager tank, beer is pumped in, freshly yeasted wort is added, and the beer is allowed to carbonate itself naturally as it ferments and ages, slowly and quietly a second time.

(This is the exclusive Budweiser Beechwood Ageing process. It takes more time (actually as much as three times as long as the process some beers use) and costs more money, but the strips of beechwood provide extra surface for the brewers' yeast to cling to—and help clarify the beer naturally.)

The final step: the beer is carefully filtered—creating the sparkling brilliance and clarity that have made Budweiser famous throughout the industry. And the world.

Hops are the "seasoning" of fine beer. Only the choicest imported hops from the honored fields of Central Europe and the very best of domestic blooms from the western United States are used in brewing Budweiser. (Absolutely no extract is used!) The result is Bud's rich, mild aroma and snappy, refreshing taste. Here, these choice hops are added to the wort, which is boiled in giant huge kettles until the wort has assumed just the right delicate hop flavor.

UVM Housing Situation Relatively Under Control

By Scott Carver

The winter dormitory situation at UVM is relatively under control, according to the UVM housing office. The office has control of the situation, which last semester had 150 vacancies in the male and female dormitories. The office is now in the process of moving students into the new dormitories designed for the year.

Dr. Keith Miser, Housing Director, reported that as of Thursday, Jan. 18, there are 90 vacancies in the male dorms, which women are filling. There are three to a room, no one is in the lounge, 15 vacancies and a waiting list of 17 people. There are 44 vacancies in the female dorms with no waiting list.

This is the first time since July 1, says Dr. Miser, that we've been out from under an emergency overflow situation. July 1, 1972, was when Miser first reported there would be a problem. Although the housing office reported last semester that the overflow was caused by a greater than expected influx of freshmen, Miser now says the overflow was the result of 180 upperclass students living off campus who decided to come back into the dormitories. "There was a sharp drop off from past year in the number of students dropping their contracts before the July 1 penalty date," he stated.

Miser's response to the situation was to establish a priority list of randomly selected freshmen applicants who were assigned to live in the overflowed dorms. Those with the lowest numbers were given the least desirable places and, as spaces became available, were the first to move into normal accommodations.

A few students and parents were upset at the situation, said Miser, "but in general, all of the students have been very cooperative."

Terry Flanagan, residence advisor to Redstone Two (Wing, Davis, Wilks, and Simpson Halls), attributes the greater numbers of students returning to the dorms to relaxed rules and regulations, including 24-hour parties. He doesn't believe that the overcrowding caused many hardships for students and said that in some cases it was difficult to convince students to move out of lounges.

Asked her reaction to living in a tripled up room, Marion Janosvick, a freshman in Patterson Hall, replied, "It doesn't really bother me, but it is kind of small. She shares half the closet and dresser space with one roommate, while the other takes half for herself. Because she's an upperclassman and we're both freshmen."

Nevertheless, she still in the triple because, as she says, "We got along well together so we decided not to move."

is hardly ever here, is willing to move, but the name on the priority list is Robyn's.

They were first told that it didn't matter which roommate moved. Later, however, they were told by the Housing Office that Robyn was the only one that could move.

Matters were complicated when last semester they were advised to sign a form and were told that everything would be straightened out this year. The form said that they were willing to stay in a triple. As a result, this semester they are at the end of the waiting list behind new freshmen and transfer students.

When told of the situation Miser responded, "That really bothers me. Because we've spent a lot of time on direct communications to students so that there wouldn't be any misunderstanding like this."

He said that moving out of a triple depended on the situation and that he often got different versions of the situation from people living together. "There are some mistakes that we've made," admitted Miser, "but we've tried to do everything as fairly as possible."

On October 16 of last semester, each student living in a triple was given a choice of three different versions of the situation from people living together. "There are some mistakes that we've made," admitted Miser, "but we've tried to do everything as fairly as possible."

New Winter Carnival Set For February 1-3

The University of Vermont's First Annual Winter Carnival will be held February 1-3, will incorporate, along with an extensive variety of varsity sports events, a series of entertainment and activities presented by the S.A., I.R.A., Fraternity Forum and the Panhellenic Council.

This year's Winter Carnival replaces unsuccessful efforts by students to start a new tradition replacing KakeWalk, an athletic dancing event kicked out in 1969 by some members of the UVM community as discriminatory to blacks. In recent years since the demise of KakeWalk, film festivals and speakers were attempted to arouse the interest of the community.

The activities for this year's carnival will be kicked off Friday, February 1, with a gamut of events at Bolton Valley Ski Area, the site of the alpine ski events. In keeping with the true carnival flair, the Ski Carnival Circuit brings to each campus its visits, bus service will be provided from the Billings Center at Bolton Valley and back at regular intervals throughout the day. Also available to UVM students will be a free smorgasbord lunch, a hot ticket, special entertainment in the Valley. This is an all possible, but a change in the Spring Semester calendar, naming February 1-3 the University of Vermont Winter Carnival Weekend with no classes on Friday, rather than the scheduled February 10th date.

Following the day's activities at Bolton Valley is the Vermont Colby hockey game at the Gutterton Field House Friday evening. The Winter Carnival Directors have made arrangements for professional ice shows to be presented to winter audiences before both the Colby and Bowdoin Games (Friday and Saturday evenings) arranged by Miss Bobbi Levitt, a longtime favorite of Vermont Hockey fans. Also arranged for the hockey crowds in skis to be performed on the ice by the Ski Carnival Circuit brings to each campus its visits, bus service will be provided from the Billings Center at Bolton Valley and back at regular intervals throughout the day. Also available to UVM students will be a free smorgasbord lunch, a hot ticket, special entertainment in the Valley. be keeping with the Winter Carnival Theme of "A Growing Tradition."

Saturday brings in the ski events at Bolton and a jump at the new UVM center hill in Williston. A snow day will be given to the Student Association and organizations have planned winter games to be held on the green by the UVM. Students participated in by any living unit. Details for the games and skis are being received by the living units this week. Along with the ice show, skis and hockey games against Bowdoin, Saturday evening the Directors will present the carnival awards to all winners.

The Fraternity system has coordinated the party schedule for the entire weekend with their events following the two hockey games.

The first Winter Carnival Directors include: Chairman of Events, Peter Neary and Tom Hunt; Events Coordinator, Bill Siss; Athletic Department personnel, Chip Lafosse; Carnival Director, Steve Wood; and Director of Alpine, Don Rathbone.

Plan For University Reorganization Receives Mixed Reactions

Applied Sciences, consisting of the college of Agriculture and other professionally oriented programs, would "bring together the professional programs engineering, agriculture, home economics, nursing, administration, computer sciences, forestry, regional planning, and land use planning."

He says he is "open" to new ideas and suggestions. Groups, committees, as well as individuals are encouraged to contact any member of the Board of Trustees regarding his or her feelings about the task force report.

On the specific recommendations put forth by the committee, there has been much concern over the wording of one of the recommendations, where it has been stated that the Colleges of Technology, Agriculture, and Home Economics be dissolved, and that other programs be reorganized in a new college of Applied Sciences. The terminology has misled many, leading them to think it was the end of these colleges.

Some are against such recommendations, that the agriculture's professional program become joined in a single department within a new college. It is considered "downgrading," commented the UVM Board Chairman. "It is not the intention of the Task Force to downgrade the agriculture services. On the contrary, we want to strengthen them," replied those in favor. The committee chairman Dr. Christensen said that detailed explanations will show that "individual program identities would be maintained."

Both colleges of Agriculture and Home Economics, and Technology have conducted extensive self evaluations. Such review has taken up to a year and a half.

UVM board chairman, Dr. Robert O'Brien has said "If further reorganization is necessary, we must be careful to ensure that such reorganization results in a more efficient operation and a better quality program."

"If we merely rearrange the same old pieces in a new format, we will have gained nothing and may stand to lose much."

angle that is applicable to their own discipline. Deans from the College of Agriculture and Home Economics have prepared a twelve-page counter-proposal to a collegiate reorganization plan which was released last month by the special Presidential Task Force. While they say that the Task Force "spotlighted" areas of duplication, the deans cautioned against "restructuring that would attempt to join programs similar in name only," as quoted by the Burlington Free Press (January 12, 1973).

The deans' counter-proposal, in response to the committee's recommendation that the College of Agriculture be "dissolved" and that most programs be reorganized in a new college of Applied Sciences, mentions several specific recommendations and another general recommendation which pictures a new college of "Agriculture" with added curricula.

According to their proposed reorganization, areas of study, such as engineering, home economics, and biological sciences, would receive school status to allow identity, yet would not be burdened with separate administrative structures.

They emphasized in their report that "Vermont is the third most rural state in the nation. In recognition of this, the six New England state university presidents have agreed to phase out some of the agriculture programs in the southern three states, while the northern three, particularly Vermont, would reemphasize agriculture."

As a full committee, the Task Force has held eighteen sessions. Interviews have been held with directors, deans, departmental or program chairpersons, and have dealt with interested faculty and students. The eight member force has devoted over 1,000 person hours to their study and recommendations.

"Each committee member had the equivalent of three full weeks to study, evaluate, and make recommendations, thus allowing only two or three days per college," the deans of Agriculture report.

Faculty and students alike have indicated that they would "like to see the backup material and plans studied by the task force, and the reasons for their conclusions."

"What happened to the other alternatives studied by the committee that were not publicized?" one faculty member inquired.

Dr. Christensen has stated that such information will be published later in January in a detailed addendum to the Task Force's recommendation, released December 1, 1972, showing the rationale and analysis of the suggestions made by the committee.

President Andrews will continue on page three.

New Vice President: Doolin Returns From Retirement

By Daniel Haslam

Mr. Lawrence J. Doolin has been appointed to the post of interim Vice President for Development, a position vacated by the resignation of Mr. Walter Bruska to become Vice President for Administration at Kent State University in Ohio, effective January 1.

Doolin is not new to UVM; he is 1923 graduate and will celebrate his fiftieth reunion in May of this year. He has a record of over thirty years of service and work for the University in the areas of development and fund raising. He has served as chairman of the Alumni Bequest Committee and President of the Alumni Association. In 1964 Doolin was elected to the Board of Trustees and served as chairman of that Board during 1969-1970. He was chairman of the UVM Development Committee which, six years ago, laid the foundation for the present development program on which he now serves.

A professional insurance executive, Doolin retired as vice president of the Fidelity Mutual Life Insurance Company nine years ago. His insurance career began the day he left UVM as a graduate and had a span of forty-two years.

Doolin is confident in the success of the Development Program, and he cites the efforts of the 3300-400 volunteer workers throughout the country as evidence. "The University could never afford to pay these people for their efforts, and yet they are invaluable to us. We work with the University to try to get his familiarity with the people and functions of Development."

"My job is to keep up the momentum and build on the good start Walter Bruska and the staff made."

In 1968, Doolin was

UVM to explain his active retreat from retirement to assume the interim position as UVM's key figure in Development. He is expected to remain until a selection has been made to fill the post sometime before June 30.

Doolin is married to the former Ruth Blodgett (UVM '26) and returns to UVM from Winnewood, Pennsylvania.

The topic of discussion will be the Policy of Student-Faculty Relations.

Sorority Rush Begins

Sorority rush is not only a time of activity and "rush" but also an enriching experience whereby women broaden their knowledge by observing and participating in the UVM sorority system. Sorority may be defined as a group of women with similar varied interests, dedicated to individual ideals and goals yet sharing with other sororities the goals of leadership, scholarship, citizenship, and service. This definition is true but not complete.

A sorority is not only a "group of women" but more importantly, a sorority is individuals. Rushing provides the opportunities for meeting these individuals. Sorority means something different to each sister and pledge. These differences exist not only between the different houses but within houses. Belonging to a sorority is a unique learning and living experience for each member. During Rush new insights continue to evolve. Join us in Rush and become a part of this growth.

Arts And Sciences Appoints New Dean

A member of the economics and business administration faculty at the University of Vermont, Dr. Abbas Alnasrawi, has been named Associate Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Dean John G. Weiger announced that Professor Alnasrawi will succeed Dr. H. S. Muller, who has been named director of the Living/Learning Center at UVM.

A native of Iraq and a graduate of the University of Baghdad, Dr. Alnasrawi did his graduate study in economics and received the Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1965.

He joined the UVM faculty in 1963 as an instructor, and was later named assistant, and then associate, professor of economics and business administration.

During 1967-68 he was on leave from the University to serve as a senior economist with the National Planning Association in Washington, D.C., a non-profit economic research organization.

During his sabbatical year, 1971-72, he was in Vienna doing research in the Library of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) on economic aspects of the exploitation of oil in the Middle East.

'Patton Papers' Author To Open Military Department Talk Series

The author of "The Patton Papers," Martin Blumenson, will open the "Issues '73" lecture series sponsored by the University of Vermont's Department of Military Studies, Thursday (Jan. 25) at 4 p.m.

Blumenson, one of the country's leading military historians, has received acclaim for his recently published book, "The Patton Papers."

"Blumenson's lecture, entitled 'The Many Faces of Patton,' will be held in Room 208, Williams Science Hall (on University Row), and is open to the public free of charge.

The guest lecturer, a former professor of history at Hofstra and Acadia Universities, currently holds the Ernest J. King Chair of Maritime History at the Naval War College in Newport, R.I.

Blumenson also served as senior historian and deputy chief in the Office of the Chief of Military History, the Department of Army, in Washington.

Other works by Blumenson include the recent biography, Eisenhower (1972); Anzio: The Gamble That Failed (1963); and Sicily: Whose Victory? (1969). His recent book, The Patton Papers: Vol. I, 1885-1940, has been acclaimed as one of the top documentaries on the life of Gen. George S. Patton.

Following the Blumenson lecture, Jan. 25, the UVM Military Studies Department is planning three more lectures as part of the "Issues '73" series: Feb. 13 - Brig. Gen. S.L.A. Marshal, (Ret.), military historian and author of several books, Feb. 16 - Gen. George S. Patton, Jr., son of the famed general, who will discuss "Challenges of Today's Army" and March 5 - Gen. Julius Becton, deputy commanding general at Fort Dix.

All lectures are open to the public.

Residence Hall Situation...

a tripled up room was given a room refund of $67. This represents the difference between the regular semester charge and the cost of a room split three ways, less $10 for extra mattresses and furniture.

The university will refund a similar amount this semester.

Miser said, "I don't think we could have prevented this situation from happening last year, because we cannot predict what students are going to do."

In an attempt to prevent a repetition of the situation, Miser wants to send a questionnaire to each dorm resident asking for her plans for next year. No one will be bound by his answers.

Furthermore, Miser doesn't believe there have been any scholastic problems due to the overcrowding. "From talking to students, other than being crowded, I feel that their work at the university was not impaired."

Each resident hall provided cafeteria space that people could use for studying.

Miser plans to do follow-up studies in this area.

Scripts are available in various anthologies in the Library.

The best "stereo value" in town:

Individually, each of the components pictured above has created a new standard of sound-per-dollar stereo value. Together, these components will provide you with more quality sound and reliability than you could have bought a year ago for over five hundred dollars.

The DYNACO A25 Loudspeakers are the only speakers which can reproduce the entire musical range. Most inexpensive speakers cannot produce the lowest octaves of music: the lowest strings of a double bass or electric bass guitar, the lowest pipes of a pipe organ. The DYNACO A25 can.

The SONY STR6045 AM/FM stereo receiver has enough power to satisfy both you and the DYNACOS.

To match the quality and reliability that the SONY and the DYNACO represent, we recommend the BSRC 12 310 with a SHURE M76 cartridge. The BSRC has a heavy platter, a synchronous motor, a convenient cueing control and comes with a dustcover and base.

Come to Lafayette this week. You'll be surprised how much quality sound your four hundred dollars can buy.

Open VPIRG Elections

Next Week

Elections for UVM's representatives on the Vermont Public Interest Research Group's Board of Trustees will be held on Wednesday, January 31 and Thursday, February 1, from 10 A.M. to 4 P.M. in Billings Center, and from 5 P.M. to 6:30 P.M. in the dining halls. Students must present a valid UVM I.D. in order to vote.

Those who wish to run for positions as VPIRG trustees should sign up at the Student Activities Desk in Billings Center by 5 P.M. on Friday, January 26. Candidates will be required to submit a brief summary of their views on VPIRG's future direction by Monday, January 29, and these summaries will be available at polling places.

Bulletin Boards Improved

Billings Center has once again seen a re-organization in its bulletin board space. The board on the main floor, Billings Center, is for advertising events of interest to the campus wide community. The two boards in the North Den, lower Billings and the board in lower Waterman have been re-organized under specific headings. Under "Student Notices" one will find Housing; For Sale/Wanted, Winter Equipment, Vehicles, Miscellaneous, Services, Wanted/Rendered.

In spite of the re-organization of the Bulletin boards, there still seems to be a problem of space, some people make really beautiful artistic notices; others, well... Beauty is not the issue, however. The size of the notice may make it very difficult for others to share their needs. So, within the next week, there will be pre-cut notice slips available. Please use them, as it will enable more people to share their needs in a hopefully more cohesive, coherent way.

Suggestions are being looked to for re-organizing the Ride Board in Lower Billings. If you have any suggestions at all about the bulletin boards please write them down and have them at the Student Activities Desk, Billings Center.

CENTER FOR HUMAN POTENTIAL (East Montpelier) RD 2 Bristol Vt 05441

Editorial: Peace With Honor?

The announcement that the war in Indochina has come to an end and that our desires have apparently been met makes this a time of joy and elation for most of us—and rightfully so. But our relief and happiness will not be shared by thousands of young men who had dreams and aspirations very much like our own, because a few people could not determine what peace with honor really was.

It is obvious that negotiating a peace settlement between several nations is no simple task. It is equally apparent that, at least to our nation's leaders, facesaving is more important than human life. We must ask ourselves, at this time, if the actions of a handful of men, who could not determine the meaning of three words "peace with honor" justifies the lost lives. Do their months and years of negotiating atone for those fortunate enough to be spared the enemy's bullet, who must rebuild not only their farms and cities, but their entire lives? These are questions asked at the end of every war. And yet we continue and probably will continue our bloody path.

We must live on. We must live on with the faith that our leaders did their best. We must live on with the realization that if our leaders did not do the best that could have been done, then it is our fault for giving them power. Finally, we must live on with the hope that man will learn from his mistakes; there is no other way.

Thank God that we can dream, for a while at least, that there will be no more war.

A Sign Of The Times Students Remain Unconcerned

by Barbara Frankel

The nineteen-sixties were turbulent, active years for the college student, who, restless and impatient with the desire to better his world, fought battle after battle to improve his university.

Well, he won most of his battles. Across the country, minority study programs, co-ed dormitories, clinics offering sexual advice and, in many cases, dispensing methods of birth control, have been innovated. And so the college activist of the sixties graduated, satisfied that he had accomplished what generations of students before him were unable to do.

There has been one slight flaw in this happy ending: The involved, concerned student of the sixties gave way to the passive, self-centered student of the seventies. Unlike his older brothers and sisters, today's average college student is primarily concerned with finding "where his head is at". He feels that his main responsibility is to himself and not to his fellow students and citizens.

I am not condemning the student of the seventies for attempting to further understand and improve himself. These are highly commendable goals in anyone, especially a student. There should be, however, a time when one temporarily puts aside looking at oneself and looks at the surrounding world. For the college student this means looking at his university.

Our present Student Association is all too frequently a farce, a comedy in which a few featured performers constantly do their bits. It need not be so. Some responsible, concerned student leaders do exist, who are willing to devote their time and abilities in an effort to improve this university. They cannot accomplish anything, however, without the support and enthusiasm of the student body.

A new semester is starting and it looks as if the same people who have previously done such an ineffectual job are going to continue their reign. The passive student of the seventies seems unconcerned as to the future of his Student Association and of his university. Perhaps the time has come, as we enter a new year, for a return to concern by our student body.

William Joseph McNicol, III, 21, died in a one-car automobile accident in Darien, Connecticut on December 24th. He fell asleep at the wheel and was alone at the time of the accident. His car struck a telephone pole about a mile and a half from his home. Death was instantaneous.

McNicol was born February 8th, 1951, and was the only son of William Joseph and Alice Russell McNicol of 5 Laurel Lane, Darien, Connecticut.

A graduate of Darien High School and entered UVM in 1969, he was to graduate from the College of Engineering in May, 1973. Bill was president of Tau Beta Pi Engineer Honor Society and was voted into membership in "Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities."

After living at University Housing at the Sheraton Motor Inn for two years, McNicol here at UVM sometime during the spring. The date of the service will be announced later. Memorial contributions may be made to the William J. McNicol III Scholarship Fund, care of, Darien High School, Darien, Conn. 06820.

What's In A Name?

by Stuart Dedopoulos

People's names have always fascinated me and I think part of the reason may go back to my grade school days when no one ever pronounced my own name correctly. That started to aggravate me, although I can't expect you Smiths and Jones to understand. A case in point was an incident I had with my eighth grade English teacher. He walked into class the first day and told us his name was Mr. Bellavance. I was not paying much attention and later regretted it. When he came to my name while reading the class list he said, "Stuart Dedopoulos." I must have given him a funny look as he asked me if that was incorrect. I corrected him, saying that it was Dedopoulos, not Depopoulos. He must have thought that I was some kind of wise guy because he said, "All right, then, how do you pronounce my name?" As I said I was not paying attention before and therefore had to guess. Since I figured he was a Frenchman I decided to pronounce the name as a Frenchman might, and I answered, "Mr. Bellavance." "Listen," he said, "I'll get your name right when you get mine right, okay Depopoulos?" "That's fine with me, Mr. Bellavance," I retorted, "That's fine with me." Anyway I think my fascination with names goes even further than that. After you have grown up with people with names like Demetrius Constantine Yankopolus and Vasilios Kalogredis you can't help but develop an interest in names.

If you have the patience you can do many interesting things with names. For example, have you ever noticed how many people have a name that fits their occupation or their competence? You probably couldn't think of a better name for a great quarterback than Bart STARR. What about the referee who does professional basketball games, which have to be some of the fastest moving contests in the world. Is there a better name for an official than Eddie RUSH? And isn't Rolfe FINGERS a terrific name for a baseball pitcher? This doesn't have to apply solely to sports figures, though.

A politician, who is in the business of governing people, would be hard-pressed to think of a better name than George McGOVERN. And what better name for an evangelist than ORAL Roberts? We even have some examples here at UVM. In the Economics Department is Gene LABER and in the Religion Department we have LUTHER MARTIN. See what I'm driving at? However, there are some exceptions to this rule. Who would expect a mild-mannered, easy-going hockey coach to have a name like Jim CROSS.

There are other games you can play also. Did you ever notice that some people really have no last name? Ann-Margret, for example, really has two first names, Ann and Margret, but in her case, who cares? If you want to you can even make a joke out of someone's name. Do you know what they call a Portuguese person who sleeps in an automobile? Cardozo. Need I offend other nationalities?

However, perhaps the most interesting thing you can do with a person's name is to examine it to determine how it came about. Johnson of course means son of John. People named Smiths probably had relatives who were blacksmiths; and those in the Grossman family probably had undesirable relatives at one time. However, not all names are this easy. How can an average person explain the fact that many White people have the last name of Black and many Black people have the last name of White? And what is that person to think when he turns to the sports page of his local newspaper and sees a name like Gene Brabender?

from The Chronicle of Higher Education
A national commission on academic tenure has warned colleges and universities not to grant tenure to more than one-half to two-thirds of their faculty members.

In the academic community's first in-depth response to the mounting criticism of tenure in recent years, the commission has concluded that institutions need tenure quotas to avoid becoming "tenured-in" with too many young faculty members and, as a result, having too little opportunity to bring in new people.

The commission has determined even more resolutely that tenure's value in protecting academic freedom is too important to higher education to allow tenure to be abolished, as some critics have urged. Thus the panel has advised against such alternatives to tenure as renewable contracts.

At the same time, it has proposed steps to make faculty members more accountable for their teaching effectiveness and conduct, and to help institutions improve their policies on staff planning.

One key recommendation calls for a probationary period of at least five years before commission last spring found that more than a fourth of all colleges providing tenure had shorter probationary terms.

Another commission proposal would have colleges give reasons to faculty members denied reappointment or tenure. The panel also would grant students an explicit and formal role in evaluating their teachers' effectiveness.

These and other results of the commission's 10-month review of tenure were made known last week by its director, William R. Keast, in a speech at the annual meeting of the Association of American Colleges. The commission's official report, still in press, is expected to be published in about two months.

The study was conducted in 1971-72 with a $125,000 grant from the Ford Foundation. Described as an independent effort, the study was co-sponsored by the AAC and the American Association of University Professors, the two groups that initiated the profession's widely accepted 1940 Statement of Principles on Academic Freedom and Tenure.

That document, says the survey conducted for the tenure—and its assurance of continuous employment except for gross incompetence or misconduct—with the concept of academic freedom. "Central to the integrity"

In defending tenure primarily on this basis, the commission has clearly rejected the contention that academic freedom would be adequately protected by the Constitution and the courts.

"Academic freedom is so central to the integrity of our educational institutions... that academic tenure, in the

Mr. Keast, former president of Wayne State University and now chairman of the English department and director of the higher education center at the University of Texas at Austin, previewed these other observations from the commission's forthcoming report.

That colleges should express tenure quotas "as ranges or limits rather than as fixed percentages." The reason, Mr. Keast explained, is that fixed quotas would operate differently—and often unfairly—in departments of different sizes and faculty age groups. The quotas also should be flexible enough to allow for differences among instructional units at a college, he said. That virtually all colleges should "provide explicitly for a substantial increase... in the tenure component of women and members of minority groups."

This last point, in combination with the commission's advocacy of some kind of tenure quota, could lead to a considerable reduction in new tenure awards at many institutions, at least in the short run.

According to Mr. Keast, tenure has been conferred "very generously." At most institutions, he said, more than 80 per cent of the faculty members being considered for tenure in 1971 were awarded it, with 42 per cent of the institutions granting it to all candidates.

Meanwhile, only about 6 per cent of all institutions—mainly private four-year colleges—set any limits on the proportion of tenured faculty members.

The commission's backing of sanctions short of dismissal, Mr. Keast said, followed the "conviction that faculty self-discipline has often been paralyzed because dismissal is the only sanction contemplated under standard procedures."

The Inter-Residence Association held its meeting of the second semester January 22, 1973 in Harris-Mills Recreation Room. The meeting was called order at 7:00 p.m. by President Heller. In the course of meeting the following items were presented:

Paul Vey announced in Treasurer's report that had a current balance $1,249.16. This does include the $4,000 that will receive for this semester. The IRA held a successful dance to welcome second-semester freshmen transfer students to UVM. The $450 appropriated by the for the dance, expenses little more than half amount—$250.

It was announced that there will be no classes on Friday, February 2. Winter Week will commence on that day, run through Sunday, February 4. The change from the original date of February 16 was result of a vote by the Student Association.

Events planned for Winter Weekend will include hockey game against Colby Friday night at 7:30. Guttererson Field House Saturday night at 7:30. U plays Bowdoin, again Guttererson Field House series of winter games will Friday night, and sculptures and a Winter Carnival Ski Jump on Williams Road are also planned. There will be a special rate students at Bolton-Valley Area, to include skiing, and transportation. (See next week's Cynic for details.) Drivers will be needed to get Bolton Valley and back. Variety Of Entertainment Highlights Volunteer Programs At OVP Fair

by Deborah Cadwell

Fluttering crane paper, drifting balloons and Ted Tug, the Magician, were the same last week at the OVP Fair in North Lonsing, Billings. Enthusiasm on the part of students was so great that the fair ran on into Monday of this week in order for more people to join in the festivities and find out what the Office of Volunteer Programs is all about. WRUV's Joel Bolton and Jeff Cohn provided the tunes ranging from Jeff Beck to the Beatles' "Norwegian Wood".

Mike Weinburg, the graduate assistant for OVP, was there during the height of the excitement. When asked the purpose of all the activity in the normally drowsy studying lounge he replied, "We are providing publicity for the Volunteer projects, recruitment of volunteers to help out in these projects, and pushing for awareness of OVP." He added that students who are interested in becoming volunteers would be interviewed this week for future placement in various projects.

Booths exhibited a great variety of projects, most of which were operated by UVM students. Some of the booths, such as Bell, Book and Candle and the Mobile Classroom, involved University Year for Action members, a program in which the workers are funded by a federal stipend to cover living expenses, usually $200/month. In exchange for this pay and 30 credits plus a valuable learning experience, the volunteers are asked to devote one year to a project. One program, which is very easy for anyone to participate in, is the Free Breakfast Program. All that is required is a donation of as many meals as desired from one's meal ticket. Jean Granger of OVP has all the facts for those who are interested in feeding hungry children in the Burlington area. VPIRG made its appearance with Sharon Frink victoriously displaying numerous pamphlets and reports of their success in the past year. The Vermont Public Interest Research Group is looking for Volunteers now to do studies and research in the areas of consumer and environmental protection and many others. The VPIRG $3.00 fee each student paid in addition to his tuition is being used to support a professional staff of lawyers and scientists which are at the student's disposal if he chooses to do a research project with VPIRG. More information is available at the S.A. Desk in Billings Center.

Bumping elbows with Ms. Frink was a representative from Robinson Dorm, dedicated to environment and ecology in Vermont. Samples from Robinson's Library were on display with an invitation to any interested parties to come and browse through the books. Further on down the line Audrey Melkin, the Resident Advisor for SHAC handed out information on this shelter for runaway teenagers at 81 Maple Street. SHAC needs volunteers "who are willing to make a commitment" and help work in the house or aid the present staff in activities and companionship for the children.

The Waterbury Hospital booth, attended by Robin Campbell, an Education student at UVM, advertised the need for volunteers at the state mental hospital. "To give the patients the initiative to leave the institution on their own."

The Mobile Classroom of Winooski involves U.V.A. volunteers who have organized a school for about 24 students each semester. The "classroom" has left Winooski on numerous excursions to visit several State Houses, the Boston Aquarium and various Museums. In-class format is generally one of individualized teaching and group discussion.

Other booths of interest included the Urban Center, Headstart, Cub Scouts, Lyman Hunt Adult Education, Medical Center, UVM Rescue, Sink or Swim, and Aid to the Elderly. An interesting exhibit in the center of all the activity was the Bell, Book and Candle project run by Becky Burr and Chris Burns. This program is designed to encourage children's interest in literature, art and nutrition through readings, cooking, and drawing. Two volunteers are needed to replace Becky and Chris when they are not able to attend.

The Amputee Ski booth was found unattended, but it was advertised that any extra single boots, poles and skis would be greatly appreciated by those needing only one. For those who were unfortunate enough to have missed the festivities, the OVP office is interviewing volunteers for all the programs now.

Hungry Schoolchildren Fed

by Jane Smith

On February fifth elementary children in Burlington will be able to receive a well balanced breakfast—the only requirement being that they are hungry. According to workers in the Office of Volunteer Programs this may be the first time some Burlington children have ever been able to eat breakfast before attending school.

This first breakfast, which will begin at 7:30 at the Fresh Ground Coffee House on Church Street, is the initial effort of the Free Breakfast Program, co-ordinated by Mario Macias and Jean Granger.

Macias is responsible for the idea of such a program, and Jean, a member of the University Year for Action, decided to join him and make the program her project for the year.

Plans for the Free Breakfast Program, which is working in conjunction with O.V.P. and the Bread and Law Task Force (a government funded project which is giving the program legal advice) have been under way for nearly five months.

Now that the program is ready to put its plans into action, volunteers and donations are greatly needed. According to Jean, its success will depend on how many U.V.M. students are willing to donate one or more of their SAGA meals each week.

Already 500 students have donated one meal a week for the rest of the semester. Volunteers working for the program have been stationed in each dining hall to recruit donations and clip the donated meal from the student's meal ticket.

The stubs are shown to SAGA, who in turn reimburses the Free Breakfast Program with money. The money is used to purchase food which, Jean stated they have decided to buy from SAGA. It is the "best deal", she said, adding that SAGA has been very cooperative with the program.

Another way a student, who does not want to make a commitment for the rest of the school year, can donate a meal is to drop any left over stubs at the end of the week into a box at the main desk at his or her dorm. Boxes will be placed at the main desk at every dorm.

Jean is hoping for at least 1,000 students to donate a meal each week. This would allow the program which will run Monday through Friday, to serve breakfasts to 200 children each weekday.

Monetary donations are also being welcomed. Equipment to cook and serve the food has to be purchased, an estimated cost of $400. In addition, a $69 expense for paper products is expected each week.

People are also needed who will volunteer to cook the meals, watch the children, and clean up. Any interested people willing to volunteer their time or money should contact one of the following: Jean Granger at 862-6996, Mario Macias, 863-5008, Darryl Lloyd, 656-3302, or O.V.P.

The Fresh Ground Coffee House will not be the permanent location of the Free Breakfast Program. The program needed a place to serve their first breakfast, and Bernard Sanders from the Bread and Law Task Force approached Mike and Sandy Bass, who are owners of the coffee house, who readily agreed to cooperate.

In the near future the program hopes to move to Lawrence Barnes elementary school on North Street. Jean said they would pilot the program there and later follow in other schools.

She also mentioned running the program through the summer and perhaps expanding it to other colleges in the Burlington area.

Eventually, Jean said she would like to see the program taken over by the community. In the meantime she and other volunteers are busy planning for February 5 and looking for more volunteers who are serious about working.

IRA Plans Winter Weekend

The Inter-Residence Association held its first meeting of the second semester January 22, 1973 in the Harris-Millis Recreation Room. The meeting was called to order at 7:00 p.m. by President Sig Heller. In the course of the meeting the following items were presented:

Paul Vey announced in the Treasurer's report that IRA had a current balance of $1,249.16. This does not include the $4,000 that IRA will receive for this semester. The IRA held a successful dance to welcome the second-semester freshmen and transfer students to UVM. Of the $450 appropriated by IRA for the dance, expenses ran little more than half that amount—$250.

It was announced that there will be no classes on Friday, February 2. Winter Weekend will commence on that day and run through Sunday, February 4. The change from the original date of February 16 was a result of a vote by the Student Association.

Events planned for the Winter Weekend will include a hockey game against Colby Friday night at 7:30 in Gutterson Field House. Saturday night at 7:30 UVM plays Bowdoin, again in Gutterson Field House. A series of winter games will start Friday night, and snow sculptures and a Winter Carnival Ski Jump on Williston Road are also planned. There will be a special rate for students at Bolton Valley Ski Area, to include skiing, meals and transportation. (See next week's Cynic for details.) Drivers will be needed to get to Bolton Valley and back. Because of contract rules, the minimum age must be 21. Any interested volunteers may contact Sig Heller at 2282.

A committee meeting on the Winter Weekend representing members of IRA, Panhel, Fraternity Forum and the Student Association was scheduled for Tuesday, January 23.

In Old Business, IRA appropriated $50 last semester to the Fleming Museum for their Christmas Festival. Each member of IRA will receive a free Fleming Museum rhinoceros poster next week, Sig Heller announced.

Gary Wood announced that the Woodworking Shop is ready to open shortly. Hours should be available by next week. There is also a possibility that a non-credit course in woodworking will be taught by Gary and John, another member of the Woodworking Shop.

The leather shop hours will be announced shortly. IRA will buy the leather and sell it to students at a reduced rate.

Tracks, a popular group that has performed at UVM in the past has announced that it has some time available if IRA is interested in holding another dance. The date tentatively under consideration is February 11, or possibly a date in March to accompany the Spring Festivals.

Former UVM hockey star Bob Hodde, class of '72, has sent a letter to IRA, c/o Sig Heller regarding the need for a plexiglass enclosure around the Catamount Hockey rink. This letter was read at the meeting and from the ensuing discussion emerged a motion to appropriate $500 to the UVM Hockey Plexiglass Fund. The motion was tabled for the next meeting, at which Bob Hodde will appear to talk to IRA and answer questions regarding cost, maintenance, and other aspects. There is also a movement underway to organize various fund-raising campaigns for the Plexiglass Fund. This will be further outlined at the next meeting.

Dr. Martin is due to talk to IRA at the next meeting regarding the Traffic Safety Board, Director of Housing Keith Miser spent several moments complimenting IRA members on what he described as a "fine job and a lot of hard work" in the fall semester. Dr. Miser then added that he is looking forward to another semester of work with IRA.

The meeting was then concluded. The next meeting will be Monday, January 29 at 7:00 p.m.

Question: It is easy to obtain contraceptive information concerning intercourse, however, what precautions are necessary when getting to orgasm while nude? If some semen soaks into the bed, is it still safe for the woman to sleep there?

Answer: Sperm cells are incapable of jumping out of bed, leaping tall buildings in a single bound, are far slower than a staming locomotive and incapable of making a woman pregnant, unless they are deposited into the opening of the vagina. Therefore, when getting to orgasm in the nude, it is merely necessary to make sure that ejaculation does not occur with the penis in immediate proximity to the vaginal opening.

Dr. Faustus Opens Tonight At Arena Theatre

Mary Travers Replaces Berry

by Margo Howard
Beginning this evening, January 25, and continuing through Monday, January 29, the University Players will present Christopher Marlowe's The Tragical History of Doctor Faustus at 8:00 p.m. in the Arena Theatre.

Christopher Marlowe, one of the most famous Elizabethan dramatists before Shakespeare, introduced an innovation into his plays that changed the literary world: the use of blank verse and the focusing of interest upon a strong central character.

The theme of the man who sells his soul to the devil to gain forbidden and infinite knowledge is a very old one. A version of the legend appeared in 1597 in Germany as Das Faustbuch, and there were certainly other renditions, as Marlowe's play does not correspond in parts with scenes in the English translation of Das Faustbuch. Indeed, in 1509, a Doctor Johannes Faustus took a degree of Doctor of Divinity at Heidelberg University, and the name of Faustus has been connected with several persons concerned with magic, alchemy, and various related topics in Germany in the 1600's.

Stylized as a conventional morality play, Marlowe's Doctor Faustus marks the transition between the mores of the Middle Ages, with its emphasis on ecclesiastical authority, and the more worldly, free-thinking attitudes of the Renaissance.

The play concerns the adventures of one Doctor John Faustus, an individual who desires not only wisdom and expertise in one chosen profession, but also omniscience and the superhuman power and awesome wealth such mastery would bring. He is the prototype of the "Renaissance Man," immortalized by such figures as Michelangelo, Da Vinci and Machiavelli's Prince. Like Macbeth, he is ambitious, and we will recall that "for that sin fell the angels."

To achieve this ambition one must use magic; and to acquire the power of magic one must call upon the powers of darkness. Faustus sells his soul to the devil, in a sequence that made the Elizabethan viewers' hair stand on end and their blood to run cold.

Under the tutelage of Lucifer's deceptively benign lieutenant, Mephistophilis, he displays neither magical powers nor intellectual virtuosity, but rather becomes arrogant with his ill-gotten gains and, undisciplined by moral or social codes, he seals his own doom. His final degradation, hell-bent and hysterical, is the result of his refusal to acknowledge he has overstepped his boundaries and gone too far. His is a downfall both self-made and inevitable, a classic case of potential wasted by egotistical indulgence.

While Faustus does not appear to have made adequate use of his powers, one must realize that there were limitations to the Elizabethan stage and also that the play has been garbled and added to throughout the centuries, until it is not altogether certain to distinguish between the original Marlowe and the later additions.

Doctor Faustus is the fifth annual production of the University Players, entirely by students and supported by University Player funds.

The play will star Michael Levine as Faustus, Charles Towers as Mephistophilis, Kent Chaney as Lucifer, Peter Campbell as Wagner, Craig Toth as Charles V. Jeffrey Mattson as Pope Adrian VI, James Heidenreich as Belzebub, Richard Cassidy as the Duke of Vanholt, Jennifer Allen as the Duchess of Vanholt, Edward Chemaly as Pope Bruno, Steffen Sailer as Ralph, Mark Carraher as Robin, Mei-Lam Rice as the Empress, and Steven Kampmann as Solomane. There are over seventy roles in the cast and an overlapping of parts is not only necessary but testifies to the talents of the cast in a production of this magnitude.

The opening night performance will be a benefit for the Arena Theatre Building Fund. Tickets for that night cost $10.00 for one ticket and $15.00 for two. After that, tickets for January 26-29 will cost $4.00 with student UVM I.D. and $2.00 for general admission. Box office hours are from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday. For reservations, call 656-2094.

The UVM Baroque Ensemble has provided Medieval and Renaissance incidental music for the play. The original score was written by Dr. Thomas Read of the UVM Music Department and recorded by Chris Anderson, a senior at UVM. The instruments played include crumhorn, Flemish harp, harpsichord, psalter, recorder and various percussion instruments.

To get an idea of what was happening behind the scenes, this reporter paid a visit to the Costume Shop in the back of the Art Building. A sewing machine was buzzing away in a corner; eighty beautifully-designed costumes, in various stages of completion, hung on a rack. Jeff Mattson, actor and Head of Makeup, was cutting black fur trim to go on several costumes. Costume Chief and designer Dee Thurber was altering an outfit; and Peter Campbell stood patiently on a table while Jean Embree measured and pinned up a hem for his friar's costume. Drawings and designs, all very striking, were kept in a big folder and ready for quick reference. After the Costume Shop, the reporter visited the prop room. In studying a list of cast and crew members, the reporter was interrupted by an arrival from the Makeup room, in the person of Mephistophilis. It is fortunate that he was not crossing the parking lot from the Costume Shop in that get-up; or someone would have been a certain candidate for cardiac arrest!

Having been in and out of the Arena Theatre for the past week or more, this reporter has had quite an opportunity to see this production grow to its final stages. It has been quite an experience to have seen costumes, designs, and various parts of rehearsals; especially if one knows many of the people acting in the production or working on it. The time and effort involved in Doctor Faustus is quite impressive; many days of vacation were given up by cast and crew members alike. The Arena Theatre has consistently come up with one excellent production after another, and Director Terry Demas deserves to be proud of this latest achievement. This one is going to be BIG!

Curtain time for all performances will be 8:00 p.m., and tickets are going fast. Call 656-2094 for reservations.

Folk singer Mary Travers, formerly of Peter, Paul and Mary, will appear on the Lane Series on Saturday, February 10, at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium.

She will be singing in Burlington prior to her New York concert on February 17 at Carnegie Hall.

Mary Travers is replacing Chuck Berry, who has cancelled. Tickets marked "Pop Singer" or "Chuck Berry" will be good for the Travers concert. Additional tickets for Mary Travers are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, at $3.75, $5.25, and $6. For information and reservations, telephone 656-3418.

The Lane Committee told the Cynic that Chuck Berry had cancelled two scheduled performances in the Lane Series: the first time, two days before the November 29 concert, because of alleged illness; and the second time, a week ago, without giving any reason. Although Chuck Berry's booking manager offered to work out another date late in April or early May, the Committee decided not to take any more chances with Berry, who has a notorious record of cancellations. (According to Variety, Berry cancelled at the University of Scranton on December 16 on the very day of the concert.) The Lane Committee considers itself very fortunate to be able to book an artist of the caliber of Mary Travers, as a replacement for Berry, at such short notice.

Other major Lane concerts remain unchanged for the current semester.

LILY TOMLIN, comedienne star of TV's "Laugh-In" as Ernestine, the nasal telephone operator, Feb. 2. Available tickets: $3.75, $5.25, $6. March 20. "GODSPELL," April 16. Sold out.

ROBERT MERRILL, leading baritone of the Metropolitan Opera. Program: lieder, operatic arias, and songs from "Fiddler on the Roof," "Porgy and Bess" and "Man of La Mancha." Feb. 12. Available seats: $3.75, $4.50, $5.25, $6. "SLEUTH," thriller-chiller mystery play still playing on Broadway and London's West End. Available seats: $3.75, $5.25, $6. March 20.

"GODSPELL," April 16. Sold out.

Zoltan Kocsis, young Hungarian pianist who electrified last year's Lane audience when he appeared with the Budapest Symphony April 25. Very limited tickets. $3.75 only.

"APPLAUSE," Tony award-winning Broadway musical, starring Patrice Munsel, star of the musical comedy stage and the Metropolitan Opera. Available tickets: $3.75, $5.25, $6.

Lane Series

Lily T

One of America's top comic artists appears on the Lane Series on Friday, February 2, at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium.

Lily Tomlin, for four years on TV's standout Laugh-In Show (Rowan and Martin), comes to Burlington after a fortnight at Minter Kelley's night club in Chicago. According to Variety, she did "socko biz" at the night spot and drew "potent response."

Preceding Ms. Tomlin on the Lane concert will be young folk singer Kenny Rankin, who is making a hit on the charts with such songs as "Coming Down" and "Bad Times Will Make You Strong."

Tickets for this concert, $3.75, $5.25, and $6 are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For information and reservations, telephone 656-3418. According to the Lane Committee, tickets are going fast.

On the Lane concert Lily Tomlin will unveil many of the routines that made her famous on TV: Ernestine, the prying, snorting telephone operator (billed as the "mouth that knows no fear"), as Edith Ann, the ingenious five-year-old who can't spell "raspberry," but who can sure give a good one as a fast talker who makes sense in spite of herself; and as the "proper" Mrs. Farbo, whose only taste is in her mouth.

World-Wide Concerts Presented By Lane Series

The 1973 Lane Chamber Arts Series will include three chamber groups and a dramatic reading in its thirteenth annual program, it was announced today by the Lane Office.

The series will open on February 20 with the Tokyo String Quartet, whose members, according to the Los Angeles Times, are "capable of holding their own with any quartet in the world."

On March 14 the New York Woodwind Quintet (flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, bassoon) will make its second appearance. The Woodwind players are five top-ranking virtuosos.

The internationally famous

Jacques Loussier Trio (piano, drums, and bass) from Paris will present, on April 6, its program of "Play Bach," a contemporary interpretation of the music of Johann Sebastian Bach.

The series will conclude on April 30 with "Edgar Allan Poe," a dramatic reading by Randy Kim. Kim is a leading actor with UVM's Champlain Shakespeare Festival. Having appeared as Titus in Titus Andronicus and Cassius in Julius Caesar.

All the concerts will be held in Ira Allen Chapel and commence at 8:30 p.m.

Tickets: $10 for a season reserved seat and $3 for a single concert, are now on sale in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For reservations and information, telephone 656-3418.

One of America's top comic artists appears on the Lane Series on Friday, February 2, at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium.

Lily Tomlin, for four years on TV's standout Laugh-In Show (Rowan and Martin), comes to Burlington after a fortnight at Mister Kelley's night club in Chicago. According to Variety, she did "socko biz" at the night spot and drew "potent response."

Preceding Ms. Tomlin on the Lane concert will be young folk singer Kenny Rankin, who is making a hit on the charts with such songs as "Coming Down" and "Bad Times Will Make You Strong."

Tickets for this concert, $3.75, $5.25, and $6 are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For information and reservations, telephone 656-3418. According to the Lane Committee, tickets are going fast.

On the Lane concert Lily Tomlin will unveil many of the routines that made her famous on TV. Ernestine, the prying, snorting telephone operator (billed as the "mouth that knows no fear") has Edith Ann, the ingenious five-year-old who can't spell "raspberry," but who can sure give a good one as a fast talker who makes sense in spite of herself, and as the "proper" Mrs. Tabor, whose only taste is in her mouth.

What makes Ms. Tomlin's characters so laughable, and endearing to her fans is that most people have at one time or another come across a phone employee like Ernestine, and they can easily relate to her nasal-sounding ramblings.

And Edith Ann is the little girl down the block whom they grew up with. For Ms. Tomlin, being human and natural is of utmost importance both on and off stage.

Her humor, which depends as much on the everyday and the whimsical as on the ridiculous, is shrewd, wise and biting. With no encouragement, she can deliver a wisecrack or a barbed insult with the best of them. But Lily Tomlin's greatest gift is creating a plethora of engrossing, humorous and surprisingly real faces.

There is, for example, the eminently sexy soul cheerleader, who describes herself as "probably the best white cheerleader Detroit ever saw." And she is the improperly prim five-year-old who "spits in her sister's chocolate milk." And, of course, there is the spintzier-than-thou Ernestine who compliments "Jedgar Hoover" on his vacuum cleaner. "There's nothing like a Hoover when you're dealing with dirt." And, again her famous remark to J. Edgar: "It is my duty to discuss with you some of the abuses of your instrument."

She becomes her people, takes on their different faces from the world's oldest beauty consultant to the rubber freak who goes on to heavy stuff like the tip off mother's cane and the court psychiatrist's crepe stores.

Last May Ms. Tomlin performed at London's Palladium in a Royal Command Performance for the Queen of England, along with Liza Minnelli, Rowan and Martin, and Des O'Connell. "For me," wrote the critic of London's The Guardian, "the star of the show was Lily Tomlin. Laugh-In's smug and prissy switchboard girl."

Born in Detroit to parents who migrated there from Kentucky, Lily grew up in a neighborhood that was basically a melting spot. Her first serious acting job came while she was a student at Wayne University, where she appeared in the college production of "The Mad Woman of Chaillot." In 1964 she studied, under Paul Curtis of the American Mime Theatre, which led her to a role in an off-Broadway mime show. And it was in 1969 that George Schlatter, producer of Rowan and Martin's Laugh-In, saw Lily on one of her Merv Griffin appearances and signed her to Laugh-In.

Roundhouse: Creative Opportunity

Looking for a Friday night replacement for the Marx Brothers films? This year Roundhouse is open every Friday from 9 to 11:30 p.m. and is hoping to offer some short one acts and poetry reading, in addition to the folk music. If you're interested in playing some music, or have written some poetry or plays you'd like to share with the campus community, please drop by the Student Activities Desk in Billings Center and leave your name and where one might get in touch with you. Acknowledgements are made to those who contributed energy to Roundhouse last year: Karen, Hoss, Windfall, Peggy, Jay, the North Country Remblers, Bonnie, Russ, Outhouse, Kim, Melanie, Tim and Charlie, Gene, Peter and Dave.

Hans Puck, the Den Manager, is now at Simpson. Hans was on hand with fruit punch and popcorn, free to anyone who dropped by the Roundhouse. He also helped Roundhouse to get on its feet, and his efforts are appreciated by the people involved with Roundhouse. It is a success this year by Roger Bonnett, the new manager of the Den.

Grateful Dead Rarely Hits Right Note

Album Review
By Doug Collette
EUROPE '72
The Grateful Dead
Warner Bros. JWX 2668

I must admit that I've never been hugely admiring of the Dead. When they're hitting the note, they're certainly among the four or five finest rock groups in the world. But when they're not hitting the note, and to my ears, that's been very often—they're certainly among the four or five most boring rock and roll groups in the world. In their defense, one might argue that the Dead attempt things that most bands can't even imagine. While that may be true, I've never gotten much enjoyment out of hearing musicians fall short of their goals, however sophisticated those goals may be. The Dead's fanatic popularity prior to their commercial success of Workingman's Dead and American Beauty was due more to their mystique than their music.

Their previous album, a double set, recorded live, is of varying quality and set me to dreaming "If they could only fill an album with stuff like 'Bertha,' 'Playing in the Band' and 'Wharf Rat,' they'd have themselves a monster."

Well, Europe '72 is three albums full of that delightful brand of rock and roll, and leads me to make this unqualified statement: cut for cut, and side for side, this is not only the best Dead I've ever heard, but some of the best rock and roll music I've ever heard.

It's strange though. If you set the volume low and play any of the six sides, the relaxed, flowing quality of the music is immensely pleasurable. But if you decide to boogie, you can turn it up and blast it to dance the night(s) and/or day(s) away. "Sugar Magnolia" is one specific example; for half its seven minutes, the Dead chug along cheerfully and then shift into highgear to sizzle till the end of the track. That's usually called dynamics, but when the whole album works so well on these two levels, I think it more fitting to call it magic.

Instrumentally, the Dead are tighter than I've ever heard them. The first two records consist of cuts four to eight minutes long. The vocals, though never too complex, are sure and sweet, particularly when Donna Godchaux joins in. When they do Bob Weir's "One More Saturday Night," they don't sound like they're getting it on. But that's just because after rock and rolling together for all these years, playing is second, not first nature to them and they make it seem easy as proverbially falling off a log. And like Humble Pie and Hot Tuna, the Dead are having so much fun playing, that their music is imbued with a happy buoyance impossible to resist. Listening to this album gives me such a contentedly peaceful "easy" feeling.

I've never rated any of the Dead, except the unquestionably great Phil Lesh, as exceptional musicians. Of course, they're all excellent, but it's the empathy between the band members that's their true claim to greatness. Pianist Keith Godchaux, who joined the group when Pappi became ill, is as accomplished an eighty-eight as Lesh is on the bag. If you know how good Nicky Hopkins is, how well he's able to slide comfortably and perfectly into any musical content, from Quicksilver to the Who, then you have an idea of Godchaux' skill—he's just about that good. If you don't know of Nicky Hopkins, then listen to anything on this album.

But Godchaux is never obtrusive; he stays within reach of all the other musicians, because he knows just as well as they do that the group sound of the Grateful Dead is the important thing, not any soloists.

In my judgment, the Dead could never hold a candle to the Allmans when it came to improvisation. When the San Franciscans jammed, they too often seemed to wander around aimlessly, each man searching for a thread that could unite the band. On this thirteen minute version of "Truckin'," ten minutes of "Morning Dew" and two shorter, free-form pieces which serve as partners to these songs, the Dead remain coherent. While each instrumentalist germinates and elaborates on his own pattern, these patterns contains the kind of rock and roll that supports the claim that the Dead are second to none, not even so, I suppose there will be those purists (I use that word instead of a number of less-complimentary descriptive terms) who'll complain that this album doesn't measure up to the acid-blitzed atmospheric excursions like those captured on Live/Dead. These are the same kind of people that will also say that Bob Dylan hasn't done anything really good since 1966.

(Comparisons with Dylan are remarkably apt. For the past few months, rumors have been circulating as to the possibility of Dylan recording and/or touring with the Dead. Now, this isn't so inconceivable.

To fully display the Dead's all-around talent and to round out what may be the best rock and roll statement by any band this year, Europe '72 consists largely of new original material; each song a joyous, infectious thing memorable on just one listening. Now within the seven minutes of slow blues in "Elmore James" "Hurts Me Too," the Dead prove that they could blow any of those hyper white bloozbanks right off the stage if they wanted to. Garcia's solo is one of the best I've heard from him: a quintessence of taste, precision and restraint. Godchaux' piano shines on ever so brightly while Pappi sings like he's really hurtin'; that is when he's not blowing his face out playing gorgeous blues harp fingers.

If I've used many superlatives here, let me apologize; but let me also say that they're deserved, each and every one of them. Europe '72 as it may at first sound. The recent musical evolution of both Dylan and the Dead are surprisingly similar. John Wesley Harding and Nashville Skyline can be seen as roughly analogous to Workingman's Dead and American Beauty, just as New Morning corresponds to Grateful Dead, Top Ten Rock and Roll Albums of 1972.

"Top Ten of the Year" lists, of records, films, books or anything are actually meaningless unless the judges have experienced every record, film, book, etc., that's available. And of course, no one's got the time to do that. But these things are (un)to construct because they help clarify your opinions of what you've seen, heard, or read. Make up your own list. Here's mine.

Question: I have read that the average number of calories consumed during sexual intercourse is equivalent to running up two flights of stairs. The question is: My girlfriend is 5'8" and weighs 145 lbs. would daily intercourse be an adequate substitute for her evening jog around the dormitory complex?

Answer: Caloric expenditure during sexual intercourse would obviously be related to the vigor with which it is performed and the duration of the act. The incredible altruism of offering yourself on a daily basis to your energetic friend in order to spare her the hardship of jogging around her dorm fails to convince this skeptic. However, you present one of the more imaginative lines I've heard of in a while.

The best solution would be to jog around with her each day and then decide what to do. A word of warning, any form of athletic endeavor requires proper equipment. Sexual intercourse produces a staggering number of pregnancies compared to jogging, be sure to use effective contraception.

Question: We recently adopted a child who came from another country and was not circumcised. Our family physician advised against circumcision at his age, nine months. We are wondering if this should be done for health reasons and if this might prevent possible teasing by other boys at a later time. We do not wish to disregard our physician's opinion, but at the same time, most male children we know have been circumcised.

Answer: Circumcision is the removal of the foreskin which is the tab of skin extending from the shaft of the penis.

covering most of the glans, or bulb-shaped end of the penis. Circumcision at birth, or shortly thereafter, is generally performed in this country to prevent the development of diseases of the penis later in life. As a part of religious ritual, Jews and Moslems circumcise their newborn male children, the practice supposedly originating as part of their hygienic codes. Circumcision is less popular in some parts of the world than it is here.

The procedure is uncomplicated and does not seem to produce distress when performed shortly after birth. However, it is an uncomfortable procedure when performed later in life and is generally not recommended unless definite indications exist. Such indications would be repeated infections of the penis or very narrow opening through the foreskin. The main value of circumcision is prophylactic, that is, preventative. People who are not circumcised who conscientiously pull back the foreskin and clean the glans area of the penis well each time they shower or bathe, generally do not have difficulties. However, this type of cleanliness often works out better in theory than in practice, making circumcision a sensible procedure for a newborn. The foreskin in infants and small children may remain adherent to the glans of the penis for sometime and you should not make any attempt to pull it back until advised to do so by your physician. Circumcision, or the lack of it, in no way affects sexual performance or enjoyment.

I agree with your doctor and would not advise circumcision of a nine-month-old because there is no sense in exposing him to this discomfort. As to the matter of being teased by other boys, all children must sooner or later come to grips with the ways in which they are different from others. At an appropriate time, a simple explanation of the anatomy involved should alleviate any of his concerns. If his friends are teasing him, something there that others are missing should not cause any concern, unless other people are threatening to cut it off.

Question: What type of treatment is given to rape victims? Especially, what is done to prevent pregnancy. When a rape victim comes in, does the hospital have to report it to the police? Will they refuse to treat the woman or call the police against her will if she doesn't want the rape reported. I was once the victim of a sex offender and the worst part of the experience was going over the incident with the police. Women should be allowed to avoid this if they wish.

Answer: Rape is commonly defined as sexual contact between a man and an unwilling woman other than his wife, with violence or the threat of violence. Many women are probably coerced in a variety of subtle and not subtle ways into having sexual intercourse in situations that do not legally meet the definition of rape, but functionally are hard to distinguish from the more brutal crimes.

Medical attention to the rape victim consists of a careful physical examination, including a pelvic exam, to be sure that the woman has not sustained physical injuries in need of immediate attention. Such an examination might provide an initial check to see if the woman contracted venereal disease and also help establish further legal evidence of the existence of rape. If a woman is not on contraceptive pills she would most likely be offered the opportunity to receive medication to prevent a pregnancy (morning after pill). The immediate attention to the victim should also include an assessment of the woman's psychological needs. Few personal crimes represent the type of cruel assault and violation of person that exists in rape. The psychological after effects of a rape can be fairly severe, but can almost always be lessened greatly by a few talks with someone knowledgeable in this area.

In many states, a hospital does not have to report rape to the authorities unless the victim is severely physically assaulted in an obvious fashion, in which case such a crime must be reported whether rape has occurred or not. A case of rape cannot be prosecuted unless the woman who is raped chooses to file a complaint. Although recounting details of an assault is unpleasant, the protection of future victims of the rapist makes it nearly essential that a victim cooperate with authorities. Rapists tend to repeat their attacks and failure to prosecute exposes other people to possible harm. Enlightened police officials and prosecutors try to make the investigation of such crimes as painless as possible for the victims. Names of victims are never released, and if the assailant is caught, trials are usually held in closed courtrooms. The victim is merely a witness, not the person on trial.

Doc Watson & Green Mountain Boys Are At Auditorium

by Robert A. B. Schaefer

The Burlington area friends of bluegrass and down-home old time country music were in store for a musical feast tonight. Doc Watson and his son Merle, country pickers from Deep Gap, North Carolina, will be in town to perform some of the most skillful and exciting bluegrass music that is today.

Freeing Doc at 8:00 p.m., the locally famous Green Mountain Boys will be picking, strumming, and singing across Municipal Auditorium. The "Boys" hard-driving riffs shine, especially in the playing of banjoist Bruce Stockwell, a young five-stringer who has won several Vermont banjo contests.

Ever-accompanying Doc in his stage appearances is his twenty-two year old son Merle, quite an accomplished guitar and banjo picker himself. Watson's stage presence is happily refreshing for the audience, and his comical backwoods explanation of his musical styles guarantees to raise a smile. "I'm gonna do some fiddle tunes now," he announced at a recent Boston appearance. "But we've adapted them to guitar 'cause my fiddle plays like a pig squeal."

The blend of polished craftsmanship in the Watson's breathtaking playing, Doc's straightforward singing, and an earthy, emotional, honest promises to be an happy if not unbelievable night of music.

Doc Watson, at forty-eight, has been playing guitar for more than thirty-five years. Husky, easygoing, modest, he is seemingly unperturbed by the fact that he has been blind since early childhood. Doc's music grows out of the Appalachian bluegrass tradition - he used to spend hours listening to and copying the styles of such back-to-the-roots people as Jimmy Rogers, Merle Travis, Clarence Ashley, and the Carter Family. Watson is a master at exhilarating flat picking runs and has duplicated Merle Travis' (after whom Merle Watson is named) finger-picking technique in which the thumb plays a flowing bass while the forefinger plucks out the tune.

Question: Recently I have cured a bag of marijuana by developing mold upon it using sugar water. This procedure seems to enhance the quality of the marijuana, is this so? Are there any dangers involved in possible intoxicants produced by the mold?

Answer: Placebo (plah-se-bo): a preparation given for its psychological effect. Nice try, but the effects of marijuana are due entirely to the concentration of tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) and the circumstances under which the marijuana is taken. Most molds are fairly friendly and it is hard to believe that smoking them would produce any toxins. Some people are terribly allergic to molds, however, and I shouldn't doubt that inhaling them would be uncomfortable or dangerous to such people. As you are probably aware, penicillin is produced by a mold. If in the course of your experimenting you become remarkably cured of some plague or infection, please write to me immediately.

Question: I am curious as to why my hair does not grow anymore than two to three inches past my shoulders. It grows rapidly until that point, then seems to literally stop growing. I do color my hair about once a month, but it is well cared for and in good condition.

Answer: Among other things, hair length is dependent upon metabolic factors, diet, and the condition of the hair. Assuming that you are in good health there is a fair likelihood that coloring your hair is weakening the hair shafts and allowing them to break off or to fall out when they get to the length you mentioned. The materials used in hair dyes are quite strong and do affect hair strength.

Question: I have read that when women are put on a weight lifting program, they do not develop muscularly as a man would because they have less testosterone. If a man took testosterone while on an exercise program, could he expect greater muscular development than if he simply exercised without the hormone supplement?

Answer: Muscle shape appears dependent upon the presence or absence of testosterone, the male sex hormone. In the presence of testosterone, muscles tend to have the more rounded bulging appearance that is characteristically seen among men. Weight lifting in particular tends to accentuate this type of muscle configuration in a man. The woman, on the other hand, can increase her muscle mass and still maintain the same smooth contour that we associate with the feminine physique. It is not at all clear that the shape of a muscle is related to its useful strength. Women athletes develop tremendous strength and stamina without the apparent muscle mass of their male counterparts although men are typically stronger.

While the administration of certain hormones in conjunction with an exercise program may increase the amount of muscular development, such practices are generally considered dangerous because of side effects of the hormones. Such hormones produce weight gain and there is no good evidence linking male hormones to increased performance. Superior athletic performance is highly dependent on coordination, metabolism and physiologic factors much more than it is on muscle strength.

The best "stereo value" in town: $350.00

Individually, each of the components pictured above has created a new standard of sound-per-dollar stereo value. Together, these components will provide you with more quality sound and reliability than you could have bought a year ago for over five hundred dollars.

The DYNACO A25 Loudspeakers are the only speakers which can reproduce the entire musical range. Most inexpensive speakers cannot produce the lowest octaves of music; the lowest strings of a double bass or electric bass guitar, the lowest pipes of a pipe organ. The DYNACO A25 can.

The SONY STR6045 AM/FM stereo receiver has enough power to satisfy both you and the DYNACOS.

It produces 25 watts RMS per channel, across the entire musical range, at less than .5% total distortion (RMS is the most demanding and least flashy of the various power-rating systems.) The tuner sections will separate weaker stations on a crowded dial from their brawnier neighboring stations and receive them with an amazing fullness and clarity.

To match the quality and reliability that the SONY and the DYNACO represent, we recommend the BSRC 12 310 with a SHURE M75 cartridge. The BSRC has a heavy platter, a synchronous motor, a convenient cueing control and comes with a dustcover and base.

Come to Lafayette this week. You'll be surprised how much quality sound you can buy for four hundred dollars.

The Underground Revisited.

There was a time when a young woman of college age or a little older shopped in the Underground regularly. But times change. Clothes aren't the alpha and omega in a young woman's life the way they used to be. Jeans and a couple of shirts can get you through the school year. O.K. We'll accept that.

Still, we think there might come a moment when you want something for a special occasion. And when that occasion comes, we invite you to come into the Underground and take a look through our selection of pants, shirts, sweaters and dresses. There's something there for any occasion.

Or, we might say, for all occasions. The young look today is adaptable for any time and place. That means you can afford to invest in an outfit and know that you will get your money's worth. A pants, shirt and sweater outfit isn't going to be worn once and then hung in the closet because it won't go for another occasion. Not at all.

We also invite you to open a limited charge account. Talk to us about it the next time you visit the Underground.

Reprinted from December 16, 1963 issue.

I guess that twelve years really wasn't too long to wait after all. This was the consensus of opinion of approximately 3,000 spectators who filed out the Gutterson Field House last Saturday night. With all due respect to the brilliant minds of the engineers of M.I.T., their skating ability left much to be desired. This, however, failed to dampen the spirits of the very anxious hockey fans — they came to see a Catamount victory and they weren't denied.

The 5-0 score doesn't really indicate the over all power of the Cats in this fray. They had a complete territorial edge in play throughout the contest as they outshot the visitors 51-20. If it wasn't for the brilliant goaltending of M.I.T. captain Joe Kirk, the score could easily have been in double figures. Our offense was so dominating that the puck was hardly in our defensive zone, and the majority of the Engineers' 20 shots on the UVM goalies, Capt. Tony Russo and Bobby Sausville, were from outside the blueline.

The eight goals that the Cats whipped into the net were fairly equally distributed. The first line of Stevenson, Uhlen, and Barrett were responsible for two goals. Second line center "Laddie" Cook banged one in, while the third wave registered one a piece from Paul Ryan and Kenny Sausville. The goal by Sausville at 9:29 of the third period was the prettiest of the night. Kenny was perched right in front of the M.I.T. net when he received a perfect centering pass from hard-working Artie Garvin, and he easily deflected it past the prone M.I.T. netminder.

The remaining goals were scored by the alert Vermont defensive corps. Jimmy Brock and Bill Dunn. Both of these freshmen were outstanding, as were the other members of the blue-line squad. Tim Twomey was exceptionally brilliant, cutting off shots frequently with his end-to-end rushes. Twomey has since been moved up to center by Coach Ruffer to take advantage of his speed. Ozzie Swift was another brilliant performer for the Cats, although he had no goals to show for it.

There was, however, a major problem that confronted the Cats throughout the game, and that was their frequent trips to the penalty box. Eleven Catamounts were banished, and at two minutes a piece this meant that UVM was short-handed for more than one full period of hockey. If this happens against some of the better teams on the schedule, I am sure that we won't be so lucky in keeping the opposition scoreless.

Coach Ruffer's pucksters arched the road this week-end with games at M.I.T. (Friday night) and UNH on Saturday afternoon. The team should have little trouble disposing of the Engineers once again, and if they keep their sticks and elbows down they should hit double figures. New Hampshire will be another story completely. This is definitely the toughest team the Cats will have to face this year. The Wildcats are by far the best in the Yankee Conference, and play a very good schedule which includes some of the top teams in the East. This is a very large obstacle for the young and inexperienced catamounts to overcome so early in the season, and it could prove disastrous. I will be making the trip to Durham, N.H., with the hope of being incorrect.

The third period was a standoff for the first ten minutes until BU's Dave Wisener connected from 5 feet out, at 10:29, beating Kiely's net. BU came back for more at 12:02 as Ken Kuzysk had nothing but air between him and Kiely. The air didn't stop him and neither did Kiely. BU's seventh goal came at 18:05 with Kiely out of the net trying to cover a loose puck. Ray Cournoyea hit the open net trying to cover a loose puck. Ray Cournoyea hit the open net from 10 feet out.

BU's ability to score in pairs seemed to indicate a UVM letdown after each goal. Overall UVM's second and third lines performed well in one of the finest games held at Gutterson this season. Kiely in the nets, with Ekerson out with the flu, did a more than adequate job.

Check of the game goes to Roger Mallette. A check which saw two men leave the ice. The BU player, 3 feet in the air and Mallette off for 2 minutes for charging.

Three stars of the game: O'Connell, Mallette and Koch.

Streak Continues With Victory Over Panthers

The Cats made it 3-0 moments later once again exploiting Middlebury's defensive weaknesses. After a flurry of shots in front of Burke, Ted Castle finally put the puck in the net with assists going to Murphy and Wright.

Later in the period the Cats put their power play to work and virtually assured the victory. After a delay of game call put the Panthers 2 men down MacKinnon tipped in a Teddy Child slap shot putting UVM four goals up. As if things were not going badly enough, the Panthers found themselves a man down two minutes later. The Cats once again put in a power play goal. On an excellent individual effort Castle put a backhand shot by Burke after taking the puck off the face off won by Wright. This reveals another keynote of the Cat's victory. Wright, O'Connell, MacKinnon and Watts were controlling the face offs throughout the game. This gave the Cats an almost insurmountable 5-0 lead at the close of the period.

The third period was an exact replica of the previous two. The Panthers would come up with several scoring opportunities only to be thwarted by Ekerson, whereas the Cats would capitalize on Middlebury's errors. UVM's sixth goal came with only four minutes gone in the period. Jack Clifford took the puck out of a crowd on the right side of the goal, skated around the back of the net, and flicked the puck in from the left side before Burke could move over.

Assists went to Watts and Tubbs. The Cats closed out the scoring at 16:54 of the period with UVM's number one line of Castle, Wright, and Hunt coming up with their third goal of the contest. The goal went to Hunt with Castle and Wright picking up the assists. Earlier in the period Coach Cross lifted Ekerson to give second string goalie John Kiely some work. Kiely preserved the shut out. Ekerson's fine play lowered his goals against average in Division II to 1.71.

Overall, the contest was a battle between two unevenly matched teams. The Cats' speed, power, 3rd stretch handling was too much for the Panthers. UVM's aggressiveness produced numerous Middlebury errors and led to the victory. The Cats have another encounter with the Panthers in late February. This rout may still linger in the minds of the Panthers and we might see a much improved squad aided by the return of Perlman and defenseman Rick Simourd.

THE INSIDER

by Mike Brown

Just the other day as I was reading the program for the next days game, I noticed something that really startled me. The names of the UVM ball players almost stunned me. I mean names like Joseph and Terrence, Bernard and Gregory, how about Refe. Even the coaching staff has been crowned with nicknames.

Here is a short quiz for all of you who think you know the team fairly well.

Score—19-15—Great, a real fan. See Coach Salzberg for seasons pass. 14-11—Good. A date with Coach Fertig. 10-7—Fair. Better see more games. 6-3—Poor. Talk to our manager. 2-0—Terrible. Come watch a couple of practices.

UMass Dominates Vermont 77-55

The University of Vermont basketball team has been quite surprising this year when compared with the dismal 5-19 record of last season. The sophomores led by Joe Greco have created a winning spirit that the basketball program needs to gain more support on campus. On Tuesday night this new spirit was displayed for one half of the game against Massachusetts at Patrick Gym.

The second half brought out the superior height, depth, and strength of UMass that Vermont lacks, as the Cats lost by a score of 77-55. The Cats entered the game with a 5-6 record, a big improvement over last year. Over the Christmas holidays, they won their first Yankee Conference game since 1970-1971 with an exciting 68-65 overtime triumph over New Hampshire. The Cats had trailed by as much as 23 points in the second half of the game.

After being routed by Rhode Island 91-62, the Cats finished third in the Bluehouse Classic in Nova Scotia. Here they lost to C.W. Post and then beat Dalhousie 83-48. The first game of the Christmas season was a loss to Boston U. The first half against UMass showed how much the team has improved as an upset was a distinct possibility. The first half ended in a 31-31 tie. Vermont's zone press forced 16 UMass turnovers. The Cats displayed aggressive defensive play that set up an adequate offensive attack. Joe Greco scored 10 points and Dan Ostler came off the bench to hit 3 baskets. Although an indication of the eventual outcome was seen in the Redmen rebounding power and taking sixteen shots off their inside play, the upset was a good possibility.

In the second half Massachusetts began to dominate. They opened up a ten point lead in the first eight minutes of the half. Al Skinner dominated the boards for the Redmen with 19 rebounds and play opportunity holding over 16 points, with John Murphy a strong 6-7 forward to the Cats stick checking and complimenting Skinner's inside play with 14 points, mostly shooting Eckerson was able to from 15 foot jump shots. In handle the Panthers. They had two excellent opportunities from in close but could not capitalize.

The Panthers came out fast in the second period hoping to take advantage of their power 16 rebounds, with John Murphy a strong 6-7 forward to the Cats stick checking and complimenting Skinner's inside play with 14 points, mostly shooting Eckerson was able to from 15 foot jump shots. In handle the Panthers. They had two excellent opportunities from in close but could not capitalize.

UMass had the opportunity to end the half with a one point lead when Macias scored twice from the charity line to make the score 31-30 but, with 11 seconds to go Bob Warner switched one to make the score at intermission 32-31, in favor of Maine.

After exchanging buckets to open the second half, the Cats sank three buckets making the score 39-34 and forced Maine into a zone.

Vermont never lost the lead after this, but Maine fluctuated between three to eight points behind the Cats.

Vermont's biggest lead was three points when the score was 15-12. Maine's biggest lead was only two points.

Terriers Down Cats

By Fred Coombs

Division I hockey came to Gifferson Field House Saturday night as the Terriers of B.U. arrived to take on the Catamounts of Vermont. There was no doubt in the mind of the Capacity crowd, that the quality of play was a definite improvement over Division II play. There was also no doubt that UVM can skate with the best of them.

The seven to two outcome doesn't tell the story as UVM outshot Boston 42-31. However, when it came to goals, the Cats just couldn't find the handle and were continually thwarted by the Terrier's stand-out goalie Ed Walsh.

BU picked up 3 quick penalties in the first period. UVM which led in shots on goal during the first 8 minutes 8-1, couldn't light the lamp.

UVM had the Terriers housebroken until 18:17 of the first period when Fred Stanfield's brother Vic, broke in on Kiely and stuffed it past his right side, a power play goal with Child off for tripping. It didn't take long for BU to make it 15 foot slap shot past Kiely's stick side at 18:44.

The second period started off slow but Steve Dolloff started BU off with a breakaway goal, beating Kiely on his right side, at 4:37. BU's Bill Robbins made it 4-0 by slamming a loose puck past Kiely just 17 seconds later at 4:54.

UVM blew the doors off BU for the remainder of the second period getting 22 shots on goal to BU's 8. The second period ended with a center line started clicking as center Tim O'Connell scored UVM's only 2 goals. O'Connell, at 10:35, ripped a drive past Walsh's head into the top of the net from fifteen feet out. Five minutes later, Brad Cooke stole a BU pass and passed to O'Connell who promptly knocked another one past Walsh at 15:21. The second period ended with the score (Continued on page nine)

Ice Cats Remain Undefeated In Division II

by Rick Steinberg

The UVM hockey team continued their domination over Division II teams with a convincing 7-0 triumph over the Panthers of Middlebury last Wednesday evening. The Cats combining tight checking with an aggressive offense totally overwhelmed their arch rivals from Middlebury and remained undefeated in Division II play.

Contests between these two clubs are usually quite rugged and this game was no exception. Tempers flared numerous times but officials stepped in to calm things down.

The play in the first period set the pace for the remainder of the contest. Both clubs came out playing extremely aggressively and there was a great deal of hitting. John Murphy led the assault on Middlebury decking several Panthers.

The Catamounts opened up the scoring early taking advantage of Middlebury's ineptness in clearing the puck. After a mix-up in front of the Panther's net Ken Yeates finally cleared the puck into the left corner where Roger Mallette fed in-front to Tim O'Connell who slapped it in for his eighth goal of the season. Middlebury's inability to clear the puck plagued them all evening. It is doubtful whether their star goalie Larry Perlman, who sat out the game due to injury, could have handled the Cats. Second string goalie Bill Burke played an excellent game and thwarted numerous scoring opportunities for the Cats—His play kept the Panthers in the game in the early going. Vermont's second goal came with 1:22 remaining in the period. Brad Cooke scored on a well placed slap shot over the shoulder of Burke. Assisting on the goal was Willie MacKinnon, who played that set up an adequate offensive attack. Joe Greco gave, picking up a goal later in the contest. The 2-0 score does not reveal the manner in which the Cats dominated the period. Indication of the eventual outcome was seen in the Redmen rebounding power and taking sixteen shots off their inside play, the upset was a good possibility.

UVM also had control of the puck for the greater part of the period. Had it not been for the fine play of Burke the Cats may have run away early. The Panthers came out fast in the second period hoping to take advantage of their power 16 rebounds, with John Murphy a strong 6-7 forward to the Cats stick checking and complimenting Skinner's inside play with 14 points, mostly shooting Eckerson was able to from 15 foot jump shots. In handle the Panthers. They had two excellent opportunities from in close but could not capitalize.

Gymnastics Meet

UVM's Gymnastic Club, coached by Tom Dunkley, will head for Dartmouth this Saturday (Jan. 27) for an important dual meet and a chance to qualify for the Division II Championships to be held later in the year. "If we can score 85 or more points in the Dartmouth meet, we will have an excellent opportunity to be selected to compete in the Division II championships later in the semester," said Dunkley. Top competitors for Vermont include: All-Around performers Fred Lee, a freshman; John Kenesly, a sophomore and captain Jake Foley, also a freshman; specialists include Doug Mackey, sidehorse; and Clifford White, high bar.

This weekend (Jan. 26/28) will give the University of Vermont its first opportunity to compete, as the skiers begin to tune up for the February Carnival, which begins with UVM's Winter Carnival, Feb. 3, at Bolton Valley and the Millston Ski Area.

"All phases of our program will have a chance to perform as weekend, and for the first time, I will have an opportunity to watch the individual skiers perform as a unit," said Chip LaCase, Vermont's ski coach.

The Alpine squad led by captain David Dodge, will compete at the Middlebury Cup, while the Nordic squad will be at two different locations.

The jumpers, led by captain Martin Grimes, will trek to Norwich (Northfield, Vt.), while the cross-country contingent heads for Stirling School in Craftsbury, Conn., for its pre-Carnival meet-up.

"All of our skiers have been performing, but they have been home or long distances from campus, so Mickey Cochran (sophomore coach) and I haven't had an opportunity to take a look at them, but we plan to follow them closely this weekend," added LaCase. LaCase has been "immensely pleased" with the team and is anxious for the Carnival circuit to kick off.

And, LaCase is particularly excited that UVM will begin the prestigious Carnival circuit. "We've been working long hours on this Carnival and we're obviously very excited about it," said the young head coach. "Such people as Carnival Chairman, Steve Wood, Student Association President, Bill Sisco, and Friends of UVM Ski Committee member, Tom Hackett, have contributed countless hours in preparation for the Feb. 2-4 weekend," added LaCase.

The schedule for the weekend has the skiers ending kicking off the Carnival Friday (Feb. 2) at Bolton Valley at 9:30 a.m., followed by the cross-country run at Millston at 1:30 p.m. On Saturday (Feb.

UVM Hosts First Carnival

The weekend (Jan. 26-28) will give the University of Vermont ski team its first opportunity to compete, as the Mountaineers begin to tune up for the February Carnival parade, which begins with UVM's Winter Carnival, Feb. 1 at Bolton Valley and the Watkinson Ski Area.

"All phases of our program will have a chance to perform this weekend, and for the first time, I will have an opportunity to watch the individual skiers perform as a unit," said Chip LaCasse, Vermont's ski coach.

The alpine squad, led by captain David Dodge, will compete at the Middlebury Cup, while the Nordic squad will be at two different locations.

The jumpers, led by captain Martin Grimes, will trek to Northfield (Northfield, Vt.), while the cross country swimmers battle Yankee Conference champions, Connecticut, in a dual meet at the Forbush Pool, Saturday afternoon (Feb. 3) at 1:30 pm.

LaCasse's ski team, considered one of the best in the East this year (last year the club had two second-place finishes) boasts one of the top jumping teams in the East. "We've been working long hours on this Carnival, and we're obviously very excited about it," said the young head coach. "Such people as Carnival Chairman, Steve Wood, Student Association president, Bill Sisco, and friends of UVM Ski committee member, Tom Hackett, have contributed countless hours in preparation for the Feb. 24 weekend," added LaCasse.

The schedule for the weekend has the slalom event kicking off the Carnival Friday (Feb. 2) at Bolton Valley at 10 am, followed by the cross country run at Watkinson at 1:30 pm. On Saturday (Feb.

3), the giant slalom at Bolton begins at 9:30 am, followed by the exciting jumping event at Watkinson at 12:30 pm.

"Maps will soon be available to area fans who would like to see the carnival. We will have an ample supply of maps by the end of next week (Jan. 25-26) for everyone," said LaCasse. They will be available at the UVM athletic office.

Not only is this the first UVM Ski Carnival in the history of the school, but the weekend has been designated as "All-Sports Winter Carnival" as two other athletic teams have key events at home.

The hockey team hosts Colby Friday night (Feb. 2) and the key Division II game of the year is set for Saturday night (Feb. 3) with Bowdoin. Both games are at 7:30 pm.

While the hockey team has two crucial division encounters, Les Leggett's swimmers battle Yankee Conference champions, Connecticut, in a dual meet at the Forbush Pool, Saturday afternoon (Feb. 3) at 1:30 pm.

LaCasse's ski team, considered one of the best in the East this year (last year the club had two second-place finishes) boasts one of the top jumping teams in the East.

LaCasse's ski team, considered one of the best in the East this year (last year the club had two second-place finishes) boasts one of the top jumping teams in the East.

The jumpers are led by the East's best, Peter Kongsli, who won the Dartmouth and Middlebury Carnival jumps, and several other jumping events held during the year.

Kongsli will have plenty of help in Grimes (5th at NCAA's two years ago), Tom Lantz and Tom Odly.

UVM's cross-country runners could be the surprise in the East. "Without doubt, we have improved our cross country team to the point where we are going to pick up invaluable points in the Carnival, and hopefully move us closer to Dartmouth and Middlebury," remarked LaCasse. Veterans Hank Pfeiffer and Knute Gulbrandsen and newcomers Arne Lum and Trygve Kjolseth, both of Oslo, Norway, and Stan Dunkley give Vermont a formidable quartet of top-notch runners.

Just how good Vermont's ski team is will soon be learned, as the Carnival circuit opens in just two weeks, and it's UVM's first chance to act as a host. Following the Vermont Carnival I Dartmouth, Feb. 9-10; Williams, Feb. 16-17; Middlebury, Feb. 22-24 (EISA Championships) and St. Lawrence, March 3-4.

Cats Upset Maine

Vermont's biggest lead was 49-41.

What really helped Vermont was Terry Green. Green held Dave Gavett, Maine's leading scorer, scoreless for the first eight minutes of the second half, and was able to score 17 points during the game. Along with Greco, he was one of the leading scorers for UVM.

In the closing minutes the Bears were forced to go to Gavett to try to rally them. It was in fact during the last eight minutes that he got 11 of his thirty-two points.

In the statistics department, UVM was 27-65 from the floor and a 41% shooting percentage and made 19 of 30 from the free throw line.

The Cats held Maine to 22 of 55 from the floor. The Bears made up for that somewhat from the charity line by completing 20 of 27 to give them a percentage of 74.

Vermont is now six and eight for the season, with a Conference record of 2 and 5.

UVM Falls To UMass

The contest showed the superior depth and strength of Massachusetts. Vermont could not keep up the first half pressure as the UMass zone defense set up the superior strength of the Redmen in the second half. Despite shuffling his lineup, Coach Salzberg could not find the right combination. The excitement of the first half ended as UMass outscored Vermont 46-24 and 77-55 for the game.

Joe Greco led Vermont

with 20 points, the only man with double figures for the Cats. The dependence on Greco meant that he took 30 shots while the other Cats did not. Balance out the attack. In comparison Massachusetts had 'balanced scoring with four men in double figures led by Skinner's 16.

Mass had recently upset eastern power, Penn, and highlight of its rough schedule this season.

Fraternity Forum Elections February 9 Billings Center

Open auditions for a new rock opera, "COVENANT", will be held February 5, 6 and 7 at 7 p.m. in the Arena Theatre. Conceived with lyrics by Jan Goldstein (a UVM student) and with music by David Cash (formerly from UVM, now Duke U.) and Jan Goldstein, the rock opera is the first of its kind to be produced at the University.

"COVENANT" is an interpretation of the events which took place at Mt. Sinai at the time of the giving of the Ten Commandments. The events center around the doubts and fears of the Israelites which cause them to shift allegiance between Moses and the rebellious Korah. Moses' struggle to keep the Israelites in line with the support of his black wife Zipporah, and the growing momentum of dissatisfaction which leads to the climactic worship of the golden calf-like idol and the return of Moses with the tablets.

"COVENANT" will have a cast of about 28, including Moses, his wife Zipporah (she must be black), Korah, Aaron, Miriam, Joshua, God, and the Israelites. Mr. Thomas L. Read of the Music Department will conduct a 17 piece orchestra accompanying the performances of this new rock opera which will premiere April 24-28. February 2, Friday at 4 p.m. in the Arena Theatre Jan Goldstein will give an account of "COVENANT", including some of the songs from the show. For auditions come prepared to sing a song of your choice with or without your own accompaniment.

MED SCHOOL
ADMISSION PROBLEMS?
EuroMed may offer RX via overseas training

For the session starting Fall, 1973, the European Medical Students Placement Service, Inc. will assist qualified American students in gaining admission to recognized overseas medical schools.

And that's just the beginning. Since the language barrier constitutes the preponderant difficulty in succeeding at a foreign school, the EuroMed program also includes an intensive 8-12 week medical and conversational language course, mandatory for all students. Five hours daily, the course is given in the country where the student will attend medical school.

In addition, the European Medical Students Placement Service provides students with an 8-12 week intensive cultural orientation course with American students now studying medicine in that particular country serving as counselors.

Senior or graduate students currently enrolled in an American university are eligible to participate in the EuroMed program.

For application and further information, phone toll free, (800) 645-1234

Editorial: Winter Carnival One More Fading Tradition?

The first Winter Carnival, billed as "a changing tradition" has joined the ranks, at least temporarily, of Kake Walk, Homecoming and other UVM customs. Virtually eliminated this weekend, except for the athletic events, Winter Carnival, really before its inception, now becomes one more event which has failed to catch hold at UVM.

Kake Walk, cancelled in 1969, has since met with a series of replacements. All efforts for Winter Weekend activities, however, received unsuccessful responses from the student body. Perhaps Winter Carnival could be the exception; we can only hope the Student Association feels that way and will act accordingly in the next few weeks.

Times are changing quickly and so, too, is our college campus. But in the midst of this rapid transition, can't we find a small place for customs which have been a part of student life for many generations?

Now Is A Time For Peace

by Gene Bergman

The war is over. I don't know how most of you feel, but on Saturday I was one of the happiest, most satisfied persons alive. All I did was smile. I turned on the radio at 7:01 Saturday night and heard an announcer say, "We are now in our first minute of peace in twenty years. All over the United States bells are ringing." And the bells did ring. He went on to thank all of the people who demonstrated and protested against this war and thanked these people because without their efforts we would be in our twentieth year of war, instead of our first minute of peace.

We would like to thank you, who sacrifice your time, freedom and money, for the cause of peace and justice in the world. It is our peace more than anyone else's, save the Vietnamese, it is our victory and a Vietnamese victory. Yesterday, the streets of Hanoi were filled with jubilant, happy people—for the war is over.

Now is not the time for politics or rhetoric, it is a time for peace and happiness. Thank you, peace-loving people throughout the world, for it is our peace today. We have our "peace with honor."

In peace, I. freedom, in justice, in struggle.

Variety Of Jobs Open To Seniors

by Harriet Gluck

In just a few months, another class of seniors will be graduating and leaving University life. Seniors will soon have to decide what to do after graduation. There are many choices—get a job, travel in America, play in Europe or go to graduate school are a few of the options. The Career Planning and Placement office can assist students in making decisions. Located in 224 Waterman, the office has numerous functions. Providing information on job openings and employers, scheduling on-campus interviews for career employment, giving career information, assisting in preparing resumes and maintaining credential files are the office's services.

Director Larry Simmons has developed his own philosophy about the Career Planning and Placement office. If you have hopes of strolling into the office, asking Larry to find you a job and having him say, "Sure, I will arrange everything for you," forget it! Larry is a very helpful person but he feels the accountability rests on the students. Larry, who considers the basic placement function to be a job-referral process, will gladly assist individuals in developing career plans and provide needed information. However, the office secretary will not compose letters of introduction or resumes for you. Nor will Larry call IBM and arrange for them to hire you. Information and advice will be given to you but you are the one who has to make the final decisions and do the actual job hunting.

The Career Planning and Placement office is gearing itself to provide more services to the liberal arts person. Those college graduates with concrete technical training, such as engineering, usually have little trouble in deciding what field of employment to seek. Yet, what about the students who have majored in history or French? They have an area of competency, but may not know what to do with it. There are many occupational opportunities that students may not be aware of and the Career Planning and Placement office has a reading room full of reference

"Profit Is At Hand"

LBJ: Memoir To A Former Hippie

by Jim Bradley

The news of Lyndon Johnson's death didn't make me sad. Not that it made me happy, either. It was just the news of an old man who had once been a bitter enemy, back in days when the whole world looked different and the air was alive with the smell of hope and adventure, but who now (like me) was harmless. It wasn't so long ago in objective time that I cursed him, but more than time has passed. And forgiveness can be almost "crucial" the way it sneaks into your heart and undermines your allegiance to "principles". So when I would see an old LBJ on T.V. amiably watching a football game with his hair growing down his neck, I would see him with softer eyes.

There was one thing I always did like about Johnson, and that was his past. He was, as most people know, born a poor boy in a three room house in a part of Texas where not much grows. And back around the time when my parents were being born he graduated from high school in a little town, 15 years old. Now, his parents wanted him to go on to college, as parents are wont to do. But Lyndon said "No", and with four friends bought an old Model-T Ford and took off for California. Two years later, after bumming around and working as a fruit picker, a dishwasher, a waiter, he returned home. Again his parents urged him to enroll at college, but again he refused, and instead to himself a job on a road construction gang driving bulldozers and pickups for $1 a day. When he got tired of that he finally did matriculate, at SW Texas State Teachers' College. But they say that when he left home for his first term at school he hitch-hiked all the way, to prove his independence.

When I first learned all this about LBJ, I thought, "Now that's the kind of man I would want to have a President." Well, you just can never tell.

Third Annual Cynic Photography Contest

The CYNIC announces the "Third Annual CYNIC Photography Contest." The rules are as follows:

1. The contest is open to all students of the University of Vermont who are amateurs. (Amateurs will be considered those people who do not support themselves by taking pictures.)
2. The pictures will be divided into the three following categories: faces, landscapes, and other subjects. The category of other subjects will include any picture not included in the categories of faces and landscapes.
3. All photographs will be black and white and will be approximately 8 x 10 inches. There is no limit to the number of photographs that each photographer may submit.
4. The pictures submitted will be the property of the VERMONT CYNIC, which will have the consent of the photographer to publish them in the newspaper.
5. The VERMONT CYNIC has the right to request the photographer to submit a subject release form signed by those people who may appear in the photograph.
6. The pictures may have been taken at any time, past or present.
7. Pictures entered in the Third Annual CYNIC Photography Contest could not have been entered in any other photography contest sponsored by the CYNIC.
8. Photographs will be judged on print quality and composition by a board of judges.
9. The board of judges will consist of Edward Bobbins of Student Photography Service, Tito, of the University Photo Service, and Bob Recupero, of ARIEL. The judges will be ineligible to enter the contest.
10. All photographs should be placed in the CYNIC office or the SA desk.
11. The photographer's name, address, and telephone number should be lightly printed in pencil on the back of each photograph submitted, along with a title, if any.
12. Deadline for entries will be March 1, 1973.
13. One winner will be chosen from each category and the winners will be announced in the March 22 issue of the CYNIC.
14. The winner in each category will receive $25.00.
15. All questions should be referred directly to the CYNIC office.

Letter: Should Cynic Endorse Candidates?

To the editor:

In the past the Cynic editorial page has officially endorsed candidates for the S.A. Presidency. I consider that practice outrageous and unfair, especially in view of the nature of the Cynic and the place it occupies within the university community.

We must keep in mind the fact that the Cynic is supported by Student Association funds which are paid by all students here. The Cynic is also the only student newspaper on this campus. Thus, because everyone must support the Cynic, and because the paper occupies a monopoly position I think it only fair to all candidates that in future S.A. elections the Cynic remain neutral.

Sincerely,
Joe Marks

Vietnam Ceasefire

by Steven C. Rice

It is seven p.m.
Saturday, January 27, 1973
in the United States of America.

It is one moment of time:
Will it be everlasting?

It is eight a.m. in Vietnam and maybe the sun shines, for the radio announces uncertain peace.

It is one moment of time:
Will it be everlasting?

The radio announces uncertain peace
And I sigh relief, feeling dead.
I am twenty years, and very old.

It is one moment of time:
Will it be everlasting?

It is morning there and evening here.
It seems peaceful,
yes, even everlasting.

It is one moment of time:
Will it be everlasting?

Freaks And Peasants In D.C.: Long Live The King

by Scott Cahoon

There's a cold wind slicing through the capitol city on this, King Richard's second coronation day; the kind of wind that searches for and destroys every last pocket of warmth in your huddled up frame. Driving down this morning, we cheered when the voice on the radio assured us the temperature would be in the 60's. I really don't care that he lied to us, except that he is probably spending the day in some warm press room, watching as one of the dozens of TV cameras around the city scans the crowds of loyal subjects waiting along Pennsylvania Avenue for the peasant to begin.

There are TV cameras down by the Washington Monument, too, where the effete bums who have come to demonstrate against the war (The war? Oh, yes, the War!) wander about the area graciously provided them by the royal government, conveniently removed from any possible interference from the people who have come to see the coronation ceremonies. At 10:30, however, almost everyone is on the other side of the hill from the cameras, gathered on or near the steps of the Lincoln Memorial. Army helicopters hover over us like watchful parents who, while willing to humor us, want to make sure we don't get into any mischief. The Great Emancipator is obscured by peace freaks listening while those with bullhorns tell them what to do.

"Please stop at the rear of this truck for an official collection canister. N-PAC and PCPJ, the organizers of this demonstration, because of its emergency have incurred a debt of $40,000 which must be paid off by a huge collection today. You will also receive an official inauguration day peace button."

"Awwright. We are going to man in the street for this march, uh, in three groups. Uh, the first group will gather over here, uh to the left of the monument, uh, in this, uh, street that's directly in front of us here..."

"Hey! We're gonna start making some noise here, so Nixon and Agnew and everyone else over there will hear us, and we can tell them what we think of their stupid and immoral war, and they should sign the peace treaty and get out of Vietnam now! One, two, three, four, we don't want your racist war..."

A girl with a stack of papers stops Ken. "Would you like to buy a copy of The Militant? I ignore her as I've heard the rap before. Stories of oppressed hospital workers fighting bravely to win their rights from the capitalist ogres who employ them; and militant farm workers battling the pigs who come to break up their picket lines. The world seems simpler through the eyes of The Militant than it is in Reader's Digest.

There seem to be more people than ever selling newspapers, buttons, literature, or simply asking for money outright. Peace demonstrations have become trade fairs, where each group hawks its own particular brand of Truth, and tries to raise as much money as possible from those of us who are still unenlightened. And if you want more for your money, they'll be glad to give you a rapid-fire spiel, honed in hundreds of confrontations such as this, and loaded with phrases such as "imperialist aggression" and "third-world peoples" which can be strung together in long sentences which will fit almost any occasion.

"Please stop at the rear of the truck for an official collection canister and help pay off the $50,000 debt incurred by N-PAC and PCPJ..."

"Awwright. All those from veteran's groups will, uh, gather in group D. All those, uh, in, uh, religious organizations will be in group E. All those in..."

"Nixon, Agnew, you can't hide. We charge you with genocide."

"Wanna buy a copy of Challenge?"
"at the rear of the truck for an official..."
"Would you care to contribute?"

There being a couple of hours left before the march was to begin, we go back to the center of town for some lunch and warmth. Re-emerging after BLT's and coffee, we discover that the sounds of the coronation are being broadcast through loudspeakers to the gathered populace, which has come to witness the coronation of their beloved King. On top of the taller buildings, propped against the sky, dark figures watch, hawklime. In front of the courthouse, partially screened by some bushes, three freaks pass a joint while the guards chase away hippies and direct fathers with small children to the rest rooms. Some long hairs supporting an obviously sick girl approach the guards and are told there's no help for them here.

"Let each of us ask not just what will government do for me, but what I can do for myself?"

"Let each of us reach out for that one precious quality government cannot provide: a new level of respect for the rights and feelings of one another and for the individual human dignity which is the cherished birthright of every American."

Thus saith the Lord, Our King, Richard.

We try to work our way back to the demonstration, but we find we are blocked by the parade route, so we resign ourselves to watching the show which their royal highnesses have prepared for us. We wait a long time. It gets colder. Finally we hear shouts and applause in the distance and, looking, we several busses coming toward us rapidly. They are marked "First Family" (I thought he only had two daughters) and the reactions as they speed by vary according to the sympathies of the crowd. One man holds his middle finger high while another films it against the disappearing busses.

The parade appears at last. Robot-like servicemen march by, perfectly in line, only the lower parts of their bodies are in motion. High school bands, the lines somewhat ragged are led by scantily-clad majorettes who shiver and grin into the biting wind. One of the soldiers lining the parade route stands stiffly "at ease," then snaps to attention, executes a perfect about face and salutes as the flag goes by. Roving bands of freaks chant "Ho, Ho, Ho Chi Minh. NLF is gonna win." The soldier doesn't move a muscle, but his eyes are scanning the crowd, looking for what?

Driving home the next day, we are uncertain of the road, and occasionally lose our way. We are tired, and so a little peevish. But we press on, which is all we can ever do. It's been a long time, and we've been a lot of places, but the war is finally over. The peace freaks will find other causes and we'll all continue wandering, holding on to our own individual conceptions of reality. And people with bullhorns (or radios, or memos) will still try to lead us in three different directions at once.

But like the majorettes, we'll keep on into the teeth of the storm, ill-protected though we are. And like the soldier, we'll keep looking for whatever, even though we seem unable to move until the man says jump. And once in a while, angry and frustrated and watched by dark figures from tall buildings, we'll say "fuck you" to the world in general, while families of kings speed by.

Student Activism Growing; But Senate Performs Poorly

by John Franco

The article in the January 23 Cynic by Ms. Barbara Frankel raises some essential questions about the SA Senate, the University, and the student movement as a whole. I feel there is an element of truth in Ms. Frankel's assessment of the SA Senate, but that her overall assessment of the campus political climate is unfair. She asserts, "Across the country, minorities study programs, co-ed dorms, clinics offering sexual advice, and, in many cases dispensing methods of birth control, have been innovated," and so, she says, the movement has died into a quiet apathy. In other words students have been bought off by tokenism and a good screw.

Is this in fact the case? Has the student movement been so crassly limited in scope? Certainly not. Students have been in the forefront of those who have been asking fundamental questions about this society, and demanding fundamental change. Such demands have not been even remotely answered. The abhorrent undemocratic structure of this university attests to this fact.

Have students forgotten these issues? One must realize that student unrest was a new phenomenon in the Sixties, and initially created quite a sensation. Present student activity does not receive such attention, despite the fact that activism has become more widespread and the radicalization deeper. A small group of radicals could, five years ago, make more of a stir in the press than the more widespread activity of today. But the events at Southern University in November indicate that the Black Nationalist movement is again on the upswing, and last spring's events at Columbia and B.U. show that the pot is still simmering. The antiwar movement has grown in the Sixties and early Seventies, not declined. For instance, the past year has witnessed three national antiwar mobilizations, the latest one drawing over 100,000 people in the dead-of-winter. In previous years a midwinter mobilization would have been unthinkable. On January 20, it was a powerful reality.

Witness the growth of anti-war activity on this campus alone. The Sixties saw, on this campus, one major demonstration, in June of 1969, when 600 marched to oppose ROTC on campus. The leaders of that march even went to the administration for permission to hold it! Offhand, I can think of at least seven major local demonstrations in the past year, not to mention the ROTC occupation and the arrest of 53 demonstrators at the Federal building, which were significant firsts for Burlington. And the dynamics of these events have not been limited to the campus, as shown by the mass demonstrations of construction workers in early December. In short, the events of the past year, with their periods of ebb and flow, lull and explosion, have simply been responding to the law of combined and uneven development. These events, in spurts and jumps, will gradually envelope broader and broader sectors of this community and this society in the struggle over fundamental issues.

So what role has the SA Senate had to play in this scheme? Admittedly, the Senate has done little, and I, like many other Senators, were extremely disappointed with the Senate's first semester performance. The reasons for this are many. Firstly, the Senate is by design a toy government, with non-power carefully built into it. A body without institutional power is as helpless as a Legislature without state power. The Duma in Czarist Russia is closely analogous to the SA Senate in this university.

I, and others in the Coalition recognized this but felt that the Senate could serve as an effective vehicle for organizing and working on the fundamental issues of the university, and could serve as leadership in the fight for student interests. However, we ran into a snag. The Senate is composed of two blocks - those who propose and those who oppose. I invite anyone to check the Senate minutes of last semester. The record will favor the Coalition in a ratio of about 95-1 for activity and interest. But when you are faced with an inert block of Senators who oppose nearly everything you say or propose, even on procedural matters, it is indeed difficult to get anywhere.

Thirdly, there is the vicious circle of student non-interest in the Senate. The Senate cannot, because of the aforementioned structural limitations, do much without considerable active student support. Then, on the other hand, students don't support the Senate because it doesn't do anything. And so the spinning wheel goes round and round.

The answer boils down to this: the Senate has got to get its shit together, and the students have got to get their shit together. Some senators are planning action projects on campus issues, and plan to begin agitation for fundamental changes in the political structure of the University. I invite, I plead to the student body to come to Senate meetings in massive numbers. Don't be intimidated by the parliamentary baloney. Come and speak - tell us off, if you like, we really need it - loudly and clearly. If you do, maybe we, the Senate and the Student body, can both get our shit together and begin to move.

Loggins & Messina's Second; The Return Of Cocker

by Doug Collette
LOGGINS AND MESSINA
Columbia 31748

It's astonishing to hear this band merge the stylistic forces of pop, country, jazz and rock and roll into a coherent style that is instantly identifiable as the Loggins/Messina sound. Their synthesis of these diverse elements and their ability to combine them in such a way as to have the characteristics of each idiom enhance, rather than grate against the others, make the Loggins/Messina band a penultimate example of the hybridization intrinsic to rock and roll.

Loggins and Messina is no radical departure from Sittin' In; there is a tighter group sound, no doubt the result of a year on the road as a performing band, but that's merely an inevitable refinement. The concept of the first LP, in Messina's words, was to treat each song individually to its best effect and as close to perfection as is each performance on that record. They've accomplished the same feat here: either through a mixture of similar components or a counterpoint of dissimilar ones. Each track is as full an expression of a particular mood as is possible to achieve through words, music, impeccable sound recording and inventive production. The band's sympathetic musicianship and their delicious blend of voices are, if anything, purified and as far as compositions go, there are delightful love songs, infectious rockers, catchy little ditties and significant observations/statements that, taken as a whole, afford the listener all the pleasure and insight he could expect from great art.

Each of the two Loggins and Messina LP's is among the most important listening experiences I've had since I first heard Rod Stewart's records. And the question of which of the two is the better does not interest me in the least.

JOE COCKER

Joe Cocker's first long-player in close to two and one-half years is as unpretentious and straightforward as the man himself who still has the gift of being able to wring the last minutes of emotion from the plainest of phrases. His new band plays with the same gritty economy as the original Grease Band and a horn section plus female background singers add just the right touch of enrichment.

Most of the material this time is Cocker originals and while none, with the lovely exception of "Something To Say" would amount to much in anyone else's hands, Cocker and his accompanists get into the kind of basic, earthy groove that's a joy to hear and feel.

Since most of the interpretation was Joe's former mainstay, I wish he would tackle more outside material like "Midnight Rider" for a few more lively reworkings of other people's songs would have raised the energy level of this album to near stratospheric intensity.

But I'm satisfied with Cocker's comeback: considering how long he laid off rock and roll, he could've done much worse. I only hope we don't have to wait so long for his next venture.

Life is a part-time job

Maybe you've heard all the stories about part-time selling on campus. Times change. Not the selling part, but the what-you're-selling part. A deferred payment life insurance plan is easy to sell because it's easy to afford. By financing premiums until graduation, New England Life helps college students start a solid life insurance program now.

But that's only half the story.

The income you could earn with us is probably better than anything else you could earn on or off campus. Think it over. And then if you're interested in talking about it, call Jay Buckley 658-4978.

VPIRG Activities, Credit, Refunds...

Vermont legislators are provided to aid any student who is interested in writing to his representatives. Any questions concerning the Citizen Lobby will be answered by Peter Cobb at 863-3280.

OTHER LOCAL VPIRG ACTIVITIES

In addition to the Citizen Lobby, VPIRG-UVM has been active in consumer affairs. VPIRG volunteers at the University of Vermont conduct a monthly food, price survey, comparing the prices of over forty grocery items in eighteen Burlington area supermarkets. The results of the survey are published each month in Chittenden magazine, and the information provided includes the amount of the total grocery bill at each store and the difference between the highest and lowest priced stores. VPIRG-UVM also makes copies of the survey available to students and to the general public, and reaction to the comparison has generally been favorable.

Prior to Christmas, in coordination with other VPIRG's in the United States, VPIRG-UVM conducted an investigation of dangerous toys being sold in department stores. Led by UVM students Kirki Kirkpatrick and Patti O'Brien, the survey found that toys that had been banned by the federal Food and Drug Administration were still being sold in some area stores. Upon hearing of this, Donald McQuin, an FDA inspector in Vermont, removed the toys from the shelves. He also was interested in investigating several toys not on the FDA Banned Toy List which VPIRG found to be dangerous nonetheless. VPIRG-UVM plans to expand the toy survey this semester, and, at the request of Mr. McQuin, will report any toys that appear to be dangerous to his FDA office in Essex Junction.

VPIRG's local organization at the University of Vermont unsuccessfully fought the building of the jughandle interchange, and is also conducting a "congressional watchdog" which means that VPIRG-UVM is monitoring the activities of Vermont's representatives in Washington, D.C. VPIRG at UVM hopes to expand its activities this semester to include a prescription drug price survey, a survey of the quality of care in area nursing homes, and a monitoring of local government activities.

Two UVM students, Pam Brown and Marcia Vennart, in cooperation with Mr. Henry Albarelli of the Burlington Housing Authority, are preparing to study the quality of health care among residents of Housing Authority units, with an eye to laying the groundwork for a comprehensive health care plan using already existing government money.

ACADEMIC CREDIT

UVM students, with the permission of an instructor, can get academic credit for work with the Vermont Public Interest Research Group. Five University of Vermont students are already doing so, and there is potential for many more. Credit is granted under the Readings and Research programs in many departments. Students may develop their own projects, with which VPIRG can assist, or they may come to VPIRG for help in designing a project.

VPIRG NEEDS EVERYONE'S HELP

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group has a professional staff, but they cannot by themselves ensure that the organization will be a success. VPIRG needs dedicated, willing students who wish to see it prosper. Students must run both the state and local organizations, and student volunteers can devote their efforts to organization, coordination, and publicity. Or they can become involved in research and social action.

VPIRG needs volunteers, and VPIRG needs ideas. If you are interested in any of the projects mentioned in this article, or if you have ideas for your own research and action, please come to a VPIRG meeting any Monday night at 7 P.M. in the Roundhouse in Lower Billings. If you cannot attend a meeting but are interested in VPIRG, please contact Sharon Frink at 862-4306, or Jeff Ewen at 863-3280, or leave a note in Box 15 at the Student Activities Desk in Billings Center. We would like to hear from you.

VPIRG REFUNDS

There are UVM students who disagree with some aspects of the Vermont Public Interest Research Group, and VPIRG, in the interests of fairness, cannot use their money. If you have paid the VPIRG fee this semester, but do not wish to support the organization, your money will be cheerfully refunded Monday through Friday of next week, between 10 A.M. and 4 P.M. in the Main Lobby of Billings Center. We will take your name and address, and a refund check will be mailed to you in about a week. We only ask you to inform yourself about VPIRG before you decide on your refund.

Thank you

What's The Underground?

It's a store. Actually, it's a store within a store.

The Underground is the name of a department at the Mayfair that caters to the taste and style of young women.

Some have thought that it was named after "the movement" or the alternate life style. Such was not the case. What we had in mind was the London subway or, as it is generally called, "the underground". In the Mayfair district of London there is a subway stop called—appropriately—Mayfair.

By chance we came across the London subway sign and hung it over the stairway leading down into our basement shop. Ergo, the Underground.

We invite you to visit our underground and see what we have in the line of clothes for the young woman. We have pants, tops, shirts and a whole variety of clothes that we think will please you enormously.

Come in and browse. Buy only if you wish... only if you are pleased with what you see.

Professionalism. You know that a good honest thing is being done when they work. They are comfortable to work with, they are precise, professional.

What we got from Chip and Mike, the special effects and the smaller characters was good because they worked hard they worked well, and they worked together. That's the best thing about them, they worked together and they had care and concern and love for what they were doing.

Ferry said of the play itself that the time element was working against them, but there were extenuating circumstances that cut their rehearsal time to three and a half weeks. Even a week would have made a big difference, he thought, "but we were sold out practically before the publicity went out."

That fact speaks for itself. Demas also had high praise for Mr. Tim Rice, "an excellent writer," and Derrin Quiber who with the help of a small crew built the numerous and colorful sets. She worked out the costumes for "The Band."

At this point Jeffrey Mattson came in. "Here is the program," he said, handing Jerry a rose which he placed in an old copy of "Doctor Faustus." Thank you," said Jerry.

Finney, two pairs of brothers who are each others' cousins. They are young, still kids. They play Blue Grass, and they're good. Blue grass has that high, lonesome sound, harmonies which have edges, man, edges of anger and despair and sorrow which can cut right through you like a knife. These guys aren't so good as to really get down to those edges, but they're still young. They aren't old enough yet to know enough to play that good. But they displayed a poise and professionalism which was surprising for their years. They also displayed a good attitude. They flubbed up the beginning and ending of a fine song called "Sin City" just a little bit, hardly enough to notice, and otherwise did a fine job on it. But after the song, Doug Marlow, the bassist and spokesman, apologized for their mistakes. That kind of perfect nism can be a drag when you're right up next to it, but there is no doubt that it is that kind of perfectionism which has made them as good as they are, and which makes it likely that they will continue to improve.

The other members of the group, besides Doug Marlow, are Tim Harkins, mandolin, Bruce Stockwell, banjo, and Barry Stockwell, guitar. Each plays an important part in the group, no one is being carried. Tim on mandolin and Bruce on banjo played especially well. Bruce has won some banjo-picking contests around the state. They sing most of their songs in three-part harmony, handled competently by Barry, Bruce, and Doug. They have an album out and their concert is an indication it's probably a good one. But I'll tell you, if you want to hear the best bluegrass, I suggest you go out and get a hold of a record by Bill Monroe and his Blue Grass Boys. That's where you'll really get that high lonesome sound.

"This is responsible public action, and the students who joined to pay statements to VPIRG on Vermont campuses, should be proud of their movement."

So said the White River Valley Herald, a weekly paper from Randolph, Vermont, in an editorial in its January 18th issue. The editors of the newspaper were referring to a study of the quality of children's dental care in the state of Vermont that was done by the Vermont Public Interest Research Group. The report, accompanied by specific proposals for dealing with the problem of inadequate dental care, was made possible by the students at five of Vermont's colleges and universities—UVM, Goddard, Marlboro, Castleton State, and Johnson State—through their payment of three dollars per semester to support VPIRG.

Just what is VPIRG though? What does a student get for the VPIRG fee that appears on his or her bill every semester? Through an organization of this type, a student gets a stronger, more meaningful voice in the decision making process that affects his or her life. Through VPIRG the student has an effective outlet for instituting social change.

This last statement, in a few lines, expresses the philosophy behind a student-run public interest research group. The idea came from Ralph Nader, who saw that students in the United States had a tremendous desire to effect social change, but also realized that the young people on America's campuses lacked a truly effective outlet for their idealism. Student concern would flare around certain issues as the Vietnam War or ecology, but would die under the pressure of examination periods and summer jobs. The massive outpouring of student concern and effort that characterized the war demonstrations after the Cambodian invasion, and Earth Day each year, simply could not be sustained throughout the year. What was needed was some mechanism to channel student efforts into a sustained, full time push for progressive social change. This is how student PIRGs were born.

Ralph Nader and his fellow raiders have traveled to many campuses in all parts of the U.S., encouraging students to form their own public interest research groups. PIRGs were to be funded by students and controlled by students, with no outside interference from Nader's organization or from University administrations. Students would use their money to hire a staff of full time professionals who would work for only the public interest research group and have no outside or conflicting interests. The staff would be under the control of a student board of trustees, elected from the different colleges that were members of the PIRG, and that board of trustees would decide as to the issues to which the PIRG would devote its resources.

This concept has taken hold in several parts of the country, and student controlled public interest research groups have been started in many states, in addition to Vermont. PIRGs now exist or are organizing in more than 15 states, and some of their work has been impressive. A PIRG in Michigan publicized the fact that turkey farms in that state were using a chemical known to cause cancer in mice to fatten their birds, having no knowledge of the substance's possible effect on humans. The PIRG campaign led to the discontinuance of the chemical's use. A PIRG in western Pennsylvania exposed property tax fraud in one county. The Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group has gone to court in its fight against higher utility rates, and the Minnesota PIRG is studying sex discrimination by employment agencies. The New Jersey PIRG had established a consumer complaint center, and was largely responsible for the defeat of a transportation bond issue, which would have been a boon to highway construction in a state sorely in need of better mass transit. And several PIRGs across the nation conducted a pre-Christmas study of dangerous toys on the market, and found that in several states (including Vermont) toys that have been banned by the Federal Food and Drug Administration are still being sold.

But what about Vermont PIRG? What has the group that UVM's students help fund been doing? In its less than one year of existence, the Vermont Public Interest Group has compiled an impressive record of achievements.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE VERMONT PUBLIC INTEREST RESEARCH GROUP

The heart of VPIRG's structure is the Board of Trustees, which consists primarily of students. Each member college is entitled to representation on the Board based on the number of students paying the VPIRG fee at that school. Every campus with 150 paying members is entitled to one trustee, and schools that have 1000 VPIRG members are entitled to two trustees. Beyond this, a school receives an additional representative for each additional 1000 paying students. In addition, there are two at-large trustees, elected at VPIRG's annual meeting every March, to represent non-student members and students at those colleges that don't have 150 paying members. Community groups are also entitled to representation on the Board of Trustees.

Under this formula, the University of Vermont is entitled to six representatives on the VPIRG Board, and is the largest school belonging to the organization. UVM's trustees are elected every year, at the end of January, and in common with all VPIRG trustees, serve for a term of one year. Anyone is eligible to run for a position as one of UVM's representatives on the Board, and all UVM students who are members of VPIRG (i.e., who have paid the VPIRG fee) are entitled to vote for the candidates of their choice.

The Board of Trustees, who meet at least once a month, are responsible for running the Vermont Public Interest Research Group. They hire the organization's professional staff and make policy decisions. It is the job of the VPIRG trustees to determine the issues on which the staff will work, and the Board oversees staff performance.

The professional staff, consisting of a director and other personnel, is charged with implementing the decisions of the Board of Trustees. Full time staff are paid yearly salaries and are responsible only to VPIRG's trustees, who, of course, are responsible to the students who elect them. VPIRG employees provide the expertise and full time commitment necessary to translate student idealism into concrete action. They research issues, testify before public commissions and legislative bodies, lobby, prepare recommendations on specific issues, and do whatever else is necessary to carry out the directions of the trustees.

One of the most important aspects of the structure of VPIRG is the local campus organization. This group, which can be structured either formally or informally, depending on the wishes of a particular college's students, consists of that campus' representatives to the state Board of Trustees, perhaps a local VPIRG governing board, and the volunteers who both aid the statewide staff, in Montpelier and conduct their own projects.

At UVM the local VPIRG structure is relatively informal, with Sharon Frink, a freshman, the primary organizer. Local VPIRG meetings are held every Monday night in the Roundhouse in Lower Billings Center, at 7 p.m.

THE VPIRG STAFF WHO DO THE STUDENTS EMPLOY?

After its formation last winter, the first task facing VPIRG was to find a competent staff and to provide them with an office. The latter was a relatively easy matter, and suitable office space was found in Montpelier, less than a block from the state capitol, and within easy walking distance of most of Vermont's governmental offices. The location was also convenient to most of the state's lobbying organizations.

Finding the proper people to staff VPIRG was a more difficult problem. This task fell to newly elected trustees from UVM and Goddard College, and to the representatives of other schools as more of them joined VPIRG. In its first year of operation, the Vermont Public Interest Research Group has collected a small but highly effective staff, in addition to several part-time volunteers who have done some very fine work.

VPIRG's director, who, at $7,000 per year is the organization's highest paid employee, is Scott Skinner. Scott was hired in April and organized the VPIRG office in the early summer. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1964 and from Columbia Law School in 1969. Between college and law school, he taught English as a Peace Corps Volunteer in Nepal. He has worked as an attorney with the Institute of Public Administration in New York City and with the Connecticut Citizen Action Group. VPIRG's Health Specialist is Jay Brines, who received his B.A. and M.A. in biology from Hunter College. He worked with the American Red Cross as a research technician investigating problems of blood-clotting. His unhappiness with institutionalized research led him to community health education, in which he received a second masters degree. He taught laboratory courses in experimental psychology, biology, and molecular biology at Hunter College.

VPIRG has hired another lawyer in addition to Scott Skinner, Larry Silverman. Larry came to VPIRG in October from Washington, D.C., where he was a partner in the law firm of Esposito and Silverman. He is a graduate of St. Johns College in Annapolis and the University of Pennsylvania Law School. After law school he worked with Ralph Nader, co-authoring the study of the nation's air pollution regulation, Vanishing Air. He also worked for Nader in West Virginia where he played a key role in forcing Union Carbide to clean up its heavy pollution.

VPIRG's campus coordinator, John Stone, graduated from Lake Forest College, where he co-founded and co-directed the Nerve Center, designed to bring together the community and students around social and political issues. He also founded the Lake Forest Draft Information Group. Upon graduation he was executive director of TRIP, Inc., a drug treatment, rehabilitation and information center in New Britain, Connecticut. He has also run for the New Hampshire legislature. Jeff is coordinating local campus VPIRG activities of the state office, organizing efforts to bring new colleges into VPIRG, and working with the Citizen Lobby.

Joining the VPIRG staff on Feb. 5 will be another lawyer, Caroline Nickerson. She is a graduate of Radcliffe and Harvard Law School. She has had extensive litigation experience, including two years with the Legal Services Program in Washington, D.C., and two years with the Public Defender. Caroline is also quite knowledgeable in the areas of occupational health and safety and labor relations.

In addition to the full-time, salaried staff, VPIRG is also benefitting from the services of several volunteer and part-time staff members. Jim Harts, a retired New York businessman now living in Vermont, is attending legislative committee meetings, monitoring solid waste activities of the state and state purchasing, and is looking into the effect of utility advertising on rates. Marge Wells and Tammy Aronson are two part-time employees who keep files organized and assist in general office work, in addition to monitoring meetings of legislative committees and citizens' groups. Also working for VPIRG on a part-time basis is Steve Hedger who, prepared a study of the effects of the ski industry on a Vermont town. A volunteer working on flood plain legislation is Larry Stone, a UVM student who is also getting academic credit for his work.

WHAT HAS THE VERMONT PUBLIC INTEREST RESEARCH GROUP ACCOMPLISHED?

Since VPIRG's formation a year ago, both the professional staff in Montpelier and the local organization at UVM have been keeping very busy. There have been projects initiated by the staff and by the students themselves, and VPIRG's activities have won the respect (if not always the support) of the state's media, government officials, and representatives of various interest groups in Vermont.

In April 1972 a problem of public interest was presented at a local VPIRG board meeting at the University of Vermont. A man involved in the health care delivery field came to VPIRG with the following: Blue Cross and Blue Shield had asked the Vermont State Department of Banking and Insurance to approve a substantial rate increase. VPIRG was asked to investigate the situation and determine whether there was a case for protesting the increase. It soon became apparent that students did not have the background to investigate the Blues' rather complicated financial policies and records, but some interesting evidence began to emerge on their methods for arriving at policies. It appeared that there was considerable evidence that a large proportion of the Blues had conflicts of interest. The following is a brief summary of a report of an investigation carried out by Ann Ehrlich, a VPIRG research associate.

According to the bylaws of the Blues, the corporations are to consist of voting members, who elect directors and some officers, and directors, who elect the remaining officers, appoint committees including the executive committee, and make policy. A certain proportion of the members and directors, as prescribed in the bylaws, are to be representatives of the general public. Using standard sources such as Dun and Bradstreet, background information was obtained on most of the representatives of the general public. It was found that many were executives of banks that handled Blue Cross or Blue Shield money, some were employed by or were directors of a company in which the groups have nearly a fifth of a million dollars invested, many were executives or directors of insurance companies, several were actually administrators, directors, or other employees of hospitals, and one was a dentist. In all, 46% of the Blue Shield voting members, 42% of the Blue Cross voting members, and 47% of the Blue Cross directors, who were appointed to represent the general public had interests as stated above. This left the Blues in flagrant violation of their bylaws.

June 27th the Department of Banking and Insurance held a public hearing on the Blues' request for a rate hike (an earlier hearing had resulted in a refusal). VPIRG was a party to this hearing. The report summarized above was introduced into the record and in addition several other statements were made. VPIRG questioned whether a group dominated by representatives of the medical professions and insurance companies would make serious efforts to curb runaway increases in the costs of health care. The Blues are in a unique position of control over hospitals and doctors in that they make contracts with them to reimburse the costs of medical care of their policy holders. Blue Cross might, if it wished, deny a contract to a hospital that was spending frivolously and passing the expense on to the consumer in the form of higher costs. Blue Shield might do the same with physicians. However, it appears that this sort of power has never been exercised. VPIRG has taken the position that regulation will never be exercised by the Blues until the management of the groups is in the hands of the consumers as mandated by their bylaws. VPIRG testified that no rate increases should be granted.

until the Blues demonstrate that they will act in good faith as regards representation of the public, and that they will act to keep down the costs of medical care in Vermont.

July 28th the Blues were granted a rate increase somewhat smaller than they had requested. The increase was granted by the New Hampshire Commissioner John Durkin and Vermont Commissioner Charles Black. "It is imperative that the Blues be reconstituted as a public utility," Durkin said. "It is imperative that the Blues be reconstituted as a public utility, and that a clear-cut majority has absolutely no connection with hospitals, physicians, or insurance companies, but rather are representatives of the working men and women of our state." According to the press, other "unprecedented action" included recommendations by the Commissioners that the Blues cut the expenditure of subscribers' money on public relations, image advertising, dues to hospital and national associations, and printing and distributing calendars and group news. The Commissioners have also suggested that the Blues "extensive and excessive" real estate holdings. A special examination of the Blues by an independent firm was ordered to begin in August and, in addition, the Blues will be examined annually, instead of every three years, as in the past.

The Blues are now back before Commissioners Black and Durkin asking for another rate increase, having done nothing to implement the recommendations given to them in July. VPIRG director Scott Skinner is now actively working on the case, and VPIRG will oppose the increases on the grounds that the Commissioners' suggestions to the Blues have not been followed.

VPIRG TAKES A LONG, HARD LOOK AT VERMONT'S SKI INDUSTRY
At a press conference on October 10, 1972 VPIRG released a detailed study of some of the effects of ski-related land development in Warren, Vermont. The report, entitled "Downhill in Warren," has generated considerable discussion throughout the state.

According to the VPIRG study, 88 per cent of the full time jobs in the town of Warren are held by people who moved to the town after the development began. 93 per cent of the part time winter jobs are held by people who have moved to Warren after the development began or do not live in the town. The report also stated that out-of-state landowners have increased from two per cent in 1953 to 57 per cent today, and that almost one half of the land in the town is held by realtors and corporations.

Analysis of the statistics gathered suggested that the claim of Common Sense Associates and others that land development should be encouraged because it provides "jobs for Vermonters" must be reexamined. Any kind of development creates some jobs, the question is whether the gains outweigh the disadvantages, and whether the jobs help to alleviate serious unemployment in the state.

The study also included a survey of 50 vacation home owners in Warren. Asked whether they planned to become permanent residents of the town, 30% said they had definite plans to do so and another 40% were undecided at the present time.

At the conclusion of the study, VPIRG made a number of recommendations. Most important, VPIRG suggested that no more ski areas be built before the real economic and environmental impact of present development can be thoroughly analyzed. VPIRG urged the state to initiate the studies needed to fully ascertain this impact.

VPIRG also recommended that 20% of the units in any vacation home development be made available to low income Vermonters at a reasonable price.

The project director for the Warren study was Stephen Hedger, a student in Goddard's adult education program. He was assisted by ten volunteers, including students from UVM and Middlebury.

In further action on recreational development, in 1973, VPIRG surveyed the major bottling companies in the state asking them whether they were making any plans to switch over to returnable containers before July 1, 1973. The law requires a nickel deposit on all beverage containers by that date.

The survey was directed by Patti O'Brien and Pat Faliverna, students at UVM and Castleton respectively. As the students talked to the bottlers they learned that there was an almost universal expectation that the bottle bill law would be repealed. They also discovered that the bottlers were planning a meeting with their lobbyist to plan their strategy.

VPIRG released the news of the meeting and reported on the confidence of the bottlers. At the bottlers' meeting, reporters who turned up were denied entrance. A number of citizens were outraged by the whole matter, since the battle for returnable containers had enlisted the energies of many people who were tired of both litter on the roads, and more importantly, the waste which is so symbolized by throwaway containers. The whole controversy took on even greater proportions when a candidate Hackett told newsmen that he favored repeal of the deposit section of the law. His remarks generated considerable protest from many parts of the state, some of which came from his supporters. Since Salmon supported the law, Hackett's environmental stance became a campaign issue.

Under pressure, Hackett modified his stance and in the closing weeks of the campaign he abandoned it altogether, saying that he would not oppose the apparent desire of the people of the state to let the law have a chance to prove itself.

Bottling companies, as well as representatives of the beer and glass industries, will attempt to bring before the 1973 Legislature a bill to repeal the ban on non-returnable beverage bottles even before it goes into effect. VPIRG plans to actively lobby against such a bill.

The attention focused on the bottle bill may seem excessive, but the legislation is crucial for several reasons. It is of symbolic importance environmentally because issues are relatively straightforward and clear.

But more importantly, it is a test of whether we can actually attack the root cause of environmental problems. It is also an interesting issue to those who are interested in the study of power in our society. Although the law will hurt no Vermont industries, and only retail stores and markets will be inconvenienced (the law requires that the distributor reimburse the storeowner for his expense), the people who will be hurt are the big corporations—glass and soda companies, beer and soda corporations. It will complicate their operations, and influence other states to enact similar laws.

The Insider

by Mike Brown

Regardless of the talent possessed by either team, the UVM St. Michael's basketball games always turn out to be great ballgames. The games always go down to the last minutes and seconds of the game before one team emerges as the victor. The games are always hard fought battles and the excitement is sometimes unbearable. These qualities are characteristic of almost all rivalry games.

The biannual UVM St. Mike's ballgames are coming up, February 5th down at Memorial Auditorium and a week later February 12 at Patrick Gym. As usual there two games will be out of sight.

There is an interesting side light to the UVM-St. Mike's rivalry. Aside from being a topic of heated conversation in Burlington barber shops and Winoskijs bars, the game means a lot to the ballplayers. Many of the ballplayers from both teams are friends and are from the same home towns. They see each other at home during the summer and have common friends. So winning or losing the two games stays with you long after you leave the "lovely Green Mountain State". It follows you back to Union City N.J., The Bronx or Teaneck N.J. and of course when you're in Burlington people always know who you are when you win and especially when you lose.

For these reasons victory is always a little sweeter when you beat the Purple Knights and of course defeat is all the more bitter when you lose.

holds the team together and helps it put out the wat it does. With no one really being of olympic material, each individual is still competitive enough to beat you on pure guts. Guys like Peter Weith and Dave Platka, freshmen who are destined for stardom, not only in the Yankee Conference, but along the Eastern Seaboard in future years. Hard working captain Frank O'Brian, (the hippie) whom I will always hold in high esteem, for his sheer competitiveness all exemplify these things. I do not say to build their egos for I think they deserve these compliments (as do several others). Their consistency and diligence on the track, complements my expectations for them to become excellent in their events. Bill Looker, amazes me, with his on the spot appearances and then gives all he has to become a winner. I have the fondest respect for him and always have.

The UVM track team consists of guys hardly known to the world or even to UVM! Starting next week, I would like to introduce to you the guys that make up your track team. Giving you an indepth look at each individual. Till then, have a happy weekend. Hope you're wishing in the same

Jackson + Hurley watch one of six UVM scores in victory over Northeastern

Cats Down Division I Huskies

by Fred Coombs

WJOY's interview with a scout from the Cleveland-Crusaders produced such comments as, "I didn't know they played much hockey in Vermont" and "Nobody on the ice tonight is capable of playing pro hockey." With scouting like that it's amazing that Cleveland is a top team in the W.H.A.

A 5,000 other scouts filled Gutterson Saturday night and by listening to them one would think it was The New York Rangers beating The Bruins again.

A capacity crowd saw the Cats make much out of the Huskies' Great skating and lots of hustle by the 2nd and 3rd lines, combined with superlative goaltending by Steve Eckerson gave UVM a 6-2 victory over Division I Northeastern.

Action came quick in the first period as Northeastern's Leo Chaisson took a pass at 0:29 and decided to go 1 on 1 with Eckerson. Eckerson wasn't much fun though as he stopped Chaisson cold. Two minutes later, Miller passed to Child, at the blue line, who promptly pulverized the puck, the remains of which MacKinnon tipped into the mesh at 2:31.

Eckerson again astounded the crowd by making two quick saves on a Northeastern breakaway. With Eckerson stemming the Northeastern tide, UVM made it 2-0 in the first period.

The 3 stars of game were Eckerson, MacKinnon and O'Connell.

Chris Hurley gets 2 awards: the Hustle award for his constant fore checking and the Puck award for spending so much time down on the ice, in the nets, or both.

The Elbow award goes to the Northeastern goalie for his post-game arm-bends.

unassisted, at 11:32. Later on Hurley fed the puck to MacKinnon, who fed it to Miller, who offered it to the Northeastern goal, who ate it, at 18:05, to end the scoring.

Overall the name of the game was Eckerson, as he constantly covered up for an unusually porous defense.

Gutterson field house is becoming quite the red light district as it has seen a good portion of UVM's 89 seasonal goals (only 51 for the opposition).

UConn Humiliates UVM 104-74

by Mike Schwartz

Consistency on the basketball court is the sign of a solid basketball team. It shows a team is holding its own and not getting embarrassed at the basic fundamentals or in individual play. The Vermont basketball team after two embarrassing losses by 22 to Massachusetts and 32 to Northeastern had pulled together in a convincing way to defeat Maine and Norwich. But the ingredients of consistent victory were not apparent on Saturday afternoon at Patrick Gymnasium at the University of Connecticut. Handily defeated the Catamounts by a score of 104-74.

When a team loses by 30 points no excuses can be made. Therefore, I will not prolong the agony by discussing the minute by minute progress of the game. Instead, this is a good time to see just what went right and what went wrong.

UConn demonstrated the importance of consistency and togetherness. At times their bench was louder than the small crowd that came to see the contest. They were also a very talented bunch of players. The dominant player was their junior guard Jimmy Foster. He scored 28 points on 10 of 13 field goals and 8 for 8 from the foul line, and contributed 5 assists. His presence was felt in his constant penetration in seven of his baskets were layups.

Vermont never stopped the UConn fast break. Foster was complimented by three talented forwards. Earl Wilson scored 13 points and pulled down 23 rebounds (Vermont had 24 as a team). Gary Cusick had 18 points, and Cal Chapman contributed 16. Speaking of consistency, while Foster had 18 in the first half, Cusick picked up in the second half with 14 of his points. UConn was able to have a hot shooter to take over when someone else lost his touch. They played solid ball in passing off the fast break, in shooting, and in playing some defense. No wonder they are 4-0 in Yankee Conference action and now 9-0 overall.

Though the defeat was disappointing an interesting aspect of Vermont's performance came out in the second half. Coach Salzborg stayed with a set lineup that worked. Mario Macias, Don Ostler, Bernie Palmer, Joe Greco, and Terry Green stayed together during a long span of the half and worked well in cutting a 22 point lead to 15. They showed hustle and determination in working together. When the combination was broken up UConn again pulled away to a 22 point lead before the coaches emptied their benches. Macias scored 15 points and had 5 assists in his playmaking role. Palmer had 6 rebounds and Greco once again led Vermont scores with 21. Green, though a part of this group, failed to hit a field goal. Vermont needs at least 10 points a game from Terry to balance the attack. Another bright spot was the play of Greg Ashford in the first half when he scored 8 of his 10 points and had 4 rebounds.

But a factor that is a continual problem is that Vermont does not have a consistent big man. George Peredy, the center did not produce and played but 12 minutes. Vermont does not have a big man behind him to hit the boards and start the offense. Instead the burden on forwards like Greco and Palmer to rebound is increased. When Connecticut starts a front line of 6'7", 6'6", and 6'5" with subs who are 6'7", 6'5", and 6'4" you know Vermont is going to have rebounding problems. Over the course of a season this can mean the difference between winning and losing.

Despite this weeks dismal showing, I am still optimistic that the team can play at least 500 ball. We have already won more games than last year and have young players who want to win. The five players I mentioned before are all sophomores and present the nucleus for a solid and consistent team. The next game on Wednesday at Patrick brings back the memory of what is known as "sweet victory." The first game against that opponent, New Hampshire, was an exciting come from behind overtime victory. Basketball is best when you can win in that manner and presents the hope that the Catamounts can always perform in a consistent and winning way.

Round the Track

by Zach Ramsey

It was very heartwarming to see as many people at the track meet, as were present last Saturday. This week, we will be travelling to Maine to take on Bates College. Then, we'll be back the following week. I just want to thank you all and hope you had a good time.

The team is improving, as time goes on. The team itself really isn't starstudded, or hasn't any super humans, but it has guys that can hold their own. It is a well coached team, that will develop into one of the best in the conference. It is young (one senior), happy, hard-working, and most of all, dedicated. Dedication is the name of the game, when you're talking about UVM track. You have to be dedicated to yourself as well as to the team. For on a team where any student who wants to may participate, it is meaningful dedication that

by John Mahoney

Two years ago the UVM swim team suffered a heartbreaking loss to an ever-potent University of Connecticut team. That meet was probably the most exciting in the history of swimming at UVM because the winner was not decided until the very last event: the 400 freestyle relay. The team went on to win 3 more meets that year. If you combine those wins with last year's 10-0 record (including a decisive win over UConn) and the team's current 6-0 record the string of consecutive victories comes to 19. The team will be trying to make it 20 this Saturday, when Connecticut invades Foubush Pool at 11:30 as part of the university's sports-oriented winter carnival.

The team has encountered many tough swimmers this season, but no team has been

The undefeated UVM swim team last weekend pushed their record to 19 wins, no losses. The UVM swimmers crushed UMass 43-70. Michael Kurt led the team with 3 first places in the 1000' yd. and 500 yd. freestyle and in the freestyle relay. In his first year on the team he has proved himself a top competitor and a threat to all opponents in the New England Conference.

Crucial Weekend Ahead For Icecats

by Gene Goldberg

Winter Carnival is just one day away and one of the highlights this year is back to back home hockey games.

With the other teams always gunning for UVM, especially in Gutterson, Cross feels his team have played their best on the road.

On Friday night Colby invades Gutterson to face the Cats. Then on Saturday night, Division II power Bowdoin checks in for what should be the top Division II attraction of the year.

As far as the Division I switch goes — Cross definitely wants the move for the '74-'75 season. Division II now has 37 teams and as Cross himself says, "Twenty-five of them you never even heard of."

At this point in the season Coach Cross says his men are healthy, hungry, and ready to fly. "We have four solid lines and six good defensemen," Cross stated. The team only needs practice once or twice a week," he added. Cross feels that coaches get too hung up with practice. "A team can lose its edge," he asserted.

The one thing that is working against the Cats this season is the home crowd. The home crowd has definitely hurt us, Cross complained. The fans expect too much and the players press too hard.

Cross feels that one more scholarship will put UVM in a position to play top-dollar hockey against Division I competition.

Although this year's record versus Division I, to date, isn't overly impressive, it must be pointed out that the first 7 games were on the road. Even with the fan pressure, the Cats find Gutterson more to their liking.

Anybody who saw the game with Northeastern last Saturday night knows that UVM can certainly skate with the best of Division I. UVM buried N.E. 6-2.

by Eli Tubbs

THE INSIDER

Last Saturday night's victory over Northeastern was perhaps the most satisfying to date. Firstly, it was the first division one win since the Thanksgiving Tournament. But, furthermore, it was downright fun to beat a team with such poor sportsmen. I think Coach Cross culminated all our feelings when he made the last minute decision to leave the ice without the traditional shaking of hands. This was the first time in UVM hockey history that formality had not been carried out. We all felt it was a good move on his part.

One incident typifies the character of the Northeastern team. Midway through the third period one of the Vermont rooters sitting directly behind the Northeastern bench began yelling verbal jabs at Fernie Flaman, the Northeastern coach. Most experienced athletes can easily control their conduct with the fans. Not Fernie. He turned around and carried on a two minute heated attack at the fans. Picture yourself as one of his players. You are in the latter stage of a game and your coach is standing there with his back to you screaming back at irate fans. This is hard to imagine. With all due respect to Fernie, he is not my choice for coach of the year.

It must be twenty years since the place was painted. But you won't be able to tell it when the job's done. And while you're working, the great taste of Coca-Cola keeps everybody happy.

It's the real thing. Coke.

Cancellation Of Winter Carnival Caused By Lack Of Snow

by Jim Bradley
Due to the failure of the famous Vermont winter to produce any snow here, the Winter Festival events scheduled for last weekend were postponed. These included the ice show and skits, smorgasbord, snow sculptures, broom-bowl championships, human dog-sled races, and the cross-country ski race. The Winter Festival, originally scheduled for later in February, had only recently been moved ahead to the Feb. 24 dates in order to coincide with the NCAA ski meet of Friday, Feb. 2, in which UVM participated.

The implementation of additional social activities to be structured around the athletic events was charged to a steering committee appointed by President Andrews in September 1972. The purpose of the social events was not only to supplement the enthusiasm of the ski meet, but also to regenerate the University gladly accepted traditional zeal with which the University had approached KakeWalk in the past.

By the end of November, however, plans for these additional activities had not progressed beyond discussion by the representatives of the student governing boards of the University. It was at this time that the intramural winter olympics, an ice show, and skits utilizing UVM were designed by those representatives. The Student Association Senate appropriated $2500.00 in funds to ensure financial support for a smorgasbord and other activities within the Festival budget.

Winter recess interrupted the Winter Festival plans, and although the response of the Greek system and university living units was strong, poor forecasted weather forced the decision January 29 to cancel the supplementary activities yet continue with the scheduled NCAA meet at Bolton Valley.

To date, the cancelled social events have not been rescheduled, but the weekend of March 16 is now under consideration.

S.A. Reaches Quorum: Discusses Financial Allocations

S.A. President Bill Sisco assured that the Winter Festival will still take place. "But," he added, "we won't let any date until there is snow on the ground to stay awhile." The postponement does ensure one divergence from the original plans: there will not be another Friday off from classes. The possibility that the Winter Festival events will be coupled with the March spring Festival, when there will be a big concert, remains uncertain.

The history of a University Winter Festival dates back to September of 1972 when the possibility of UVM's hosting a Division I ski competition became a reality. UVM was approached by the Eastern Intercollegiate Ski Association $3.00 with a UVM ID and to host as a fifth site for the $3.50 without. The total cost competition to be held in the East, an offer which the approximately $9,000.

After this week's Senate meeting was convened by Jim Sloan, chairperson for the Senate, attendance was taken and a quorum reached. Mr. Sloan's edict concerning last week's attendance and attempted meeting seems to have had an effect, as some of the senators who had not attended for some time made an appearance. With attendance taken, committee reports were begun.

The Student Union Planning Committee had no report but stated that it is beginning to investigate the possibility of a new Student Union. The Concert Bureau announced a concert for February 18, a Sunday night. John Sebastian, Jim Croce, and Hearty Moon. Tickets are $3.00 with a UVM ID and $3.50 without. The total cost competition to be held in the East, an offer which the approximately $9,000.

Tom Grant, SA Treasurer, reported for the finance committee. Budget requests have been placed in each senator's mailbox. Senators were asked to investigate one S.A. recognized organization to see what it was doing and its effectiveness. This could then be related to the organization's financial request next year.

Jim Sloan announced a workshop for senators for this Saturday. The workshop will focus on the following issues: 1) The Goals of the S.A. 2) Problem Identification - What are some of the issues that have been blocking effective action on the part of the Senate? 3) Problem Resolution - How might the Senate go about making itself an effective

New Major Directs Students To Early Careers

by Mary Gerwig
There are so many employment possibilities in a ski state such as in Vermont that it would be a waste not to tap some of the career opportunities offered. It is around these opportunities that for the past two years a five member committee, headed by Dr. Alphonse H. Gilbert, has been planning and perfecting their Recreation Resource Management Program. This is the only program of its kind in the Northeast according to Chairman Gilbert. Their main concern now is to get the word out and let people know of this newly opened field of training.

The program consists of an initial two year core to provide the student with the academic foundation necessary for the completion of degree requirements in any of the three available areas of concentration.

Outdoor Recreation Management is aimed towards those students interested in National Park Service, the US Forest Service, and similar federal land management agencies.

Private Recreation Management is designed to prepare students for professional management positions in a variety of outdoor recreation enterprises, such as the management of private ski areas and campgrounds.

Rural-Urban Park and Recreation Management prepares the student for positions in park and recreation systems in urbanizing areas.

Dr. Gilbert said that ninety percent of the students are interested in ski area management, "although we have two students seeking careers in game preserve and two in golf course management."

He went on to add that "girls should easily be able to manage a ski area as well as men. That is part of our interest." Two girls are presently enrolled.

In addition to the four year program, the student is required to attend a two week ski area management seminar before the fall semester begins. An intensive, 12 hour day in seminar work is scheduled to immerse the student into various aspects and problems of managing a ski area.

The seminars depend on the instruction of known experts who deal with trail grooming, ski schools, finances, and area design.

Then, during the first two weeks in January, the student experiences management (continued on page five)

Mayor Seeks Re-election; Runs On Past Record

by Barbara Frankel
Mayor Gordon Paquette, who will be seeking a second term of office in an upcoming election in March was interviewed by this reporter. The following are excerpts from that interview:

Cynic: What do you feel should be, ideally, and is, specifically here in Burlington, the proper relationship between university and city?

Paquette: I think we should work together on all programs. I've honestly felt that we should get more involved with the university as we go along and have better relationships both to show the people in the city of Burlington what an asset the college is and do more explaining to the people and have more cooperation between the university and ourselves.

Cynic: How do you think the student vote will affect the upcoming election?

Paquette: Well, it's really hard to tell whether the students will get involved with local elections. I think that the students are concerned with all problems confronting the country and we've yet to see what they will feel like in local elections. I do feel that they should express their views on local elections on things that they feel are affecting them and certainly, I think it's something we're going to have to evaluate after this March election.

Cynic: President Andrews has stated that he supports a Rathskellar on campus, which would serve liquor. The state legislators, however, keep voting the liquor license down. Could you comment on this?

Paquette: I feel they should have one there. I see no reason why they shouldn't. This legislature will probably change that around. It appears to me from the discussions I've had with some that they might be taking a different view this year.

Cynic: How would you view the proposed plan to put a correctional center behind the Sheraton Motor Inn?

Paquette: This is something that's been kicked around a great deal and we've been accused in Burlington of kicking them out of Burlington—we didn't do this. We worked very closely with them. We offered them two sites in the city of Burlington. I'm still of the opinion that we have the best site in the city that wouldn't affect anyone and still feel that the parking lot next to our police station was the ideal place, and could be implemented there if someone wanted to take that kind of action. My first choice was up at Camp Johnson where they would have gotten land very reasonably from the government...but they wouldn't take that suggestion.

Cynic: Could you comment on the issue of revenue sharing and that fact that your opponent, Mr. Sullivan, has recently criticized you for failing to reappraise the city property?

Paquette: I was probably one of the first to come out publicly and say that I favored reappraisal in the city of Burlington, but in view of the fact that the Senate is acting on one bill and the House on another for reappraising property throughout the state of Vermont, I didn't feel it was time that the city of Burlington spent in the neighborhood of $50,000-$250,000 for reappraisal of our funds that we could use for better projects at this time. If the state were going to come up with an idea for funding and for a program, I felt we should wait and see what they do. Also, my opponent says we should do away with the assessor's office in the city of Burlington and go on a contractual basis to keep our appraisals up. I don't agree with this. I don't think it would work and I certainly don't want to get into the position South Burlington got into where a great majority of their cases ended up in the courts. They won the cases and found that some of the appraisals had been done wrong. If we're going to approach this, we've got to approach it right and have it done right, once and for all.

Cynic: What do you feel is the real, ideological difference between Mr. Sullivan and you?

Paquette: I'm going on a record. Certainly I feel that I have implemented some programs in the city of Burlington. I believe I have better knowledge of the workings of the city of Burlington and its departments. I feel that in two years a mayor doesn't have enough time, really, to put in the programs that he'd like to see done, but that we've taken a step in the right direction. I've opened the doors of city government to all people. I have an idea of what the people in the city of Burlington are looking for and what they want. I don't know what Mr. Sullivan's qualifications are. I don't know if he even knows what running a city means. I think I have served the city well and hope that the people realize this and elect me.

Cynic: How do you feel about the recent proposal to the state legislature for a stiffer penalties for drug users and sellers, including life imprisonment for a second-time marijuana offender?

Paquette: We do have a problem. We have a drug problem but certainly in no scale that I see in other parts of the country. What we have to do is rehabilitation work here and I don't think every case is the same. I'm very much for doing something to the drug pusher, but I think, as far as the user goes, we have to use a little discretion in treating these cases. I would hate to see a law put into effect that would crucify some young person that did get into the drugs and just put him away for a long time when it's not warranted. I think we have to be careful on what kind of laws we implement in this matter. I don't think these kind of stiff penalties will correct our problem. Still penalties belong to the fellow that's selling and the fellow that's buying.

Campus Security Reviews Parking Crisis

by Wendy Nelson
While the issues of parking at UVM have not changed radically, the number of tickets issued is on the decline. Campus Security hopes to continue to cut down the number of violations, each semester, through good enforcement. Chief Frederick Barrett of Campus Security stated on parking: "The only reason we have rules is to enable us to carry on the everyday business of the University and also for the protection of the University community in the area of emergency vehicles. Mail, too - it wouldn't be delivered if cars were parked in front of residence halls."

"The rules he is referring to can be found in the yellow booklet which every car owner should have read - University Traffic Regulations. These rules, in effect since September, 1971, were adopted by the presidentially-appointed Parking Commission and approved by the Board of Trustees. They specify who must register his vehicle by buying a parking sticker, where a student, faculty/staff member, or visitor may park his car, and the various violations and monetary fines. They also answer any additional questions car owners may have.

Despite these clear-cut rules and regulations, however, there are numerous parking violations each day. A 4-man Campus Security team patrols their assigned areas in parking areas on Main campus from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Many tickets are issued for parking on the grass, in "restricted" areas, in visitors' parking spaces and in other areas. This is true for two reasons: Although there is sufficient space for any resident to park his car near his dorm, no space is provided on main campus for those who want to drive from, for example, Redstone Campus to class. The second reason is general student apathy towards receiving a ticket. Without exception, every student on an informal survey said that there was not enough parking during the day. Several students stated that they would like to be able, even if only once in a while, to drive their cars to main campus. When it is minus 60 degrees, or they are late for a class, they said they do. They are then ticketed if they park illegally, and may or may not intend to pay the fine.

Parking tickets are collectable, payable to the Bursar's office. There's so much dispute and arbitration over the payment of parking tickets, however, that it is never certain until the end of the fiscal year how much revenue will come from the tickets. Most students when questioned did intend to pay their parking tickets. Although a Traffic Appeals Board exists with both faculty and student representation, for most offenders, it would take too much time or effort to appeal. When Chief Barrett was receiving a ticket. Vice President For Development Sought

UVM President Edward C. Andrews, Jr., has appointed an 11-member committee to search for a successor to Development Vice President Walter G. Bruska, who left the UVM post Jan. 1 to assume new duties as administrative vice president at Kent State University.

In his letter of appointment, Dr. Andrews said that "after consultation with various members of the University community, I am convinced that the role represented by this office, while in need of evaluation, is essential to the University."

"Therefore, I am appointing a committee to study our needs in the areas of development and public affairs, to develop a position description, and in search for an outstanding individual to fill this position."

The task, he told the committee, which held its initial meeting Thursday (Feb. 1), "has the highest priority."

Dr. Andrews named UVM Executive Vice President Dr. Wayne C. Peterson to chair the committee which includes student, faculty, staff, alumni and community representation.

Members include Lawrence J. Doolin, interim Development vice president; UVM Extension Service Director Robert Davison; Professors John Mazuzan,

Malcolm Severance, and Robert Stanfield; Dr. John Moore, coordinator of federal programs; Mrs. Hildene Flynn, chairman of the non-academic employees council; H.N. Muller, III, director of the Living and Learning Center; Angela Franklin, '75, student representative to the UVM Trustees' development committee; and Frank Balch, president and general manager of Vermont Broadcasting Corp., and WJOY.

Alumni on the committee include Mr. Doolin, a 1923 alumnus; Mr. Davison, class of '35; and Prof. Severance, a 1949 alumnus. Dr. John Mazuzan is a '54 graduate of UVM's College of Medicine.

UVM private gifts from alumni, parents and other friends have grown notably since the formal establishment of the Development Office in 1967, when Mr. Bruska was brought in to head up alumni, development and public relations programs of the University.

President Andrews has indicated that the continued growth of private gifts is of major importance to the University as it strives to maintain quality education, research and service programs in the face of rising costs and relatively shrinking state and federal funding.

Fourteen monks from Vermont's Western Monastery shared their music, prayer, and their special relationship with the community living.

The community at was first established and has remained unchanged since. Each has his own special ceramics, carpentry, bookbinding or composition. They all keep the monastery spiritually as well as materially. They are but very fulfilling. They have a small which keeps them in with their outside and also have record albums entitled "Love, Widen Honey" and "You Go."

Editorial: S.A. Unresponsive To Student Needs

Is the S.A. Senate any representation of the student body? Do the headlines the S.A. Senators make in any way reflect the attitudes of the "common student" about the complexities of the University of Vermont? These questions seem to have been conclusively answered by the many living units which fail to show a representative each week at S.A. meetings.

When the time comes that the S.A. Senate stops taking itself as an elite so seriously and starts to show a bit more interest in affairs and activities of the students - then and only then will many of the traditional campus leaders again redirect their efforts into our student government.

To believe that the vast majority of UVM students are so politically minded as to endorse local labor strikes and promote personal gripes about an unpopular national administration by appropriating "student activities" monies for Medical Aid to Indochina, is a misconception to say the least. Referendums have indicated that the UVM students want more activities for their money. The service organizations to the S.A. have worked hard to provide these activities. However, time and time again, their efforts have been undermined by the paperwork of equal representation which has afforded those who make the S.A. a playground an opportunity to promote only their own personal interests.

To achieve a true representation of all the student's interest, all senators must attend the meetings. But until the Senate starts to become more involved with the university community and less involved with misguided rhetoric about unwarranted affairs, it is easy to see why the "common student" is going to stay away.

Peace Can Be As Profitable As War

by Bill Bowman

When the United States signed the peace treaty on January 27 it was certainly no cause for elation. What the United States has not accomplished by the war directly (military action) it has gained by other methods.

There were two main inter-related reasons why the United States entered Indochina; at this point both of these objectives are being met. Under the pretext of stopping communism the U.S. on its white horse, charged into Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos and Thailand. Stopping communism, of course, meant making the world safe for capitalism, a job which U.S. corporations were and are only too glad to lend a hand with.

Peace in Vietnam in no way effects the massive military installations built by the U.S. in the rest of Indochina. (The major air raids carried out against north Vietnam were conducted from air bases in Thailand.) The establishment of these bases was objective number one - count it accomplished. The war has effected drastic changes on the social structure of Vietnam, and to a lesser degree on the other Indochinese countries. The rural to urban ratio in southern Vietnam just about switched during the carpet bombing, defoliation and forced urbanization programs carried out by the United States. Such a dramatic restructuring of the society has done two major things; first it has created large scale social problems, i.e. prostitution, drug addiction and soaring crime rates. Secondly, and most assuredly the reason behind the United States' push to urbanize was to create a market for surplus manufactured goods. (A villager in the mountains has no interest in a television, once in Saigon he does.)

A second part to the economic motive was to secure cheap natural resources. Indochina is rich in many resources, tin, rubber and oil being among them. It is not necessary for a country to colonize another in order to use its resources, as once large foreign capital gains a foothold in a small country it can be very manipulative. (Witness United Fruit company in South and Central America.) Count the United States' second objective accomplished: resources and a market.

So, why have war when you can have peace and everything you ever wanted anyway?

S.A. President Slams Senate And Students

Comments by D. Wm. Sisco

Do you know the name of your S.A. Senator? If you are unaware of the person who supposedly represents your interests, it is an indication of a variety of circumstances. Either you don't care, or the Senator doesn't care, or neither of you give a damn. In any case, a sad state of affairs.

A majority of the students at this university are content to wallow in their complacency while their "elected" Senators are not only laughed at, but are also laughing at themselves. This situation isn't bad if your only wish is to sit and watch with thumb in mouth.

It is apparent the students and Senate have opted for a condition of ambivalence. The constant drone of whimpering and whining is greatly frustrating to those few who work each day for the delivery of services to the student body.

The executive office of the Student Association along with the executives of IRA, Panhel and Fraternity Forum have expected more from the S.A. Senate than: 1. the endorsement of a strike by a local labor union; 2. an unpopular and unwarranted appropriation of $3,000.00 to Medical Aid for Indochina Inc.; 3. leaderless and chaotic meetings of the legislative body; and 4. a total lack of perspective in their positions of responsibility and leadership.

You, the citizen of the Student Association, who are actually concerned about the life of the student at UVM have to stop moaning and groaning! DO SOMETHING! If you are tired of an incompetent, ineffectual, and generally inefficient Senate, then don't just sit there! THROW THE BUMS OUT!

Let's get off our tails and get some work done around here. If this means you have to do something for yourself, then don't bitch about it, get it done. If we need better elected representatives, then don't just whine about the situation. Throw 'em out. That process is called "recall" in constitutional lingo. Get someone who will work.

We all need someone to be aware of our interests, protect our interests, and further our interests. There is no one better qualified to do this than ourselves. If you wish to pass on this responsibility to an elected delegate, that's fine, but you had better check up on him every now and then. Otherwise your means go in vain.

Find out what's happening. Find out what's wrong. Then do something about it!

March Election Approaches ; Student Vote Could Sway Election

by Deborah P. Kelly

Still think about the heralded jughandle decision when you're held up on the Williston Road Stretch by masses of cars? Remember, the election is only a few days away. You wanted to go in for a quick drink? Were you tired of waiting in line for hours at the November elections? Ever think of opening a bar or restaurant in Burlington and wonder who has the final say on it? Ever have problems with a landlord who doesn't believe in giving heat to his tenants in the winter or fixing utilities that have long since wasted away?

You can do something about these problems that haunt you! As members of the Burlington community whether in a dorm or off-campus housing there is a person assigned to listen and act on behalf of your desires. Their title is alderman. With two from each ward they constitute a committee that virtually decides the present and future status of this city.

There is an election coming up on March 6th. A big one that will decide many facets of the college and city communities needs - that will directly affect you in your everyday existence as a student.

In Wards one and six, we students constitute a great plurality that can swing the election to our better interests. Whether you're here as a freshman or a fading senior, you should have a voice in what goes on, give a damn and get to the polls to see that this year an alderman is appointed who has some moral ideology and is genuinely responsive to his constituents. It's time that we were heard as a cohesive student group. Become acquainted with who the candidates are. The power is in our hands and with it the future of the city.

Task Force Seems A Dangerous Mistake

by Dan Haslam

At the conclusion of the five months of study and consideration which the Board of Trustees will give to the suggestions to the Task Force on University reorganization, it will be faced with two courses of action.

The first is a dangerous course, inspired by rigid intellectualism over common sense and the wishes of the few over those of the majority. To dissolve the College of Agriculture and to scatter its and the College of Technology's programs into a new college, stopping to sprinkle a few within Arts and Sciences, would be a costly and devastating mistake by the trustees. Unwarranted duplication of courses within all colleges should be weeded out, but to disenfranchise a college within this University would be a slap in the face of those who have worked for years to build up its excellence in both reputation and service to the state.

The timely and candid responses of those who stepped forward in support of the retention of the College of Agriculture serves as both a testimony and mandate to the trustees to guide our school according to the will of Vermonters. It is here that the course of action for the trustees become clear. Do we intend to follow designs of reorganization which could harm the reputation of our University? Or, shall we go forth with a pursuit of a course for the practical educational needs of the people of Vermont? Let us retain the Colleges of Agriculture and Technology as they now exist as separate entities and continue making the University of Vermont the university for Vermont.

Nixon Gives Amnesty Views For Hockey Players

by Stuart Dedopoulos

Nearly three months after he received an overwhelming mandate from the owners of the National Hockey League, Richard Milhous Nixon held a surprise press conference yesterday afternoon at the home of his close friend Bebe Rebozo. Mr. Nixon, in his first public appearance since his inauguration as the new League President some two weeks ago, looked and spoke confidently as he fielded reporter's questions.

The focus of discussion centered on amnesty, as Mr. Nixon was repeatedly asked his views on the current negotiations between the Boston Bruins and their former star Derek Sanderson. Sanderson, a former National Hockey League player, jumped to the provisional World Hockey Association last year for a reported $2.6 million at the height of the war between the two leagues. However, now that there is some sort of standstill ceasefire between the rival factions, Sanderson is seeking to return to his old team.

Nevertheless, Mr. Nixon made it perfectly clear that he has no intention of invoking an open-arms policy for men who fled to avoid service in the NHL, whatever their moral objection to the war. In Mr. Nixon's view, the men who rejected NHL service made a "mistake" and they must pay a "penalty."

"I have sympathy for any individual who has made a mistake," said the President. "We all have made mistakes but we have to pay for our mistakes. My position on amnesty remains the same even though the war is over."

"Many players paid very high prices to serve their league, some with stitches, some with broken bones, and hundreds have had ten to twelve minutes taken out of their games in order to sit in the penalty box. Amnesty," he said, "means forgiveness. We cannot give forgiveness. The evaders and deserters can return when they pay the price for their action, and the price cannot be paid by a junkie in the minor leagues with the Boston Braves."

While on a campaign motorcade through Brattleboro, Vermont last October, Mr. Nixon told the family of a player injured in the NHL that he would "never grant amnesty to NHL dodgers and deserters. They are going to have to pay a penalty for what they did." At this news conference Mr. Nixon spelled it out further, by insisting on a "criminal penalty," saying NHL evaders should have to spend a week in St. Albans, Vermont, while NHL deserters should have to spend two weeks in St. Albans.

The President displayed his pique at criticism, by doves, of the NHL-WHA ceasefire he negotiated. Asked about his plans for "healing the wounds of war" in the NHL, he replied:

"It takes two to heal wounds. I've noted that the most vigorous criticism of this ceasefire comes from those outspoken advocates of peace at any price."

Mr. Nixon also appeared dissatisfied with the sports writers' tendency to avoid referring to the ceasefire as a "peace" agreement, though he conceded that players still might jump and that the agreement is "fragile" in its endurance.

"We have taken steps to end the war," said Mr. Nixon. "We finally achieved peace with honor, and I know this gave some of you to write that...but this could have been peace with dishonor if we had to use the vernacular, 'bugged out' and allowed a WHA takeover."

Mr. Nixon seemed pleased that his "secret plan to end this tragic war" had come to fruition. However, he abruptly cancelled the rest of the press conference when someone asked him his thought on the recent bugging of the WHA headquarters.

Civilized Dogs Deserve A Place On Campus

by Steven C. Rice

Pity the poor dog. We have learned that the critter is a public nuisance on this campus. Therefore, the animal won't be allowed in the university buildings, including the Den in Billings Center.

It may be true that dogs have a funny way of behaving around civilized human beings, especially when they're in heat. It may be true that other dogs like to have an occasional barking contest to see who can yell the loudest. And once in a while, since there are no public facilities for critters, there may be an accident.

Reasons enough for barring dogs? Hardly, so. Civilized human beings do the same. When two people are in passionate love, it's best to leave them alone. When two people are having a barking contest to see who can yell the loudest, it's best to leave them alone. Indeed, there are plenty of public facilities, but they have a way of becoming graffiti galleries as well as areas for cigarette butts.

Many communities have adopted a leash law. Perhaps our university might consider this. Not only for dogs, but for some of our more civilized human beings.

Third Annual Cynic Photography Contest

The CYNIC announces the "Third Annual CYNIC photography Contest." The rules are as follows:

1. The contest is open to all students of the University of Vermont who are amateurs. (Amateurs will be considered those people who do not support themselves by taking pictures.)

2. The pictures will be divided into the three following categories: faces, landscaping, and other subjects. The category of other subjects will include any picture not included in the categories of faces and landscapes.

3. All photographs will be black and white and will be approximately 8 x 10 inches. There is no limit to the number of photographs that each photographer may submit.

4. The picture submitted will be the property of the VERMONT CYNIC, which will have the consent of the photographer to publish them in the newspaper.

5. The VERMONT CYNIC has the right to request the photographer to submit a subject release form signed by those people who may appear in the photograph.

6. The pictures may have been taken at any time, past or present.

7. Pictures entered in the Third Annual CYNIC Photography Contest could not have been entered in any other photography contest sponsored by the CYNIC.

8. Photographs will be judged on print quality and composition by a board of judges.

9. The board of judges will consist of Edward Bobbins of Student Photography Service, Tito, of the University Photo Service, and Bob Recupero, of ARIEL. The judges will be ineligible to enter the contest.

10. All photographs should be placed in the CYNIC office or the SA desk.

11. The photographer's name, address, and telephone number should be lightly printed in pencil on the back of each photograph submitted, along with a title, if any.

12. Deadline for entries will be March 1, 1973.

13. One winner will be chosen from each category and the winners will be announced in the March 22 issue of the CYNIC.

14. The winner in each category will receive $25.00.

15. All questions should be referred directly to the CYNIC office.

Project Elm Holds First Meeting

The first meeting of "Project Elm" was held Tuesday, January 30, at 7:30 p.m. in North Lounge, Billings. Speakers were Dr. Gordon Nielsen, of the Experimental Program, organizers of "Project Elm."

Dr. Nielsen gave a slide show and informal lecture on the nature of Dutch Elm disease and how it can be treated on campus and in the community. Susan Kessler discussed the goals of Project Elm, which include treatment of elms on the Green in cooperation with the Burlington community (involving pruning, dead tree removal and fertilization.)

Also discussed were some tentative plans for a revitalization of Arbour Day, involving a community-wide tree-planting, a possible goal of this May.

"Project Elm" is dependent solely on the results of a fund-raising campaign scheduled for this winter. All interested volunteers are urged to contact "Project Elm" via the VPIRG mailbox at the Desk, in Billings, or contact Susan Kessler at 878-2188, evenings, from 6-9:30. The next meeting will be announced at a later date.

UVM Reorganization

A more radical approach to University reorganization was proposed by Thomas Sproston, a botany professor who claimed he had been studying the problem since 1964. Referring to "over-administration" within the University, Department, expressed the reservations of his department to join the College of Arts and Sciences because at present the B.S. degree is not offered, and that the chances of having a "hard scientist" as head were low, creating "low visibility" in the merger. He referred to the Arts and Sciences College as the "Arts College" and a putdown for the sciences.

Sproston called for the dissolution of all colleges in the University and replacing them with autonomous departments. He furthered his attack on University matters, stating that UVM has needed a business manager since 1946, and that medical men are not noted for their handling of financial affairs, apparently poking at the medical degree President

Andrews holds. He also commented that he couldn't see Wayne Patterson as executive vice-president since Patterson holds a degree in psychology, and the job calls for a businessman.

Benefits Of New Major For Early Careers...

practices in every phase of the resort itself.

Two UVM Juniors took part in this two week session last month. Gary R. Straw of Brownsville managed Mt. Ascutney.

As he explains, "I was with Robert Parson, general manager at Ascutney, most of the time. Before he would make a decision, he would ask me what my decision would be and why. Should we make snow? What trails need to be groomed? These are the types of decisions a manager must make."

Peter C. Lott of Westford worked with the area manager Ron Thompson and Robin Sweeney, in charge of public relations, at Madonna. "They gave me a good overall view of the operation, from grooming the trails to operation of the kitchen and dining room," he said of his experience.

Both received free room and board. And, of course they hit of skiing.

There is a need in Vermont for persons trained in ski area management. Sweeney, of Madonna, said ski areas are particularly aware of the need for providing jobs for Vermonters in management as well as in other positions, and will welcome those trained for these positions.

So many colleges are involved in this program business administration, agricultural engineering, geology, biology, forestry and social sciences. Great importance is placed on the role of ecology, for this program emphasizes the relation between the area and the environment.

This program is not to be confused with an individual design major.

As Dr. Gilbert explains, "We have a regular four year program so that the student will be professionally-trained. If he is on his own, his training may not be sufficient. This way, other professionals will accept his training, since the student will have tasted every aspect of the management for ski resorts. Federal land management, or whatever."

Campus Security And Parking Problem

asked what has been proposed for alleviating these parking problems, he said that although there have been proposals such as multilevel parking garages, nothing has come of them.

Most of the misunderstandings about the role of Campus Security in parking come from a lack of communication among students, perhaps through the Student Association, and through Campus Security. Chief Barrett would like more student involvement with and understanding of Campus Security.

"We're not out for revenue," he said, stating that they have no quotas they must fill. He commended students saying that "students have more orientation to rules and regulations than the staff," and that they have been highly cooperative with Campus Security. Although he does not see the University building more parking areas in the near future, he does hope to keep parking fees at the same level they are at now and to continue to enforce the University Regulations as efficiently as possible. In this way, the existing parking problems can be kept to a tenable level and the traffic flow can be regulated.

Student Advisory Committee Survey

The Student Advisory Committee to the College of Arts and Sciences is designed to advise the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, the composite body of the faculty, and all students of that college.

It is composed of students representing the major disciplines of every department of the College of Arts and Sciences, including representatives of the Preman class, the Graduate College, and the Experimental Program.

In addition to advising, the committee has members serving on the following Arts and Sciences Faculty committees: the Curriculum Committee, the Admissions Committee, the Honors Committee, and the Academic Standing Committee, as well as members attending the Arts and Sciences faculty and chairman meetings. The committee is empowered to create ad-hoc subcommittees to deal with specific issues brought to the Student Advisory by either the Dean of the college, a committee member, or by an individual student of the College of Arts and Sciences.

GRADUATION REQUIREMENTS:

In the College of Arts & Sciences, each student is required to take a number of courses in 3 out of 4 fields (Fine Arts & Philosophy, Social Sciences, Language & Literature, Natural Sciences).

Do you favor the present requirement? YES NO

4 out of 4 3 out of 4

2 out of 4 1 out of 4

0 out of 4 (that is, no requirements)

Would you prefer that graduation be judged by courses taken rather than credits? In other words, equal value for all courses with a specific number of courses required rather than a specific number of credits. YES NO

Should courses that you have failed be listed on your transcript? YES NO

Please list the courses that you are taking this semester in the order of importance to you, most important first:

Please indicate your college:

- ☐ Arts & Sciences ☐ Agriculture and Home Economics ☐ Education ☐ Technology
☐ Division of Health Sciences

Your year of Graduation: 1973 1974 1975 1976 Graduate

OFF-CAMPUS SEMESTER:

If a student wishes to attend another institution or participate in an academic project that offers an extra advantage to his educational career at the University of Vermont, he is presently required to pay full tuition at UVM as well as tuition and expenses at the other institution or project. The present University policy states that a student shall not receive a tuition rebate (except in special programs such as VOSP) if he elects to take an off-campus semester to further his educational experience.

Were you aware that the UVM off-campus semester existed? YES NO

Do you favor the present tuition policy for off-campus semester? YES NO

Which tuition rebate policy would you prefer:

- ☐ No tuition rebate
☐ Partial tuition rebate allowing some monies for UVM services ☐ Partial rebate with monies given only to those areas, which the University designates to be of special services to each individual case.
☐ Full tuition rebate.

Notes From The Underground.

Not Dostoevsky's. Ours. The Mayfair's

We're a shop (or boutique, if you prefer) in the basement of the Mayfair. We sell clothes designed for young women up to the ages of—oh say—thirty or thereabouts.

Our's is a young look... easy, comfortable and practical. By practical, we mean outfits that can be worn at school, work, out on a date, for almost any occasion. For example: an Underground shirt can be worn with anything—pants, a skirt, jeans, with or without a sweater. Whatever you choose.

Something else. Price. Underground clothes are often more expensive than you might find in an army-navy store or a discount house. By the same token, they are probably no more expensive than what you would find in a head shop. Where we think we have the advantage is that our clothes are designed extremely well, are impeccably tailored and cut so they are comfortable and flattering at the same time. And they are just as contemporary as any you could find anywhere else.

Wright Sets Mark In 7-3 Win Over Bowdoin

by Rick Steinberg

Here are the final individual and team results:

Petter Kongsli leaping to victory in UVM Winter Carnival win.

The first period opened with both teams displaying vicious checking. At the neither team was able to organize, and play for the most part remained in the center area. The Mallette, O'Connor, Koch line finally started controlling the puck and pressure on Bowdoin got Steve Sozanski. They broke scoreless deadlock 'ax v 2:06 gone in the period with Mallette scoring the first of two goals. Yeates picked the puck at the blue line took what appeared to be a soft harmless slap shot. Mallette got his stick on the puck and tipped it in. Sozanski, who appeared to be blinded by the crowd of players in front. But the lead was short-lived. Bowdoin came back a minute later, scoring on a rebound deflected off Eckerson's. Dick Donovan "slapped" the puck past Eckerson off-picking up a rebound off Shanahan's shot. A second assist went to John Vin-

The horn finally sounded and both teams headed for the locker rooms hoping to reorganize their respective defenses. The six goals scored were a surprisingly high total for two such young clubs. Most top teams defensively oriented their defense the starting point of the offensive attack. In teams played extremely aggressive offense and passed to free errors on the part of the opposition. Many of the goals were a result of defensive blunders or sloppy play.

The second period was completely different story. Defense tightened up, there

Wright time to shake loose in front. He then ricocheted a shot off Sozanski, allowing Wright to flick in the rebound. This gave UVM a two goal lead, and seemed to be the straw that broke the camel's back. Bowdoin fell apart, allowing the Cats to move at will. The UVM's total domination of Division II's top team shows why the Cats should make the switch to Division I in the near future. The Cats now 9-0 in their Division have outscored Division opponents 69-19.

ers were no longer checking, being the puck out of the net. Previous aggressiveness had kept them in the game.

The Cats took advantage of Bowdoin's letdown, coming in ten seconds later to shoo the lead. Mallette overtook from 10 feet out with assists going to Yeates and Connell. This goal virtually secured the Cats' victory. UVM's total domination can be seen in their 7-2 advantage in goals in the first few minutes of the period.

Bill Koch closed out the scoring for UVM, picking off a Mallette rebound and sliding the puck between Sozanski's legs. Murphy also picked up an assist on the play. At this point the game became a bit boring.

Bowdoin seemed to give up except for periodic spurts of aggressiveness. The highlight of the last ten minutes of the period was when a live chicken appeared on the ice. After putting on a display for the fans, the bird was taken into captivity by the referees. During this interlude a look at both teams told the story. The UVM players were energetically skating around the ice while the Bears stood motionless with heads bowed.

With 3:00 remaining Coach Brock lifted Ekerson who left for a standing ovation. The UVM fans then started chanting, "We're number one," knowing that their team stood all alone atop Division II.

UVM's total domination of one of Division II's top teams shows why the Cats should make the switch to Division I in the near future. The Cats are now 9-0 in their Division and have outscored Division II opponents 69-19.

Northeastern competitor placed third in the event with a score of 5.80.

Celia Ewert was the only Vermont gymnast to place in the top three in vaulting. With her score of 7.30 she executed the best vault of the night. Laurie Gillen and Heather Glenny, two Northeastern gymnasts, placed second and third with scores of 7.15 and 7.10 respectively.

Wendi Coons won the event on the uneven parallel bars, scoring a 5.0 points and outscored her nearest opponent from Northeast by nearly one point. Ann Geller, Vermont's captain, placed fourth with a score of 5.05 points.

The final score of the meet was UVM-75.80 points, Northeast-71.95 and Keene St. College-56.50.

The team travels to Springfield, Mass. on Feb. 6 and meets Salem State and Springfield College. B Team. This Saturday the team travels to Cortland, New York for a meet with SUNY at Cortland and Nantux. The girls next home meet is on Tues., Feb. 27.

UVM Skiers Bid For National Title

If there were any doubts about the ski racing world that the University of Vermont's Division I Ski Team was a national power, they were all shattered last weekend. When any team competes against an old established nationally ranked team and defeats them the way UVM defeated last year's N.C.A.A. runners-up, Middlebury College, that entire sports community starts discussing the possibility of a new national challenger.

The famed Eastern Winter Carnival Circuit only meets five weekends a year but the best teams in the east result from it, which eventually challenge the western leaders for the national championship. The eastern teams have always given the west a good run for the money but never before has any eastern team ever dominated individual events the way UVM dominated them this past weekend.

There was no jumper that could even compete against Peter Kongali in the ski jump. In fact, Kongali jumped so far in his first attempt that the officials decided to lower the starting-point for his safety. —There are a few alpine skiers who consistently finish in the top five. Vermont has two: Billy Rathbone and Giant Slalom ace Dave Donahue.

The real cross country potential comes from Norway as past meets have proven. Due to Chip LeCase's fine recruiting program, UVM now has Arne Liem, one of Norway's finest performers.

When one considers the great dominance of Kongali, Grimmes, Oddy, and Gulbrandsen in the jump, the explosive power of Rathbone, Dodge, Hubbard, Brown, and Donahue in the alpine and growing excellence of Liem and Dunklee in Cross country, one can foresee how the University of Denver and Colorado University may very soon be pushed aside for a new national champion.

Swim Team Downs UConn For 20 Straight

The UVM swimming team defeated UConn 59-54 last weekend in what was one of the most exciting sports events of the season. The stage was set with UVM behind, 54-52, in the last event—the 400 yd freestyle relay. The outcome of the meet hung in the balance.

Both teams were in a dead heat when the anchor men left the blocks. Bruce Willard was swimming for UVM, Tom Welsh for UConn. Both swimmers were considered equal rivals. Willard's sheer determination and overpowering speed proved too much for the UConn competitor. The final result, the UVM relay of Phelan, Alexy, Jacob, and Willard defeated the UConn team by four-tenths of a second, in the process posting a new pool record of 3:23.2.

"It's a meet I'll never forget," said Mike Kurt, winner of the 1000 yd. freestyle. "Bruce, Fred, Dave, and Mike performed under superhuman pressure to win that relay." Mike went on to say, "With drive like theirs, we will win the Yankee Conference meet this weekend. As for the New England Conference, we are going to cap off this season being the first UVM swim team to take it all."

Willard also won the 100 yd and 50 yd freestyle events. Performing outstandingly in all the events he swam in, he was the only triple winner of the meet.

Cliff Johnson won the 200 yd and 50 yd backstroke and the individual medley. Cliff proves time and again that the 200 yd backstroke and the I.M. are team strong points.

Two of UVM's top swimmers, Dave Phelan and Mike Gosler were just getting over the flu. We hope to see them back on top in the meets to come.

Other point getters were Bob Nold in the one and three meter diving, John Ackerson in the 200 yd breaststroke, and Paul Jones in the 50 yd freestyle.

Twenty straight..... Keep it up, Cats.

IceCats Down Colby 7-4 In Winter Weekend Contest

by Fred Coombs

A typical Division II team came to town, Friday, as the UVM hockey fans proceeded to leave town. And leave town they did, as only a handful of drunken diards managed to sit through the dulllest game of the season.

The high point of the evening came when Bobbi Levitt and her bevy of Skating beauties hit the ice. As it turns out Bobbi's Bombers could have blown the doors off the Colby team without missing a figure eight.

Much to the disappointment of the fans, the Bombers left and the Cats proceeded to skin the Mules 7 to 4 without raising a sweat. UVM, obviously looking ahead to Bowdoin, decided to take it easy, although, occasionally tried to give the fans a thrill.

Eckerson gave the fans their first thrill of the evening when he decided to tend the goal from the back of the net. It didn't work however and Mike LeMoine of Colby knocked one in for the opening goal of the night at 3:12. The fans are hoping that Steve doesn't get discouraged and that he'll try it again the next time another Division II super power comes to town.

UVM came back with a goal 2 minutes later as Fred Hunt bounced one off goalie Scott Ryser to Pat Wright, who pushed it past to tie the score.

Later, on a UVM power play, Chris Hurley cleared one in, at 7:09 off a face-off. UVM ended the scoring of the game on a play that went Brad Cook to Ted Castle to Patty, right in front of the net, who then hung one in the hemp at 15:08.

The first period saw Eckerson make 2 saves (from in front of the net) and Ryser 10.

The second period saw Ken Yeates get his first UVM goal. Yeates converted from a foot out, at 5:10 with Tubbs and Watts getting assists.

Willie MacKinnon won the crowd up at 17:32 on a power play goal from 15 feet out, to Ryser's left. The second period ended, fortunately.

The Mules came bumbling back with a power play goal, at

Round the Track

with Zach Ramsey

As I stated last week, I will now start giving you an indepth look at the guys who make up your track team.

They are a group of guys who work really hard to become good at what they are doing. They work on speed and endurance. They need the stamina that will carry them through a good race. These guys are the 600 yarders. Six-hundred yards is a little more than a 1/4 mile, and a little less than a 1/2 mile. So you need the speed of the 1/4 miler, and the strength of a 1/2 miler. Here are the 600 yarders:

Peter Weith: 5'8" 145 lbs. Class '76 - English or Geology Major If you would see Pete, you would think he was a young hippie. He was second in Connecticut, during High School in the half mile: premier 600 yarder for UVM. He says he, "doesn't like to run but he feels worse when he doesn't." Nice guy to know, and to be around. Probably will run the half-mile outdoors. Also runs in the 2 mile relay.

Frank O'Brien: 5'8 1/2" 160 lbs. Class '74 - Captain - Frank reminds you of a guy that would fill your tank up, and wipe your windshield. Top competitor on the team. He is a leader in his own right. Strong and always determined to do the best. From Vermont, he possesses a sense of responsibility to the team, himself and coaches. He also runs in the mile relay and will probably run the quarter-mile in the outdoor season.

Arthur Newcombe: 5'10" 150 lbs. Class '75 - History or Poli Sci Major Nickname "Priest". From Staten Island New York, Art has the potential to be a good one in this event. He shows grace and smooth style while running. Has to work a little harder. He says, "I like being around friendly people, and people who can appreciate who I am, and what I stand for." He will probably run in the 1/4 mile outdoors. Besides being on the track team, he's my roommate!

Carl Chipman: 5'11" 165 lbs. Class '74 - Science Major "Chip" served his country in the Navy before coming to UVM. Joined the track team with inspirations and desires to do the best he can. Good man to have around. Probably will run the quarter mile in the Spring.

Dave Atwater: 5'10" 160 lbs. Class '73 - Only senior on the UVM track team. Dave has ability to be a good 600 yarder. He's proud of the fact that he's the only senior. Nice personality, good conversationalist. Will probably run the 440 outdoors.

Well, that rounds up the 600 yarders, I hope when you come to this week's track meet at Gardner-Collins, you will at least know some of the guys. If not, just ask, they'll tell you. Till next week, and quoting Gabe Vicks on the UVM basketball squad, "See you at the cage!"

SWIM TALK

by John Mahoney

Just before the final event last Saturday the score was 54-52 in favor of Connecticut. They had just swept two events and had taken the scoring lead for the first time. The whole UConn team got up and started chanting: "Psych. Psych. Psych..." It was too little, too late though because the UVM swimmers had been "psyching" for weeks and there was no way they were going to lose this one. This was evident from the performances all afternoon of all the swimmers.

The three races that really characterized this team effort for me were Cliff Johnson's performance in the individual medley and Jim Werther's in the 200 backstroke. Both swimmers came from behind on the final lap to win. Jim's third place (behind Cliff and Mike Jacob's) made it a clean sweep for Vermont. By far the best race of the afternoon was the final relay, especially Bruce Willard's anchor leg. With this meet under our belt we'll be after Connecticut again this Saturday in the Yankee Conference meet at Maine.

We have one more meet this year, February 24 against UNH. We hope to have as many people there as we did last Saturday. They really helped out a lot and I think the Connecticut swimmers were as impressed and pleased with the crowd as we were.

Women Cagers Win Opener

by Sally Rouse

This year's Women's Basketball is in full flight. The team has expanded into an "A" team and a "B" team for the first time at UVM. The "A" team has started off very well, winning their opener at Vermont College by a score of 67-40. Sally Bremner was high scorer with 13 points and Pam Bryant wasn't very far behind with 12 points. For Vermont College Barb Burke was high scorer with 10 points. Hustilins Chris Morgan was busy creating turnovers and fast breaks while Sue Duprat, Lucy Dale and Pam Bateman were pulling down the rebounds. The "B" team will open with their first game of the season Thursday night against Johnson. Val Gardner and her team will be looking for a big win here. The "A" team also plays Johnson Thursday going for their second win under the leadership of their coach Miss Condon.

George Peredy going up for soft jumpshot in 71-68 loss to UNH Credit SP5: S. Frowenfeld

UNH Downs UVM In Second Half

by Mike Schwartz

Don Fillion, sports editor of the Free Press tapped me on the shoulder so that we could both stare at the referee who he said "walked like a penguin." UMass basketball coach Jack Leaman, scouting the New Hampshire team kidded Tony Adams of WVMT about discussing hockey during a basketball broadcast. Others at the press bench congratulated Leaman on his team's win over Holy Cross the night before. Meanwhile Vermont lost a game they should have won by a score of 71-68 to the University of New Hampshire.

The press talk was quite enjoyable and at times more interesting than the game. Vermont with a 2-6 Yankee Conference record was coming off of a disastrous loss to UNH. They were playing a team they had beaten earlier this season and that was not overpowering in size and manpower as some previous opponents. Vermont showed early confidence because of these factors as they pulled to a 17-8 lead in the first eight minutes of the game. Mario Macias had seven early points and performed the playmaking role effectively. George Peredy added two baskets in the early going. On defense the Cats stole the ball twice in the backcourt to set up baskets. A victory seemed eminent. However, UNH battled back to a 21-21 tie with 6:42 left in the half. Suddenly, UVM missed shots and lost offensive movement. The defense did not steal the ball. In the last five minutes of the half UVM regained the touch for a while to gain a 5 point half time advantage.

In coming a 13-28 lead at the half the Cats started off fast, lost momentum, and then gained some movement on the outside shooting, with Barry Cohen hitting two in a row. They shot off the UNH backcourt of Wayne Morrison and Eric Ferange. These two players average 16.8 and 17.3 points per game respectively but were held to two points between them in the first half. The Cats had but 5 turnovers as compared to UNH's 12. These aspects show why UVM could have had a much larger lead. In the second half the Cats still led by 4 with 12:14 left in the game. But Bill Stewart hit for four points in a row as UVM turned a 45-41 deficit into a 49-45 lead. Vermont closed to 62-61 with 4:22 left when the final disaster hit. Ferange made two consecutive backcourt steals and converted them into two baskets and a 66-61 lead. With 43 seconds left they still led 70-68 but Vermont got the ball and a chance to tie the score when Stewart missed a foul shot. The Cats tried to set up Joe Greco an obvious choice to take the final shot. UNH undoubtedly knew this. Macias wound up forcing a shot that missed with five seconds left. A UNH sub made a final free throw with one second left to make the score 71-68.

In the second half Vermont committed 14 turnovers, New Hampshire but 7. Macias had 6 of them as he tried to break the UNH press alone. The UNH backcourt scored points with the assistance of Ferange's important steals. The front court came up with a superb performance from Stewart who came into the game with a 2.7 scoring average and 2.3 rebounding average. Stewart scored 25 and had 12 rebounds. Ferange and Lon Cohen had 13 and Morrison 10. That Morrison shot 5 for 24 meant that UVM would have really had problems if he was hot. "For UVM, Greco scored 21 but was only 5 for 13 from the floor. Peredy scored 14 in a better than average performance. He still lacks the second effort needed on rebounds and frequently bobbles passes. Macias scored 13 and had 7 assists. On the bad side, Macias committed 8 turnovers and Terry Greco shot but 1 for 7 and didn't add his scoring punch that UVM needs. These stats point out the UVM problem. Players may score more than usual or have a lot of assists but then the same players may shoot bad or play sloppy ball at the same time. With Greco not as dominant as usual, the Cats had problems with a team they should have beat. Inconsistency again set in as the Cats fell to a 7-10 record. To reach .500 they must really pull together.

The next games are a home and home set against St. Michaels, the first game on February 5 at St. Mikes and the second at Patrick Gym on February 12. I hope that the action in these games overpowers the comments at the press table. I know that personally and also for the fan at the game, enjoyment should come from seeing the Cats win and not from conversation with Don Fillion. Of course that's nice too, but a win is even better.

President Andrews, Dean Powers and Keith Mowat, Director of Residence Halls, were guest speakers at Tuesday night's Senate meeting which covered a wide range of topics from the proposed tuition and room and board increase to the controversial allocation of $500,000 to rebuild the Mac Millan Hospital in Hanover.

Once attendance was taken, Tom Grant, S.A. Treasurer, gave the Finance Committee report, stating that this year's S.A. revenues totaled $117,000 and that there was $8,000 left to be appropriated. The Finance Bureau once again announced this weekend concert featuring John Sebastian and Jim Croce.

Bill Sisco, S.A. President, began the Commencement Committee report, which was divided into three parts. First, the report discussed the recent evaluation of the University Health Service. The various recommendations of the committee will be available at Billings Center this week to the Senators as well as an interested student body. The report then suggested a new area of interest for the Senate to investigate. He proposed that the Senate discuss the year's Federal Budget specifically in reference to the government's Higher Education proposals and its implications for the University. Dr. Powers specifically mentioned the president's shift in spending from funding for institutions, i.e. grants, loans, etc., to funding individual students in such programs as VSAC and National Study Defense Loans. President Andrews further discussed this by commenting that this of spending was one reason the proposed tuition increase. Another reason he mentioned was the state legislative allocation and Governor Salmon's cut in the allocation from $11.5 million to $10 million. In the budget request the University submitted, the $150 increase in out-of-state students included. Now, however, a $1.2 million cut, new source of revenue would have to be explored. Andrews Addresses Senate; Tuition Increase Likely

by Bruce Madden
President Andrews, Dean Powers and Keith Mier, Director of Residence Halls, were guest speakers at Tuesday night's Senate meeting which covered a wide range of topics from the proposed tuition and room and board increase to the controversial allocation of $500 to rebuild the Bee Motel in Hines.

Once attendance was taken, Tom Grant, S.A. Treasurer, gave the Finance Committee report, stating that this year's S.A. revenues totaled $137,000 and that there was $4,000 still to be appropriated. The Finance Committee then announced this weekend's concert featuring John Sebastian and Jim Croce.

The various recommendations of the committee will be available at Billings Center this week for the Senators as well as any interested students. Dean Powers then suggested a new area of interest for the Senate to investigate. Another reason he mentioned was the state legislature allocation and Governor Salmon's cut in the allocation from $11.5 million to $10.5 million. In the budget request the University submitted of the $150 increase for out-of-state students was included. Now, however, with a $1.2 million cut, new sources of revenue would have to be explored. President Andrews mentioned an instate increase. He also mentioned that the legislature is working to restate the cut but that all of the $1.2 million probably won't be granted. President Andrews' recommendation for a tuition increase will be put to the Board of Trustees this weekend. Nothing has been voted on yet.

Nixon's budget would mean a low to the University of $1 million to $1.5 million dollars. It will be a while before the actual federal, state or University budgets are formed.

UP, President Andrews, in conclusion, mentioned another source of revenue for the University that of charging

He mentioned that many colleges now charge students for taking more courses.

Noted Historian Praises Patton

by Jim Bradley

Martin Blumenson, a noted military historian who has written on World War II and a professor at the Naval War College, spoke on General George Patton last Friday afternoon at Williams Science Hall.

The lecture, which was the first in a series this term on subjects of interest in military studies being sponsored by the Military Studies Department. The next speaker, J. Gen. Patton's son, George, Jr., himself a Brigadier General, who will be here tomorrow, Friday, Feb. 16, at 4 PM in Williams Science Hall.

Admission is free, but seats must be reserved. Tickets can be picked up at the Military Studies Department office in Williams.

An expert on the famous general, Blumenson was recently given access to Patton's personal letters and papers. He is the first historian to have had that access. What he has found in the Patton papers is "a man of many faces, a man of paradoxes and contradictions." Describing the general as "a legend in his time," "a folk hero," "a military genius," Blumenson said that while it is true that Patton "epitomized the fighting man," he was at the same time a sensitive man who wrote poetry. A driven, dedicated man of "enormous ambition" who believed since he was young that he was fated for greatness, Patton was extremely hard on himself, always fighting the temptation to relax. He wrote, "No sacrifice is too great if the end is worthwhile," and "always work like hell at everything you do." Yet, said Blumenson, he was also a thoroughly likeable man of great charm and humor who once wrote to his wife while in the field during WW II, "I can't send you any kisses tonight because we had onions for supper."

Patton grew up in Southern California ranch country. His father was a wealthy businessman and a Democratic politician who had gained extensive landholding through love was horses. He went to West Point, graduating in 1909 near the middle of his class. He was athletic, setting the school hurdles record and playing a reckless brand of football which netted him two broken arms. After graduation he married a wealthy girl of social standing, and was assigned to Fort Myer in Washington, D.C.

A superior horseman, he began to enter horse shows there as advertisement for himself as much as anything, and succeeded in getting himself known to influential people and making valuable connections. He went as an athlete to the 1912 Olympics in Stockholm, the games which were dominated by Jim Thorpe, and finished fifth in the Pentathlon. Highly versatile, he then designed a saber which was adopted by the Army, and he became an instructor in swordsmanship at His active military career began in 1916 when US troops under Gen. John J. Pershing were dispatched in a punitive expedition against the Mexican Revolutionary Pancho Villa, for "offenses against American lives and property." Pershing took Patton along as an aide, and subsequently became one of Patton's three great models, along with Napoleon Bonaparte (for tactics) and U.S. Grant (for tenacity). Patton modeled his own dress, bearing, and behavior on that of Pershing.

Fewer UVM Students Request VPIRG $3 Refund Fee

Vermont Public Interest Research Group (VPIRG) refused to pay the amount when they paid their bill. Even though a letter is sent with each bill explaining that failure to pay the VPIRG fee will prevent enrollment, parents become disturbed and feel that the fee is being "slipped in under the rug."

Of the remaining students, 242 paid the fee, but decided to get a refund. Last week several VPIRG workers set up a table in the Main Lobby in Billings Center to give the students who paid the fee a chance to get their money back if they wished to do so.

Students were also given this option in the Spring of '72, when the fee was initiated, and in the fall semester of '72. Evidence based on a random survey last week showed that many of the 252 students requested their money "for no particular reason." Students

Republican Mayoral Candidate Concerned About Political Image

by Dan Haslam

Joseph Sullivan, Republican candidate for mayor, is concerned about the image Republicans present to voters.

He respects being labeled as a "silver-spoon Republican."

When I attempt to communicate with the academic community there is a natural barrier created by the word "republican" in their minds, but I regard it as an unnatural barrier. It is a contradiction that they are supposed to be thinking people. I think to immediately close our minds to one's candidacy because of his political party contradicts that in which a university prides itself—its ability to differentiate, to intellectualize, and to listen to open dialogue.

concerning the resources which the individual and the community can offer to one another. "I regard the University community faculty and students as one, if not the most underused resources in the city. The University community could and should be involved and involve itself in both short-term and long-term projects and problems of which Burlington has a multitude. It's clear, to anyone who bothers to find these things out, that the OVP is a manifestation of the University's interest in social-oriented, health-oriented, and education-oriented undertakings. The professional talents, the energies, the inventiveness, and commitment to deal with new issues and to devise new solutions is probably more present in our local colleges than in any other group available to us. For Burlington to ignore this reservoir of ability would be inexcusable if not foolhardy. Unfortunately that history of Burlington that I have been a part of has always dealt with the University in a standoffish fashion."

New Faculty Union Requests Right Of Collective Bargaining

by Diane Taran

A new Faculty Union has been formed in the College of Arts and Sciences to deal with many pressing problems facing college faculty today.

There are now about seventy members whose immediate goal is to enroll more than 50% of the Arts and Sciences faculty members in the union and then approach the University with the right of collective bargaining. At UVM, the Administration publishes the Faculty Handbook, underlying all the rules and rights of the faculty members. This publication is unilaterally handled; with the faculty having no power in the decision-making processes which concern them. It is with problems like this in mind that the Union of College Faculty was formed, to start asking for the right to bargain in decisions affecting them.

Assistant Professor Stanley "Huck" Gutman, member of the Steering Committee, explained the main issues for which the union wishes to be noted. One of their top priorities will be to ask for a salary floor of $11,000 for Assistant Professors and $10,000 for Instructors. The Union sent a letter to Dean Weiger of the Arts College with this request, and he has since said that the top priority of the Arts College will be to get this minimum salary for Assistant Professors with the Ph.D.

UCF would also like to see cost of living adjustments and merit increases made. As the cost of living continues to rise, the instructors' salaries are not being raised to meet additional costs. Recently, President Andrews related to the Governor that it was time to stop asking teachers at UVM to subsidize the cost of living.

Andrews said this would be the top priority of the University this year, and the Union hopes to work toward this. The UCF also wants to see that any merit increases, given for extra work or publishing, are not included in the cost of living adjustments.

The UCF feels a definition of "financial urgency" and program entrenchment should be set by the University. As of this moment, there are no set guidelines by which faculty are fired, or not reinstated, or by which programs are cut. The Union wants a definition of when such circumstances can occur, so it can be proved legitimately if a case arises.

The Union feels that the present medical and life insurance programs for faculty leave much to be desired. The Union is asking that the portion paid by the University be increased to at least the level of some other colleges in the area. The portion UVM pays out in benefits for its faculty equals 12% of their salaries, as compared to Johnson, Castleton, and Lyndon Colleges, who pay on an average of 20% of their faculty's salary. The health insurance benefits—UVM instructors receive are lower than any institution in the state except Middlebury.

The question of a written contract is another area where the UCF wants collective bargaining. Currently, faculty members have no written contract and have no say in how much they will be paid, how many courses they will teach, or what benefits they will receive. They are informed in June whether they will be rehired and under what conditions.

The University has considered reducing the number of tenure quotas given out each year. The question of reducing the standard course load in Arts and Sciences from 5 to 4 courses each semester has also been suggested. The UCF wants a say in how these matters will be handled, since they will directly affect the faculty. More students can be accepted into Arts and Sciences if the course load is lightened and the Union wants an input into where the extra money from additional students will go.

These are all problems which the Union of College Faculty wants to be in on, through their power of collective bargaining. But they still need many new members. It is a democratic institution, unlike other unions, in that each member has one vote and all have an equal say in the proceedings. There is a meeting Feb. 20, and anyone is welcome to come. Professors Tommy Bradley, of the English Department or Dick Warner, of the Political Science

Redstone Campus Offers Fascinating History

by Barbara Frankel

Many of today's students live off-campus or in one of the newer dorms, such as Harris Mills. But to many there is a charm, both traditional and beautiful, which can only be found by living on Redstone Campus.

It is not generally known, however, even to residents of Redstone Campus, that there is an interesting tale in the history of the property, which was purchased by the University in 1921. Redstone Hall, Robinson Hall and the Lodge, the private home of Billings Center have similar architectural styles, because the four structures were designed by the same architect, Mr. Richardson.

Mrs. Dykhuizen, who has lived with her family in the Lodge since 1933, became interested in the history of Redstone campus and, through her research, a great deal of light has been shed on the origins of the Buell estate. With the help of Ms. Elizabeth Kirkness of the Burlington

Free Press, Mrs. Dykhuizen published an article in that newspaper on Oct. 11, 1972 relating some of the story. Sources for that article were a stone quarry. The stone for Robinson (originally the Buell stables) and the front wall was blasted south of where Southwick presently stands.

Wrote Mrs. Lugnbuhl as quoted in the Free Press "Mr. Buell and his family, a wife and two daughters, enjoyed the kind of life suggested by the size and nature of the estate."

"Just across the road, on South Prospect Street, Mr. Henry LeGrand Cannon had carved out his estate."

"It is said that Mr. Buell carried on a running feud with Mr. Cannon, he supposedly built his house where he could look down on Mr. Cannon. Mr. Buell had a 'Turkish Room,' with tapestries and expensive inlaid furniture, which he might have accumulated to rival Mr. Cannon's 'India Room' now in the Fleming Museum."

The estate, which was beautifully landscaped, offered a magnificent view of the lake and the mountains. The Buells cultivated ferns and wild orchids in the path through the wood. A vegetable garden stood in the present site of Slade Hall. Robinson Hall was entirely redone after UVM took over by the conversion of the carriage house into the dining hall and the removal of the hay loft and chute.

CALENDAR/ANNOUNCEMENTS

Tri Delt Announces:

Scholarship Applications Open

The annual Delta Delta Delta Scholarship Competition will be held on the campus of the University of Vermont, beginning February 12, 1973. All full-time undergraduate women students on this campus are eligible to apply. Applicants should be well-qualified students, showing promise of valuable service in their chosen field and future communities. Academic record, contribution to campus life, and financial need are points to be considered.

For Orientation

Student Aides are needed to introduce incoming freshmen to UVM—the campus, services, activities, faculty, staff, students. Tentative dates: June 15-27. Applications available at Counseling and Testing Center, corner of Main St. and S. Williams St., or Student Activities Desk. Billings Applications due March 7, at Counseling and Testing Center.

The Tri Delt chapter at UVM will grant one award of $400. All local winners in the colleges / universities where there are Tri Delt chapters will automatically be eligible for one of the $1000.00 awards to be made by Delta Delta Delta's National Service Projects Fund if the application is submitted by March 15, 1973. Application forms are available from the Dean of Women or the Service Projects Chairman of the Tri-Delt Chapter (143 S. Willard St.).

Yoga Classes

YOGA CLASSES are scheduled for Tuesday 3:30 at 73 Church St. 6:00 Wednesday evening at 73 Church St. (Upstairs) and Thursday evening 6:30 at Southwick Gym. Beginners are urged to come to the Tuesday and Wednesday classes. Bring an empty stomach and a mat. All our love.

Overseas Jobs Available For Students

Job opportunities in Europe this summer. Work this summer in the forests of Germany, on construction in Austria, on farms in Germany, Sweden and Denmark, in industries in France and Germany, in hotels in Switzerland.

Well there are these jobs available as well as jobs in Ireland, England, France, Italy, and Holland are open by the consent of the governments of these countries to American university students coming to Europe the next summer.

For several years students made their way across the Atlantic through A.E.S. Service to take part in the actual life of the people of these countries.

The success of this project has caused a great deal of enthusiastic interest and support both in America and Europe. Every year, the program has been expanded to include many more students and jobs. Already, many students have made application for next summer jobs.

American-European Student Service (on a non-profit basis) is offering these jobs to students for Germany, Scandinavia, England, Austria, Switzerland, France, Italy, and Spain. The jobs consist of forestry work, child care work (females only), farm work, hotel work (limited number available), construction work, and some other more qualified jobs requiring more specialized training.

The purpose of this program is to afford the student an opportunity to get into real living contact with the people and customs of Europe. In this way, a concrete effort can be made to learn something of the culture of Europe. In return for his or her work, the student will receive his or her room and board, plus a wage. However, student should keep in mind that they will be working on the European economy and wages will naturally be scaled accordingly. The working conditions (hours, safety, regulations, legal protection, work permits) will be strictly controlled by the labor ministries of the countries involved.

In most cases, the employers have requested especially for American students. Hence, they are particularly interested in the student and want to make the work as interesting as possible.

They are all informed of the intent of the program, and will help the student all they can in deriving the most from his trip to Europe.

Please write for further information and application forms to: American-European Student Service, Box 34733, FL 9490 Vaduz, Liechtenstein (Europe).

IRA Works To Solve Parking Problems

The meeting was called to order at 7:05 by president Sig Heller in the Harris-Millis Recreation Room—Dean Thompson and Dr. Miser were present. Sig read the following letter from Bob Hodde thanking IRA for the $1000. for the Plexiglass fund for the hockey rink. Dear Inter-Residence Association: On behalf of the Plexiglass Fund, I would like to thank you for your significant contribution of $1,000. The strong support that the Inter-Residence Association has already shown in the early stages of this drive will have an overwhelming effect on the future success of this drive. Thanks so much for your sound backing.

Sincerely, Bob Hodde. Dr. Martin, UVM Parking Commission Chairman, explained the purpose and responsibilities of his office, major problems related to campus parking, and proposed remedies. The main proposal for solutions to inadequate parking for students, faculty, and staff is considered to be peripheral parking in outer areas with busing to the inner campus.

The Traffic Board was explained to have been instituted 2 years ago to deal with fines and violations. All money collected from this, registrations, etc., goes toward improved parking, not to the University. The Board should have one grad student and two undergrad student representatives, and since a single undergrad position is now unfilled, Dr. Martin suggested that interested students contact Dr. Patterson. The main problem remains with commuters rather than resident students.

Sig said that the total cost to IRA of setting up a 20 hr./week leather shop would be $1000. approximately (tools $300-400). A suggestion was made to draw up a complete itemized budget; further information may be obtained by calling the instructor at 878-3505.

Gary Wood spoke about the Wood Shop, estimated cost for this semester, about $500 ($38/wk). Open shop, first floor Williams Science Hall, 3 hrs. Thursday and Friday. The Experimental Program requested $500 to produce Man of La Mancha. Further discussion will be next week.

Dr. Miser spoke of room choosing for '73-74, the Sage Food Committee, Orientation, and increased housing costs for next year. Even with the increase every three years, UVM has consistently maintained one of the lowest room and board costs of schools in the east. The Living/Learning Center will be primarily housing students in certain programs which have not yet been fully determined.

Dean Thompson mentioned that resident assistants are being recruited at this time until February 9 and requested recommendations if students feel they know of someone who would be suited for the job.

There being no further business, the meeting was adjourned at 8:55.

Project

"Project Elm" is a related new organization of student faculty, and other members—the community-concerned—the future of the elm, other trees on the campus, and the rest of it.

Dr. Nielsen of Entomology Department Susan Kessler, Entomologist in the Learning Program, the originator of "Project Elm" discussed roles and the plans of organization in a interview.

Dr. Nielsen's interest in problem of Dutch Elm dates from when he was graduate student at UVM. His work on the subject has depended on the time he has available to devote. Nielsen declared, "Spending a lot of time on environment outside (Burlington) community need to spend more time community studying problem."

Susan Kessler joined with Dr. Nielsen this past action was motivated by the jughandle constructed the cutting down of elm. University community's also by a selfless aplomb after seeing Dartmouth project.

"It seemed unfair that could ignore their ground way they seem to when colleges are taking care grounds, with results said."

She further declared Dartmouth's elm tree. "Dartmouth has fertilizing their trees, and recently, sprayed them methoxychlor, a replacement for elm beetle control. They are experimenting with systemic fungicide, Bt."

In treating Bt, Benlate, the transplantation technique. A container resembling intravenous system, goes directly into the systems of the tree treatment was just a last-year by the Livestock Protection Agency, essentially still expiring nature in the Northeast success remains to be seen.

Dutch elm disease fungus spread by the lesser European elm beetle and the American bark beetle. The beetle into the twigs of the feed on the soft tissue and left in the tissue trees and affects the water to the leaves.

Elmwood cut from trees can also become diseased, for the beetle looks for dead wood to lay eggs. The larvae also carry the dead wood in pruned or otherwise pruned or disposed of. The grounds are thus elm. Nielsen outlined fundamentals of a sound elm disease control program.

A good program, prompt and destruction of beetle-breeding material. Do everything to keep the elm through a healthy condition. Consider.

Abortion:
The Right To Choose

The Supreme Court's recent ruling legalizing abortion has created much moral upheaval in this nation. On college campuses, in particular, where in recent years facilitated distribution of the Pill and other birth control methods has led to increased concern over "rising promiscuity," the abortion issue is the cause of much discussion.

The main question, however, should not be whether or not legalized abortion will lead to a "loosening of morals" among college co-eds, but, rather, whether or not they have the right to, as some would say, "take a life" in such an easily accessible, legal manner. Perhaps to some, a fetus is already a human being — our courts have ruled that it is not. To those who feel that any fetus has the right to be born, there can be no question of abortion. Their decision is simple and no moral dilemma is involved.

But to a young, unmarried girl in college, or for that matter to any woman who does not want a child at the time of her pregnancy, there is a dilemma. Should she destroy something she has created or should she perhaps, destroy her own plans, expectations and future life by bringing an unwanted child into the world? The problem is indeed a difficult one. The choice, certainly, should be, as the Supreme Court stated, "between a woman and her physician."

Legalized abortion is neither an open door to promiscuity nor a form of legalized murder. It is a serious step and should not be taken before careful consideration by both the woman and her doctor. It is also an alternative, for those who choose to take it, to bringing a child who is unplanned and unwanted into a world already far too crowded and hungry.

Senate Must End Needless Squandering Of Funds

by D. Wm. Sisco

The same S.A. Senate that last semester passed a motion for the allocation of $3,000.00 to Medical Aid to Indochina, Inc. is back at it again. The student body petitioned against that particular allocation and gave it a resounding defeat in a campus wide referendum.

Well, here we go again. Last week a motion to allocate $500.00 of S.A. money to the Bac Mai Hospital in Hanoi was introduced. The Senate can vote it down, but little can be expected if they didn't learn the first time around.

We, the student body, can stop this nonsense in a variety of ways. We can initiate another referendum at our own cost again. We can amend the Constitution to provide a Presidential veto to the S.A. President so that he may halt a Senate that constantly disregards student opinion. Or, we may use the "Recall Process" already provided for in the S.A. Constitution.

Perhaps we should do them all. It is about time we stopped allowing a dissident minority to squander S.A. funds and valuable time in unpopular crusades.

The Senate can start listening to the students and deal with such things as:

- the proposed tuition increase
- the new student union complex
- helping the other campus organizations in their efforts to aid the hockey rink plexiglass fund.

- the parking situation on campus with more than an escapist tactic of declaring a moratorium on tickets

- solicit support for recreational and entertainment events on campus

- initiate new programs for the betterment of the students on campus

If you feel the money you have paid as the S.A. fee has not been used to its fullest potential for you as a student at UVM, then let's get the sensationalism out of the S.A. Senate!

Let's get a S.A. Senate that can deliver!

Letters To The Editor

Power Companies Are Destroying Us

To the Editor:

What has gotten us into the hazardous situation of trying to produce electricity by nuclear fusion?

I think the answer is: The people believed the power companies. The power companies believed the Atomic Energy Commission and the degenerated war-lords wanting plutonium. The AEC and the war-lords believed in technology, in its unlimited potential, and in their privilege and ability to decide what should be done for and to the people of this country and the world.

People are kind. I have received too much kindness to believe otherwise. But people are often mistaken, and mistakes are embarrassing. Although we may try to rectify them, we try, at the same time, to cover them up. When mistakes are made in high places, they are often big mistakes needing tremendous rectifying and cover-up. Then, if the rectifying turns out to be another mistake, the embarrassment and its results spiral and where they may go, no one can know.

Most everyone believed, at one time, that nuclear fission (We only knew it as atomic energy then) was the answer to all our electrical needs and luxuries. And we blithely left it to the "experts" to provide it for us.

But there were no experts in this field. There was no background information. The process of nuclear fission and many of its products were new to life on earth. So the "experts" had to make assumptions. In doing this they made irreparable mistakes and misstatements, and they cover up with smooth talk, very convincing to those who have not had the time or the background to see how unscientific it is.

The Atomic Energy Commission and the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy

have really put us in a bind. But let's not condemn them for it. They have been obsessed by what they believe can be done. They even disregard warnings from members of the AEC staff as well as from many other reputable scientists, of top-rank, who are saying stop. (Of course, some of these scientists, who have produced much evidence to support their stand, are being discredited. (I'll let you guess by whom.)

Already there is an estimated 40 to 60 billion dollar investment in nuclear power. So people are saying that we can't throw this down the drain, and that we are told (Again, I'll let you guess by whom.) that these plants are clean, safe and economical.

We have a philosophy in this country to wait until it happens, and then do something about it. But there is nothing we can do about radioactive particles once they are loose in the biosphere. Though there are too many loose already, we have been lucky not to have had a major accident. Let's listen to the independent scientists, courageous enough to stand up to a 40 billion dollar industry, and declare a moratorium on nuclear plants before we have a major accident or more radioactive particles from "permissible" emissions or more minor accidents. At Vernon, "in effect," said Gordon B. Stenrud of the Public Service Board, the accident discharge put as much radiation into the southern Vermont air in eight minutes as the plant is supposed to be allowed under state standards for an entire year.

There are other ways, practical ways, of producing power, something on this hopefully next week.

Will UVM Profit

From Switch To Division I?

To the Editor:

With all the confusing controversy over the question of UVM hockey going Division I, I think it necessary to clear up the situation by briefly outlining the main advantages to such a move. Who will profit from a switch to Division I?

1) the "third-rate" sports writers and announcers (the move's key supporters), who will feel an illusory increase in status.

2) the "demanding" fans (and who can deny UVM's and the students' obligation to satisfy the fans), who will get an expanded 30 game schedule. (By contrast, sneaky Harvard keeps a mere 24 game schedule with the poor excuse that their athletes must also study and pass courses. If they were so smart, they would have solved that problem like UVM — by hiring special tutors to study for athletes.)

3) the UVM coaching staff, who will also get a boost in the opposition, who frivolously argue that UVM's first priority should be education, not games; that student athletes should not be exploited for the sake of sports writers, fans, and coaches; etc. Rather than outline their weak position, let's give the last word to a college basketball star UCLA's Bill Walton: "I wonder why our fans will stand outside for hours just to get into Pauley Pavilion and then, when they're inside, go stark raving mad over us. I laugh at them.... What are we doing that's so important. Why shouldn't they take the money it took to build all the sports arenas and use it to feed hungry people? Sports are fine, but why do they have to be blown out of proportion." (quoted from the Burlington Free Press, February 7, 1973, p. 20).

"Faustus" Review-
Rather Uncritical

To the Editor:

When I picked up the Cynic last Thursday I was eager to read what the critics would have to say about the play "Dr. Faustus." Well, I learned more about the play's curriculum vitae than about the play itself.

To be a theater critic requires more than just commenting on how the rehearsals went and how the director risked gray hair and ulcers. If Mike Levine thought that his role "took a lot but gave a lot," I am sure many of us would have been interested in knowing why. (and I only pointed out one example of unanswered questions)

Secondly may I add that being French I jumped in my chair when I saw Shandix mispelled. That poor-Camille is called Chandeise and is not Indian!

Advice On How To Try And Pick Up Girls

by Michael Flynn

1. Go to any rental agency and rent a crane. If the guy behind the counter is a hater, say, "Where the hell am I gonna get a crane around here?" give him some more money. Remember, girls are no object. He'll get you one. In fact, he'd probably let you rent him for 500 bucks, but let's remember you want a girl.

After you get your crane, paint it so it resembles a natural-campus-landscape. Dull-brick will do. Now you can drive it just about anywhere (who is going to stop a moving crane that looks like a wall, besides if your that paranoid you can stick an out-of-state license plate on the back). When you've parked somewhere, hopefully near a brick building, wait. Classes usually get out on the hour and a number of people will be moving around near buildings (except on Friday afternoons). Get ready. Look for somebody wearing a heavy belt and simply roll down the hook, picking up one that suits you, but make sure it's a girl. A three hundred pound football player you suddenly whipped off his feet might not see your point. Once the girl is hooked, she won't be able to resist your inventiveness.

2a. Every night before you tinkle your pinups goodbye, repeat this saying out loud, GIRLS ARE EASILY IMPRESSED. Repeat the saying as many nights as it takes you to believe it. With a plan like this there are some consolations, but if you're real this far you definitely need some.

2b. Now, with the knowledge gained from plan 2a truck on down to a downtown bar and girls. You'll know when your in a bar, music and smoke fill the air, and all your friends will be there trying to pick up girls. As soon as you get inside they'll say, "Hi ya Jack offer me a beer, not that we're ol' pals again, thanks, slurp, yole fucker." But don't let yole pals drink what you need most to impress girls with, which is your coin.

What to do inside is to somehow attract the attention of females (there are always girls in bars, because some elite assholes in the legislature can't take the time to put down a bill or dill or whatever, so students can get drunk off their ass on campus on ... respectable community property) around you sitting standing leaning slouching in

Third Annual Cynic
Photography Contest

The CYNIC announces the "Third Annual CYNIC Photography Contest." The rules are as follows:

1. The contest is open to all students of the University of Vermont who are amateurs. (Amateurs will be considered those people who do not support themselves by taking pictures.)

2. The pictures will be divided into the three following categories: faces, landscaping, and other subjects. The category of other subjects will include any picture not included in the categories of faces and landscaping.

3. All photographs will be black and white and will be approximately 8 x 10 inches. There is no limit to the number of photographs that each photographer may submit.

4. The picture submitted will be the property of the VERMONT CYNIC, which will have the consent of the photographer to publish them in the newspaper.

5. The VERMONT CYNIC has the right to request the photographer to submit a subject release form signed by those people who may appear in the photograph.

6. The pictures may have been taken at any time, past or present.

7. Pictures entered in the Third Annual CYNIC Photography Contest could not have been entered in any other photography contest sponsored by the CYNIC.

8. Photographs will be judged on print quality and composition by a board of judges.

9. The board of judges will consist of Edward Bobbins of Student Photography Service, Tito, of the University Photo Service, and Bob Recupero, of ARIEL. The judges will be ineligible to enter the contest.

10. All photographs should be placed in the CYNIC office or the SA desk.

11. The photographer's name, address, and telephone number should be lightly printed in pencil on the back of each photograph submitted, along with a title, if any.

12. Deadline for entries will be March 1, 1973.

13. One winner will be chosen from each category and the winners will be announced in the March 22 issue of the CYNIC.

14. The winner in each category will receive $25.00.

15. All questions should be referred directly to the CYNIC office.

Amnesty—A Time For Reconciliation

by Steven C. Rice

Writer's note: The following was aired by this writer Monday as a commentary on UVM's radio station, WRUV-FM, during its evening newscast. It is presented here for your consideration.

Somewhere at this moment an American awaits the soul of a heartbeat. He is many miles away from this nation, and he is lonely. He wants to come home. But, to come home will mean a jail sentence and public ridicule.

Sometime ago this American made a decision; it was not an easy one. He decided he could not fight in a war, thousands of miles away from home. It wasn't because he was a coward that he decided not to fight. Simple, it was because he felt to take the life of another human being was wrong. He couldn't convince his draft board. He decided to leave his home, realizing he might not see it ever again. It was not an easy decision.

Today, this American will find about the returning prisoners of war. He will probably smile, feeling a moment of joy. He will realize these men will be home with their families. But, this American is lonely, and there are times he feels like a prisoner. He has not killed or hurt anyone, but he is a prisoner.

This American will think of 46,000 lives, thousands of casualties, and the few publicized massacres. He will also think of the smoking embers of a hamlet, the front page photo of a Vietnamese girl running down a street stripping her burning clothes, and another photo of an old Vietnamese refugee waiting in a long line for a bowl of rice. This American will think, and he will wonder. He hopes others will too.

He awaits the sound of a heartbeat; it hasn't been heard for a long time.

It is, as Vermont Senator George Aiken recently expressed, a time for reconciliation. Please support the movement for amnesty, and write your congressman or senator.

It will be one step in healing the wounds of this long and tragic battle.

How To Make A Little Extra Money (Illegally)

by Stephen K. Rice

"Hey-kids! Do any of you find that your finances are a little tight these days? Need some extra spending money? Or maybe you just want to start saving for that tuition increase coming up next year. In any case, we all would like to have that little extra cash coming in now and then. Paying for one of the most expensive state universities in the country kind of limits what we have to spend on the necessities, such as concerts, movies, and hockey games."

But before falling into the dark, depressing, depths of financial despair, let me tell you about a new student business that is sweeping the campus so that you too can make a few extra bucks. It's easy, requires little actual work on your part, and lets you reap tremendous profits from just a small investment! All you have to do to net yourself a profit of three to four times your original investment, it is to follow this simple procedure:

For a few nights before every big hockey game, like the peer Harvard game, spend a couple hours walking around the dorms. Ask everyone you know if he is planning on going to the game. If he doesn't plan to go, see if you can borrow his I.D. so you can pick up a couple extra tickets for your "friends". After you have lined up about twenty I.D.'s (figuring on two tickets per I.D.), take out a small bank loan for $60 and head over to the Bookstore around six AM on the day tickets go on sale. For a big seller, like the Harvard game, you may even want to bring your sleeping bag and sleep out overnight in front of the Bookstore, to make sure you don't get stuck in a line the next morning, behind all the other people doing the same thing you are.

After you have bought your tickets, just hang around for the rest of the day in front of the Bookstore, Billings, or in the dining hall. Sell them for as much as you can get. With any kind of luck, you should be able to rake in at least $80 over your original $60 investment!

But I better warn you - some people don't like this business. (They prefer to call it scalping!) Over three-hundred people stood outside the Bookstore for over an hour, the day of the Harvard game, only to find out that all the tickets had been bought up by a few enterprising businessmen. Some of them were quite disturbed when these same people began hawking their tickets, just five minutes after the announcement that the game had been sold out! Why, a few irate individuals told me that a limit of two tickets per person, and not I.D., would be a much fairer way of selling tickets! For my own part, I don't see any reason for being so upset, those young men were just engaging in a little "honest graft!" For, in the very words of that great politician, Plunkett, of Tammany Hall, "I see my opportunities, and I took 'em!"

So if you want to make that little extra spending money and you don't want to work very hard for it, borrow a few I.D.'s before the next big game, and cash in on this great, new opportunity. And just think - if we move up to Division I next year, all the home games will bring in those big profits!

Sullivan Voices Concern For University Affairs

One of the specifics Sullivan referred to as a possibility for more cooperation between the city and the University concerns the new skating rink to be built in the north end of the city. Upon completion of the project, Sullivan pointed out, many less fortunate children will not be able to skate because skates are one luxury their families will not be able to afford. He urged UVM students to search in their homes for skates they could donate.

Concerning issues pertinent to the University, Sullivan proposed some new alternatives over the present course of City Hall.

The controversy surrounding possible construction of a correctional center on University property is over since South Burlington has chosen another location near GrandWay in South Burlington. Sullivan feels the new choice is a good one, providing work release opportunities for the inmates of the facility when built. Ideally, Sullivan suggested, air rights over the parking lot adjacent to the police station on South Winooski avenue could have been obtained and the facility located there. He pointed to Mayor Paquette's position of locating the facility at Camp Johnson where no work release opportunities exist because of its distance from the city.

Recognizing the housing difficulties of UVM students who live off-campus, Sullivan said he "wants a profile of the student and his housing needs." He called housing "a problem in which we (the University and the city) should have common interests." He recommended "destroying value," the buying of several existing structures and destroying them, replacing them with apartments that include in their planning off-street parking and landscaping that would make them compatible in their neighborhood location.

This plan, Sullivan feels, would create apartments in residential neighborhoods where present apartments, converted within old homes, exist.

With regard to a University rathskeller, Sullivan stated, "I see merit in the rathskeller concept for many reasons. It permits the students to enjoy themselves with no transportation problem and with little likelihood that they can run afoul of the law. Finally, it keeps them from their peer-group and offers a congenial atmosphere. I would have no trouble supporting a petition for a temporary fixed-term license to demonstrate the workability of it."

The present block to implementation of a rathskeller rests with the sentiments of the Vermont Legislature.

The present busing situation, a private company being subsidized with public funds, may not yet have been resolved, according to Sullivan, who feels that the existing subsidy or the creation of a transit authority may not be the answer. "I am concerned with the need for some form of public transportation. Pursuing the matter, Sullivan expressed interest in working

S.A. Holds Workshop; Few Senators Attend

by Dan Haslam

Participating observers were John Cooper, assistant to Dean Powers in planning and student personnel services, and Karen Wedge, Director of Student Activities. Some discontent was expressed in the early stages of the workshop at the presence of members of the administration, but Cooper and Wedge remained as the conflict was resolved.

Individual goal statements for the Student Association Senate were presented by those present, resulting in both similar and conflicting ideals for the function of the senate. One overriding theme, however, was the necessity for unification and regeneration of interest in the S.A. by both senators and students. There was a general consensus of opinion expressed for more control over students' concerns, both academic and social, in University affairs.

One senator recommended the dissolution of the S.A. and subsequent control over the University by students and faculty. The workshop came after several senators expressed frustration over the downhill trend in involvement and functioning of the S.A. which has been evidenced in recent months over poor attendance and quorum calls, failing to produce enough representation to conduct business.

Present at the workshop as interested parties and Faculty Union (continued from page one) Department can be contacted if any Arts and Science faculty is interested in joining the union.

...Andrews Speaks On Tuition Increase

Residence Halls, then discussed the proposed $125 room and board increase for next year. He said the residence hall system operates on a 3-year cycle. Increases and costs are planned over or less 3 years in advance to hopefully minimize cost. This is the third year of the cycle and an increase, according to Miser, is necessary because of the tremendous climb in utilities, insurance, fuel oil, etc. These accounted for 90% of the increase. Also this increase will cover plans for the next three years. Dr. Miser also mentioned that UVM has one of the lowest costs in residence halls in the Northeast.

Jim Sloman then gave the chairperson report. He discussed last week's S.A. workshop and that another one has been planned for this Saturday, which will discuss the needs assessment of the University as well as a proposed Student questionnaire concerning the S.A. on campus.

The Central Committee Report elucidated on the study of the UVM committee structure. It discussed decision analysis in the University and the students' role in the decisions of the University.

Also mentioned was Program Exchange, a new program at Counseling and Testing to feel out student needs on campus. Hopefully, this will broaden the sense of the center from a strictly mental aspect toward helping students operate in the bureaucratic University environment.

Dean Powers discussed the present status of the residence hall evaluation files. These personality files have been given much investigation from a legal standpoint. As it now stands, a student may request one but is not required to have one as was policy in the past. The problem arises from the clearing out of old files and use of the new ones. The problem is especially sticky due to the change in the age of majority and the ensuing legal problems. Discussion then shifted to Old Business, S.64, a proposal to use only UVM security at concerts versus the present practice of hiring local enforcement was mentioned.

She stated that right now there isn't enough UVM security as well as there being an insurance and fire code problem. She suggested that students could be trained in to conduct business.

crowd control and act as a paraprofessional unit. The motion was tabled pending an amendment.

By far the biggest decision of the evening settled on S.65. This motion called for the allocation of $500 to the committee Against the War to help rebuild Bac Mai Hospital in Hanoi, North Vietnam. The sponsor of the bill amended it to add that the check shall leave within 72 hours by registered mail.

Argument centered on the 72 hours, with many Senators questioning the purpose of this time limit. Some suggested it was a rush move to insure the check would leave before students could nullify it if they wanted to. The amendment was voted on and defeated.

Discussion then went to Tom Grant with the Finance Committee recommendation. His report stated that money should not be allocated principally because it was decided by the Student Referendum of last December not to entertain motions not pertaining to the University.

An objection to consideration was called. This would have defeated the motion, instead the objection was defeated. A motion to discuss the S.A. and the S.A. was then discussed. Discussion continued on the legality of the consideration until the question was finally called. A division of the house was called and the vote resulted in an extremely close turnout. The chairperson stepped down and cast the deciding vote, defeating the motion.

After a recess, the vote of one senator was questioned because of his absence at the time of the vote. The chair then ruled for a new vote on the motion. Discussion then shifted to the legality of his ruling. Before the vote could be taken for a second time a quorum was called. Senators in opposition boycotted and a quorum was not reached and the meeting was adjourned. Discussion will continue next week, along with the other business that was left over.

Student Advisory Committee Survey

The Student Advisory Committee to the College of Arts and Sciences is designed to advise the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, the composite body of the faculty, and all students of that college.

It is composed of students representing the major disciplines of every department of the College of Arts and Sciences, including representatives of the Freshman class, the Graduate College, and the Experimental Program.

In addition to advising, the committee has members serving on the following Arts and Sciences Faculty committees: the Curriculum Committee, the Admissions Committee, the Honors Committee, and the Academic Standing Committee, as well as members attending the Arts and Sciences faculty and chairmen meetings. The committee is empowered to create ad-hoc subcommittees to deal with specific issues brought to the Student Advisory by either the Dean of the college, a committee member, or by an individual student of the College of Arts and Sciences.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Balladeer Mary Wins Burlington Audience

by Michael Flynn

Clothed in a simple, gentle dress and full length, scoop neck, she took center stage. There was a round of applause, followed by a song many people seemed to know. The crowd became even more subdued when Mary started to sing a popular John Denver hit and the piano player decided to try a different key. Swaying and flicking back her shoulder length, straw colored hair, she told the audience to listen to the buzz of the motor behind the spotlight. "That-sounding noise is obviously a B note, and this song is in A," she offered, with a touching, personable humor that went on as did the show.

Adding bass and folk guitarists Mary Travers continued. Her next number was written by Graham Nash, a prophetic modern ballad with verses like, "I've learned enough about the light, but not enough to win," followed by what she termed a male liberation song, written by David Bruskin.

With amazing energy, she changed from sprightly to serious songs, often stopping to tell the audience anecdotes, jokes or maybe something about Vermont weather, or about someone who had died trying to preserve humanity.

The most exciting piece of the first half was from her new album, "Morning Glory," and was a poem written by Edna St. Vincent Millay entitled "The Conscientious Objector." Posed on a wooden stool, her full, rich voice often the only instrument, she carried the audience through a beautiful lyric poem with an excellent musical background. A spirited song lead the generous applause to intermission, which was announced by some suit-and-tie, ten-second M.C. with no way with words.

Everyone almost returned after the "pause that refreshes" and Mary Travers herself seemed, refreshed. Wearing a latter, white and blue designed dress, she started things moving again with "One Child Born," a song popularized by Blood, Sweat, and Tears. Her next song, dedicated to her husband, was so moving a baby in the front row began to mildly wail along with her. But she laughed about it after. This baby also "cried" during "Motherless Child" just to show how touching Mary was or how unhappy it was getting because Mary Travers wasn't singing Mary Travers' song. But she sings of social injustice, deprivation, and isolation, which she did dynamically and accurately.

Then came the whistle everyone knows of "500 Miles," more applause and social protest songs. One very innovative one by Elton John and Bernie Taupin followed. Some of it centered around the savagery of the American Indian with unwar paint feelings like, "I take only what is mine, my pony, wife and child." She talked openly about how "hip" and fashionable Indian culture was, with heads and headbands and belts (pointing to her belt).

A tired but still strong voiced person, she danced through "The Song is Love," and almost ended with "Leavin' in a Jet Plane," when she ran off stage, yellow hair flying. But she came back with applause and even singled out people to stay.

Mary, with the help of a reluctant audience sang "Blowin' in the Wind," as a closing number and finished it with a deeper bow and a "Peace, goodnight," wave kiss. So she thought. But she walked on stage more breathless than she had trotted off and said, "How can you follow a love song like that?" "With two more," of which she lost energy doing, so only finished one.

One interesting comment she made on her return concerned male chauvinism: "Use it while you can," she stated. Kind of a perfunctory Janis Joplin.

Exhausted, (with people standing, sitting, unsure of putting on their coats) she left amid as well-deserved applause.

Religion And Science Clash In Adaptation Of 'Monkey Trial'

by Margo Howland

The dynamic combination of the immortal Spencer Tracy and the great Frederic March as the two famous advocates in a conflict of religious doctrine versus the concepts of science makes for spectacular acting in the first of the Lane Series Trial Movies, Inherit the Wind.

When a young biology teacher, Bertram T. Cates (Dick York) is discovered to be teaching Darwin's Theory of Evolution in the high school of the small Southern town of Hillsboro, the diametrically opposed forces of fundamentalist religion and scientific theory come together with a mighty clash.

The religious fanaticism of Reverend Brown, Hillsboro's Bible-quoting, intolerant minister, stirs the emotions of the basically ignorant townsfolk against such ungodly doings, and Cates is arrested and charged with violating the state law.

This truly excellent film, directed by Stanley Kramer, (was based on the play Inherit the Wind by Robert E. Lee and Jerome Lawrence, which in turn follows closely the notorious 1925 "Monkey Trial" in which biology teacher John T. Scopes of Dayton, Tennessee, was charged with illegally teaching Darwin in the classroom. Scopes was defended by the famous lawyer Clarence Darrow, portrayed in this film as Henry Drummond, in a magnetic and powerful performance by Spencer Tracy. It is not hard to see Prosecuting Attorney William Jennings Bryan behind the name of Matthew Harrison Brady, the dogmatic, pompous, and long-winded orator who with frightening sincerity and the best of intentions spouts his propaganda in the courtroom, with tragic and phenomenal results. Frederic March plays Brady with not only every appearance, but every mannerism of William Jennings Bryan.

The repercussions following Cates' arrest are immediate. His fiancee, Rachel, (Donna Anderson) is the daughter of the unyielding Reverend Brown. Tormented by the no-nonsense attitudes of her father, whom she loves and fears, and the motives of Cates, which she can't comprehend, her struggle to make a decision between them that she can live with is truly heroic.

Cates' plight is supported by E. K. Hornbeck, a cynical, sympathetic reporter from the local Hillsboro Herald, who finds him a lawyer every bit as well-known as the three-time Presidential candidate Brady, counsel for the state. Gene Kelly is excellent as Hornbeck. Because of the ethos conjured up in the minds of the jury in connection with Brady's military title of Honorary Colonel in the State Militia, Drummond is named "temporary Honorary Colonel" in a scene flashing with warmth and humor.

New Riders Of The Purple Sage
Columbia KC 31830

Gypsy Cowboy is the New Riders' third solid album in as many tries and what's more, it's got the same bouncily infectious presence as its predecessors, too.

If Powerglide, containing as it does substantial doses of hearty R&B and rock and roll as well as the countrified acoustic music which predominates this band's initial L.P., fails to dispel the preconception of the New Riders as just carriers-on of the Grateful Dead's Workingman's Dead/American Beauty phase; then Gypsy Cowboy ought to do the trick. John Dawson contributes most of the originals, all of which are as outstanding as ever, and Dave Torbert chips in with three compositions, one a soothing beauty called On My Way Back Home. Augmenting an already potent instrumental-vocal arsenal (the pedal steel-electric only female vocalist I've had lead interaction being the opportunity to listen to especially noteworthy) with violin, piano and horns and female singing of the highest order, the New Riders continue to simultaneously refine and widen their deeply personal and variegated musical sense of themselves.

It's foolish to disparage the New Riders (or Poco or any of their relatives) for not playing country music like the masters, for that's not what they're trying to do; in the grand eclectic tradition of rock and roll, the New Riders Of The Purple Sage merely utilize elements of C&W genre as just one ingredient in their own truly contemporary, rock and roll stew and the facility with which they unify the single components is the main key to their near-greatness.

who sings with the same kind of throaty eroticism as Grace Slick. But Grace nearly always couples her vocal sensuality with the body-rattling rock and roll of the rest of Jefferson Airplane; Carly dills the visceral impetus of her material with the albatross of string arrangements which do not enhance her semi-energetic style; my dislike of her song treatments outweighs my admiration for, in fact almost completely negates, the pleasure I get from her singing.

Restraint is always important in making exceptional music: part of the brilliance of the Rolling Stones, especially in their live performances, is, as someone once said, their ability to tread that fine line between "slam-bang exorcism and unedifying noise." The containment of the Band is of a different sort: their way of playing is so tantalizing because, although you know if they really cut loose they could crack the walls, their reserve lends the music its express character.

The restraint in Carly Simon's music is of a sufficient degree that the more uncluttered the arrangement, the freer the melody, the better. Unfortunately, Carly doesn't see things in that light; so she and I must part ways.

The ideal greatest hits compilations serve functions other than their main one—to make easy money—and though they're probably quite successful in accomplishing that primary objective, at least they aren't such over manifestations of greed as the recent Duane Allman anthology and all the post-humous Hendrix L.P.s.

Such collections are all meat with no fat or filler: the best products of the particular artist minus the failed experiments. They often contain, amidst the re-releases, a liberal sprinkling of never-before-released cuts.

It was a two-front war, the Western Front was manned by the Byrds, were trying out the wings were to soar them to the musical scene. The Eastern Front was being held by a group of Greenwich Village street urchins who cinched battle and returned the scene solidly for Americans. The group was Lovin' Spoonful and Sebastian was its focal singer, writer, creative direction and his heart played good-time music, kind of music that captured the feeling of time when the whole world looked gentler and it seemed they were going to have an entry into the better, so

"Sounder" Lacks Violence But Does Not Suffer

by Jonathan Lief

The trouble with reviewing a movie like "Sounder" is that I must, all the time, be aware of the condescendingly directing the acting, sniping at the direction, and derisively dismissing its most basic assumptions. Worst of all, I can't even "damn it with faint praise." "Sounder" is too good a film for that, too sensitive, too human. Despite the fact that its director, Martin Ritt, is white, it is a very perceptive portrait of black existence, without condescension and unimpaired by someone's guilty white social conscience. It is the simple story of a year in the life of a Louisiana sharecropper's family during the Depression, a year in which the father (Paul Winfield) spends in jail for stealing meat for his family. The mother (Cicely Tyson) and her three children are thus left to run the farm and pay the rent (in cane sugar) by themselves. It's also the story of the eldest son's slow beginnings of awareness of his own people's poverty. There is almost no violence in the modern sense (no violence at all, in fact), yet the movie suffers not at all, moving quickly and surely through what amounts to be the portrayal of the family's everyday life.

It is a welcome and necessary change of pace from the recent flood of violently anti-white black films, a genre that has already become rigid and stereotyped. "Sounder" comes your anger at the white power structure represented by the insensitive sheriff and his deputies, but it does so without making them into sadistic "coon-killers," and it gives you cause to say, "Well, at least it's not all one-sided." Without a climactic gun-battle in which the black stud singlehandedly eliminates the entire New York Police Department while simultaneously impregnating four gorgeous, sex-starved girls. What "Sounder" does give you is a deep respect for those families which are strengthened by hardship, and a faith in the power of human dignity. I found myself envious of these people, almost wishing I had had to live through a childhood like that so that I might have felt the depth of emotion the Morgans must necessarily have felt.

Martin Ritt's direction is simple, as it should be in a story about a simple life. The photography is beautiful without dominating other aspects of the film; of course, southern Louisiana does not exactly have breathtaking scenery. The countryside is filmed in a soft, warm light which belies the hardness of the climate and the life, but which also emphasizes the very basic relationship of the land to these people, and the ambiguous feelings of love and hate they held towards it.

The acting is superb. Cicely Tyson has frequently been mentioned as the year's Best Actress, and personally I thought Paul Winfield's portrayal of Nathan Lee Morgan one of the most appealing roles I've seen in years. His ability to convey his almost desperate love for his family in his eyes is beautiful to see, and his sense of humor is deeply reassuring amidst all the misfortune. The children, led by Kevin Hooks as David Lee, are all excellent, and Tai Mahali's music and acting are both very good in an unobtrusive way. Sounder, the dog, plays himself admirably.

All in all, this is one of the least sentimental movies in recent years; yet it is able to honestly touch the viewer, and it should not be missed. It evokes a simplicity in our "quality of life" which we lost years ago, a feeling to which one should at least be exposed, even if only through a film.

the doctor's bag

Each winter a good share of normal, healthy and reasonable people get colds, sore throats and coughs. Many of these people go to unreasonable lengths to combat a basically harmless illness, making it clear that some information about this common condition is needed.

In checking out some facts for this article, I visited a drugstore to see what "cures" were available. After half an hour in the long aisle marked "Cold Remedies" I had barely covered the products stocked, when I fled the emporium with a case of nausea and headache. The array of stuff included combinations that would do a shaman proud. I was particularly impressed with Nyquil which contained something for everything, all dissolved in 25% alcohol and came with its own shot glass. That's 50 proof booze, no wonder it helps you sleep! Good bourbon or Scotch whiskey, more than 80 proof, is cheaper and has less potential for harm. Useful preparations are to be found; avoid combination preparations by purchasing the product containing the specific ingredient you need, at the lowest price. Non prescription ingredients are recommended in the following paragraphs.

Run-of-the-mill upper respiratory infections (URI's or colds) are produced by viruses and characterized by any or all of the following symptoms: runny nose, stuffed nose, sneezing, mild fever (under 101 F), mild sore throat, mild cough, hoarseness, and malaise (feeling lousy). The ailment is basically self limited and visiting a physician for a URI is generally a waste of time, except in certain circumstances to be elaborated. "Flu" (influenza) is a viral respiratory illness producing some of the above symptoms plus generalized symptoms which can include nausea, vomiting, high fever, and muscle aches. Flu symptoms are usually more severe, but the illness is also self limited in the healthy adult. Since recovery is spontaneous in both, the goal of treatment is to keep comfortable.

Fever, headaches, other aches and pains can be treated with two everyday, ordinary, cheap aspirin. Combinations of aspirin and other things, or buffered aspirin, is of no added value. Aspirin taken with food produces less gastric irritation, however. Ulcer sufferers should use acetaminophen instead. These drugs should be taken only if necessary. Stuffed noses can be treated by using 0.25% neo-synephrine nose drops or nasal spray. Inhalers with propylhexedrine are also effective. Such preparations should only be used for 2-3 days or else they will cause irritation of the nasal passages, producing the same symptoms you are trying to alleviate. Antihistamines are often included in the hodge-podge cold preparations to dry out runny noses (rhinorrhea). They are of questionable value and may produce sedation which can be dangerous if you are driving or thinking. Common antihistamines are chlorpheniramine, brompheniramine and methapyrilene. Mild sore throats sometimes feel better if you gargle with warm salt water (1/2 teaspoon salt to 1/2 glass water). The so-called antiseptic gargles are worthless.

A cough that is unrelenting but not producing sputum may be managed by sucking hard candies which frequently relieve the itchy feeling that triggers the spasm. If that fails, use a preparation with a cough suppressant. The one is dextromethorphan; it usually comes in combination with glyceryl guaiacolate which is supposed to keep secretions loose. Again, do not get a cough preparation with a lot of other things in it. Hoarseness is best treated by not speaking, treating the cough and the measures which follow.

A few simple, supportive measures should be used for all colds. Large amounts of fluids prevent dehydration, and in the form of soups will provide some calories. The use of a humidifier is most helpful especially for coughs, hoarseness and sore throats. Smoking, which kills you anyway, is especially bad.

A physician should be consulted when cough becomes severe and produces thick sputum, especially if yellow or green. Also, persistent purulent (pus-like) nasal discharge, and especially facial pain in the area of the cheek bones, with a past history of sinus infections, require a physician. So do sore throats that are severe, producing pain on swallowing, and swelling of lymph nodes ("glands") in the neck. The above symptoms are usually accompanied by a persistent temperature elevation, but not invariably, especially if aspirin has been taken.

In all of the above cases there is the possibility of a bacterial infection. A physician should obtain a bacterial culture to identify the organism causing the infection by sampling the infected material through swabbing the back of the throat, culturing the sputum or other appropriate means. This enables the doctor to choose the correct antibiotic if one is needed. A blood count should also be done. Except for unusual circumstances, antibiotics should never be given unless a culture is taken and evaluated, to do otherwise is bad medicine. The use of antibiotics for viral infections is irrational and fruitless, since viruses are unaffected by these drugs. Such use is also dangerous, since allergies and other reactions to these drugs can occur. I advise not taking antibiotics unless a culture has demonstrated a bacterial infection or a compelling reason can be offered by the physician. Common antibiotics include tetracyclines and penicillin.

As I have indicated before in this column, the use of vitamin C to prevent or treat colds is not based on solid research and the doses involved are potentially more dangerous than the cold itself.

New Swiss Restaurant

Presents Unique Atmosphere

The opening of The Swiss Chocolate Pot restaurant on Shelburne Road in South Burlington, heralds the arrival of old world dining atmosphere and authentic Swiss cuisine. Situated on one of the oldest remaining landscaped properties, the "Auberge," with its unique Swiss decorations, bar, dining room and cozy fireplace, brings a little corner of Switzerland to the people of Burlington. The creative construction work was executed by Claude Schaefer, director of C.A.S. Construction of Vergennes. Claude, from Neuchâtel, is a Swiss import himself. Reproducing a distinctive Swiss ambience came naturally.

The original Swiss Chocolate Pot opened in Stowe four years ago and was an instant success. Under the able direction of manager and master chef, Franz Dubach, the "Pot" has become famous for its continuous high standard of quality.

The menu features the restaurants specialty: Fondue of course, in four varieties: beef, cheese, lobster, and for dessert, chocolate fondue. Ancient traditions still apply to the dunking aspect of fondue. If a girl loses her "dunkable" in the pot, she must kiss her nearest male. Men, on the other hand, who happen to lose their "dunkable" must pay off in a somewhat different manner. They must pay for the next round of drinks. So it is wise to make sure that your "dunkable" is secure. Other delicious and popular items include onion soup, escargots maitre d'hotel, a full selection of char-broiled steaks, lobster tails, all the irresistible chocolate desserts and daily businessmen's luncheon specials and sandwich menu. Open wine will be available in litre amounts for four or 1/2 litres for two, with a choice of burgundy, chablis, or rose. This is complemented by a full selection of imported Swiss wines that should make you feel like you've just discovered an alpe.

at a paralytic prayer meeting, in which he literally damns his own daughter for her own sin. Cates and Drummond (Claude Atkins as Brown) is all the more horrifying because he is real. No benign Billy Graham who speaks of a loving and forgiving God. Brown is a fanatic in the flesh, whose words threaten to break his daughter's spirit as well as her health. Here the pompous Brady shows a warm and generous heart as he tries to intervene in Rachel's behalf. He begs him not to judge her; only God can do that, and he quotes the proverb: He that troubles his own house shall inherit the wind.

The momentum of the trial builds to a fever pitch, the suspense is incredible. The victory that is won is false and hollow, and at a terrible cost: sanity, honor, one's man's reputation and another man's life are lost and dreams are shattered. In the search for the right to think, it is also evident that every man must have something to believe in and that dreams cannot be chased away by cold rationality. Hornbeck, the loner whom nothing can warm, no man can touch, defies this principle in his own life, though he would fight for the right of others to have it. In a chilling and thought-provoking conclusion he declares he is not entirely alone; for there is one great advocate who would defend his right to be lonely.

those who make them. The best craftsmen in these fields work for themselves and each other. John is a musician; he's probably a hell of a sailmaker.

John returned to music again after this, however, and spent time in the South with blues guitarist and singer Lightin' Hopkins. He studied with him, learned to play like him and gained a sense of the roots of his music that was to set the direction of his writing. While he was with Hopkins, he met Mississippi John Hurt whose song contained a line "I love my baby by the lovin' spoonful," which was to provide the name for the next group which John formed in New York.

Steve Boone, Zal Yanovsky, Joe Butler and John were the Lovin' Spoonful and they played American music. It was a little bit of everything—jazz, blues, folk, country and western, ragtime, village ethnic and gospel. John was the leader, the writer and the poet. He was the shy one with the pretty voice who sang lead on nearly all their hits: "Do You Believe in Magic," "Younger Girl," "Nashville Cats," "Summer in the City," "Daydream," "You didn't have to be so Nice," "Did You Ever Have to Make up Your Mind?"

It was a very successful group and John's songs were recorded by a lot of people, which is a high form of compliment. The list included such diverse and unlikely names as Kate Smith, Pat Boone, Flatt and Scruggs and Astrud Gilberto. Good music is good music and everyone recognized it.

Jim Croce will appear on the same bill with John Sebastian and Howdy Moore Sunday, February 15 in Patrick Gym.

...And So Does Sundance

Comedy-Caperesque antics. Even when they blow up a train, the guard, Woodcock, comes out of it with only a broken arm. But now, it's no longer fun and games. Butch and the Kid must fight for their lives and for the money of the Bolivian government. The thieves and their, and Butch, who had been mostly talk and not much action, sighs as he looks at the half-dozen dead bodies: "Well—we've gone straight."

One cannot ignore the delightful bicycle scene and the now-famous "Raindrops Keep Fallin' On My Head" as well as the beautiful theme song, "Terrific!"

At this point one must bring up a very disturbing aspect of the film—Ugly Americanism. Somehow the concept of the daredevil n'er-do-wells blowing up U.S. trains and banks with "nary a casualty seems expected and even funny. But when they pack up their belongings and arrive in Bolivia, there to rob their banks (with the help of Etta's Spanish notes) something is terribly wrong. Even though the scenes are hilarious, this reviewer had the uncomfortable feeling that it was out-of-place as laughing at graft, corruption and other forms of exploitation. Somehow even placing the setting in Mexico would seem more appropriate.

There is also a problem of credibility with some of the stunts Newman and Redford pull off; do they have immortal horses, that one, can race ninety miles an hour over rocky terrain with two grown men on its back?

Nonwithstanding, Newman, Redford and Rom are truly entertaining in this vastly popular film as reflected by box-office draws, awards, and enthusiastic responses from a delighted audience. And rightly so! Role on, Butch Cassidy!

In an interview, John described his music this way: "There's nothing frantic about what we play. You don't respond to our music by screaming. You smile, maybe."

That about says it all. He lives in California in the hills behind Hollywood, and on a farm in New York, with a lot of dogs and cats and friends. He is a kind and loving man who writes love songs about the world he lives in.

Crimson Downs Cats 8-4

by Steve Leipzig

Could the Catamounts pull off another big upset against the great hockey team of Harvard University? This question had been tossed around here on campus for a couple of weeks now. Of course, on Jan. 6, 1971, the Cats scored one of the biggest college hockey upsets ever by beating Harvard 3-2 coming up with spectacular performances by Dave Reese and Ted Yeates. The Harvard sextet came into the Wednesday game ranked second in the country. The game shaped up as a matchup between the leader of Division I versus the top team of Division II. The interest in this clash was so high that a new UVM bookstore record was set with tickets being sold out in 27 minutes. It was rumored that tickets priced at $1.50 were being sold at prices as high as $6.00.

It was apparent in the pre-game drills that the Catamounts were up for this one. The crowd had started buzzing long before face-off time. Freddie Hunt got things underway very quickly with a great individual effort. He stole the puck from Harvard defenseman Kevin Hämpe, at the Harvard line and skated in alone on the left side. He unloaded one of those patented Hunt slap shots from about twenty feet out and the netminder, Joe Bertagna, never had a chance. The goal came at the 33 second mark and Guttererson turned into a madhouse after the goal. The UVM rooters were jumping and screaming and the noise was just—deafening. The Catamounts continued to apply pressure but couldn't break through.

At 6:43, Harvard tied it up on a fluke play. Winger Ted Thorndike retrieved the puck from the corner and centered it out. Unfortunately for UVM, the puck hit goalie Steve Eckerson's pads as he was turning and it squirted into the net.

Several minutes later UVM winger Bill Koch was sent off for holding fine scorer, Bill Corkery, and the famed Harvard power play got a chance to entertain. Controlling the puck with great expertise, Harvard worked it in front of the net and Corkery slammed a rebound past Eckerson from short range.

The Cats came right back with a tying goal only 18 seconds later. The fierce forechecking of the MacKinnon-Hurley-Miller line forced a faceoff to the left of goalie Bertagna. MacKinnon got the draw back to Chris Miller who found the net with a high wrist shot. Once again the fieldhouse turned to bedlam and the Harvard team looked demoralized.

It should be noted that Harvard had just lost their All-American left wing, Dave Hynes, who had withdrawn from the University on Tuesday. Hynes had teamed up with Bob McManama and Bill Corkery to form the highest scoring line in Division I. The Crimson could not get any sustained attack going and with Harvard's Mark Noonan sitting in the sin bin, Patty Wright, captain and leading scorer, put Vermont ahead with his 17th goal of the season. Patty, lugging the puck into Harvard ice, saw an opening and moved to the slot. He let fly with a perfectly placed wrist shot that beat Bertagna over his left shoulder. The Harvard Skaters were really frustrated and, towards the end of the period, they started a series of shoving matches at center ice to show their displeasure at the goings on. It was a great period for UVM, though, as they capitalized on almost every opportunity. They came right back as soon as they got behind and they managed to hold Harvard pretty much intact as the Ivy Leaguers seemed somewhat awed at the great fan support that Vermont has.

The second period was a totally different story as the Crimson came out flying and dominated for most of the period. It was all knotted up again at the two minute mark. Koch was in the penalty box when center Randy Roth swatted a rebound past Eckerson for the Harvard score. At the 7:50 mark, Harvard combined once again. Roth took a hard slap shot from the blue line. Eckerson made the save but had trouble with the rebound which squirted out to the onrushing

Bob Goodenow who had no trouble beating Eckerson. With Ken Yeates off for charging, the Crimson power play made it three for three. Working the puck beautifully, the Crimson got it to Corkery who finished off the ice show with a short wrist shot to the left side of Eckerson.

The Cats now found themselves down by a score of 5-3 but were aided by overlapping Harvard penalties. With the two-skater advantage the Cats third line had no trouble finding the open man, Chris Miller, who scored his second goal of the evening at 15:37. Miller got the puck on the inside of the left circle after passes from Hurley and MacKinnon and beat Bertagna with a quick wrist shot to the near side. The Cats seemed on their way back but, with only eight seconds left in the period, McManama scored on a pretty deflection of a slap shot from the point. It was a big goal as it sent the Catamounts, to the dressing room with a 2 goal deficit.

The Catamounts looked sharp in the opening minutes of the final stanza. They were given the odd man advantage for two minutes but could not capitalize. During this power play, they kept the puck in the Harvard zone and were passing well, but just about all of their shots were blocked by the Harvard defense. The early Catamount offensive thrust of the period seemed to have tired them out for the remainder. Midway through the period, the Cats had the power play once again but this one was a disaster. McManama and Corkery broke out quickly and eventually had a 2 on 1 breakaway. Corkery drew the defender to him and slid the disc over to McManama who poked it past Eckerson. This was the back-breaking goal as far as UVM was concerned since it put the game out of reach. The shorthanded goal

by John Mahoney

The University of Maine has one of the newest and finest swimming facilities in New England. In addition to being eight lanes wide, with electronic timers registering to three decimal places, it has a separate diving area with two low boards and one high board. The pool has only one little disadvantage that the swim team didn't really care for. It takes 6 1/2 hours by bus (non-stop) to get there.

Last Saturday the bus trip back to Burlington wasn't made any shorter after we lost the Yankee Conference championship to Connecticut. The loss was especially hard to take because we had just shown the week before that we could beat Connecticut in dual meet competition.

There were probably two big reasons why we came in second behind Connecticut. First of all, the squad had been invaded by the flu. A lot of the guys weren't feeling in top shape and when we left Friday Dave Phelan was in the infirmary with a temperature of 104. George Potekhan made the trip but was unable to swim because he was sick also.

The other important factor in the loss concerned the swimmers of the other teams. The teams from Maine and New Hampshire managed to have a few strong swimmers in our better events. Consequently the other teams were taking away from our strong spots but not Connecticut's. Connecticut has a good strong squad but we still feel we are a better team than they are.

Looking ahead, our task for the next two weeks will be to get ready for the New England which will be held the first weekend in March, at Springfield College. If we stay away from the flu and work with a positive attitude we'll have our best showing at the New England yet.

Newly elected soccer captain Chris Chappell.

Soccer Captain Chosen

At the soccer post-season dinner, junior Chris Chappell (Syoset, N.Y.), one of the premier fullbacks in the Yankee Conference, was elected captain of the 1973 Vermont soccer team. "I couldn't be more pleased," said head coach Don Soderberg, after learning of the election of Chappell. "He was one of the top fullbacks in the Conference last fall, hustling all the time. He'll lead by example," added the head coach. Other awards at the dinner included the Most Valuable Player and the Hal Gieg plaque, both going to outgoing captain, Jack Shea of Pittsfield, Mass. Shea, like Chappell, was a fullback.

Rugby Club Meeting

The UVM Rugby Club will be starting its spring season this semester with a meeting Thursday, Feb. 15, at 7:30 pm at Delta Psi Fraternity house, 61 Summit St. Rugby is a contact sport that combines the agility of soccer and the aggressiveness of football. Any UVM student may participate. We are especially interested in underclassmen in order to build a team for the future.

Some of the Rugby Clubs played are: Dartmouth, Norwich, Johnson State, St. Michaels, UMass, MIT, McGill, MacDonald, Albany Law, UNH, and others. These games are held both home and away.

Anyone who is interested in playing but cannot make the first meeting or for future information call: Coach Dr. David Scrase German Dept. or Mark O'Connor (Pres.) at 864-9788.

Restaurant

Unique Atmosphere

The menu features the restaurant's specialty, Fondue of course in four varieties: beef, chicken, lobster, and for dessert, chocolate fondue. Ancient traditions still apply to the dunking aspect of fondue. If a girl loses her "dunkable" in the pot, she must kiss her nearest male. Men, on the other hand, who happen to lose their "dunkable" must pay off in a somewhat different manner. They must pay for the next round of drinks. So it is now to make sure that your "dunkable" is secure. Other delicious and popular items include onion soup, escargots, mignon, a full selection of char-broiled steaks, lobster tails, all the irresistible chocolate desserts, and daily businessmen's luncheon specials and sandwich menu. Open wine will be available in liter amounts for four or 1/2 liter for two, with a choice of burgundy, chablis, or rose. This is complemented by a full selection of imported Swiss wines that should make you feel like you've just discovered an alpe.

The specialty foods are also imported from Switzerland, along with wine, cheese and Tobler Chocolate.

Stan Sheffer, director, invites all his friends and customers to drop in and dine. Swiss bells salute the Swiss flag, yodel along or, generally, go to Pot-Em-due that is!

UVM Second In Yankee Conference Meet

Last Saturday, Feb. 10, our swimmers posted their first win of the season. The UVM Cats came home from the Yankee Conference and to the U. Conn. Huskies.

The five from UVM's power house David Phalen, the long-haired freestyler, could not make the trip. On the Friday before the meet his temperature was 104 degrees. Coach Lew Leggett wisely decided Dave should remain in the good hands of the Watson Infirmary. George Potelshen made the harrowing trip to Orono hoping he would feel better upon arrival. He didn't, but his gritty team spirit and determination pushed him to swim his event even though he felt very sick.

The rest of the team performed outstandingly well. The 400 yd medley relay team of Cliff Johnson, John Ackerson, Paul "Buzzy" Jones, and Fred Alexy, posted a first. While the 400 yd freestyle relay team, of Fred Alexy, Mike Jacobs, Mike Kurt, and Bruce Willard, (winning the event) established a new pool record of 3:25.4.

Individually, Bruce Willard won the 100 yd freestyle setting a new pool record of 50.5 seconds. Bruce also won the 50 yd freestyle, establishing a new pool record of 22.8 seconds. Bruce proves time and again he is the backbone of the team, winning any event he is entered in.

Cliff Johnson posted a second in the 200 yd backstroke and a 3rd in the 200 yd individual medley. Cliff is another member of the team relied upon to take in the points. Mike, "Jake, the Snake" Jacobs, a new comer to the team this semester, finished 3rd in the 200 yd backstroke.

Mike Kurt the outspoken distance swimmer took second in the 1000 yd freestyle. Mike established the new Varsity record for the 1000 yd freestyle with the time of 11:01.9, smashing Bob Swall's previous record of 11:14.0 set in 1971.

The final team standings were: 1-Connecticut, 2-Vermont, 3-UNH, 4-Maine, 5-Massachusetts, and 6-Rhode Island.

Our swimmers will meet UNH February 24 at 1:30pm our pool. It will be the final home meet of the year, and the last meet before the New England Conference meet. For good seats get to the pool early.

Cats Beaten By Shot At Buzzer 83-81

Terry Green battling under the boards in St. Mike's game.

by Mike Schwartz

A few observations on this game bring out some of the ironies of the contest. 1) Ken Johnson is a bulky 6'09" center who weighs 270 lbs. He scored 31 points and pulled down 18 rebounds. After the game this reporter was told that Johnson, a freshman, had come to UVM for an interview and was almost recruited by Art Locke.

the former UVM coach. When he found out about St. Mike's, Johnson decided to go to the all-Catholic school. Ken had been an all-Catholic league center at Brooklyn Prep in New York City.

2) John Lanchantin is a sophomore forward. He rebounded John Balesuk as a starter. Lanchantin scored the winning basket.

3) The score was 50-39, UVM leading. St. Mike's coach Walter Baumann was hit with two technical fouls. UVM hit them to lead 52-39. After this the next eight fouls were against Vermont. Coach Salzberg and assistant Coach Fertig could not believe this happened. For the game George Peredy had 5 fouls, as did Greg Ashford. Dan Ostler, Mario Macias, Terry Green, and Bernie Palmer all had four. If there was a key to the game this was it.

Despite the fouls, the Cats generally controlled the game. Except for Johnson no Knight had many rebounds. The Cat backcourt pressed forced many Knight turnovers. UVM also attacked the St. Mike zone, especially in first half, by varying the post man and hitting the open player.

But after the technical fouls, St. Mike caught life. Johnson was able to hit at will with Peredy out. Imagine Nate Reeves at 175 lb guarding the 270 lb Johnson. St. Mike's hit baskets and were psyched by the crowd of Knight rooters. At the end the teams traded baskets, until Ostler made it 80-76 UVM. Johnson scored and hit a 3 point play to make it 80-79. Cizynski stole the ball from Barry Cohen to make it 81-80 after he drove the length of the court. Macias came back with 14 seconds left to drive on Johnson and get a foul. He hit one of two. With three seconds left and the score 81-81 Green fouled Fran Laffin, the Knight star. Laffin missed the foul shot but Lanchantin grabbed the rebound. Pandemonium broke out as the Knights carried Coach Baumann off the court in victory.

Don Ostler led the Cats with 23 points, taking up the slack for the injured Joe Greco. Green scored 13. Barry Cohen despite the late steal played a fine game. He had 10 points and 4 assists in his substituting role for the foul plagued Vermonters. Fran Laffin scored 19 and Bob Jones 15 to compliment Johnson for St. Mike's.

But the essence of the game was in the stands. It was a St. Mike's crowd. Basketball to them is like UVM hockey. Their team is now 13-5 and they win big, hitting 100 points 3 times and 99 or 98 on many other occasions. There just wasn't enough UVM cheering at supposedly the home court. The excitement because of the Knight fans. UVM basketball just doesn't have the spirit and a 7-12 record doesn't help. UVM played a great game despite fouls and the lack of their top player. There weren't enough fans to offset the St. Mike spirit. Even though the team has lost 4 in a row, and is now 7-12, the student body should get behind this team so that the players know they have some fans.

After a tough 4 game road trip to Siena, UMass, UConn, and Boston U, the Cats come home to play Norwich on Feb. 26. Now that you have the date, the next step is to come out and cheer.

Women Down Johnson Five

by Sally Rouse

Patrick Gymnasium was the site of the second win of the Women's basketball team in their 1973 season. The score was 59-33. High scorer for UVM was Jenny Raney with 10 points and for Johnson it was Paula Ladd with an equal amount. UVM ran into some difficulty in the third period but it was quickly taken care of by the two guards Arlene Averill and Pam Bryant. Quick passes to the two insiders and good rebounding position by Pam Bateman brought the Cat right out of the slump.

Everyone on the team put out equal effort and showed equal shooting abilities. We would like to thank the people who watch our games and especially Mr. Salzberg for letting us use some of the men's equipment.

The "B" team won their first game of the season, against Johnson, by a score of 45-9. High scorer was Erika Koeing with 10 points. Good passing was the key to this first win. The team will be looking for its second victory this week. Each girl showed her ability in each aspect of play. Be watching for posters and schedules of up-and-coming games. This is the year for Women's Basketball.

To Thank You

Dear Students:

In behalf of the Plexiglass Fund, I would like to thank those of you who made a contribution to the Plexiglass Fund display that was in the bookstore during the week of February 4.

As a result of your contributions, $64.08 was received which helped to boost the overall total of the Plexiglass Fund to $5,883.15.

This is just one more way in which the University has shown its full support toward the Plexiglass Fund and the overall hockey program. In doing so, they join IFA, The Family Associates, faculty, fraternities, sororities, as well as other campus organizations in support of this effort.

Thank you for your participation.

Sincerely,
Bob Hodde

Round the Track

with Zach Ramsey

Last weekend, the UVM Indoor track team ran well at its own invitational. This weekend, we travel to the University of New Hampshire track for the Indoor Yankee Conference Championships. With the team will go one of the best pole vault crews in the conference. A very high strong, high jumping crew.

I could never see how anyone could take the chance of even learning how to pole vault. For the layman, the pole vault is the event in which a guy runs down the track with a long pole, and uses it to vault himself over a bar. Just imagine yourself doing it. It can be fun. It can also be disastrous to your physical make-up if your not skilled at it. Here's the guys who are pole vaulting.

Mark Iverson—5'10" 160 lbs.—74— Pole Vault. Mark is one of those blond beauties that you might see on the ski slope. I believe he holds the school record at this event. He has good speed and strength going into the pit. Top contender for a place in Yankee Conference meet this weekend. Loves to sing and be happy. Pole Vaults outdoors also.

Bruce Lawrence—5'9" 160 lbs.—74— Zoology Major. Nickname "Showboat Lawrence." Another top contender at this event. He usually battles it out with Mark for first place. Gives one-two punch. He says, "I like to pole vault because it takes no skill what-so-ever to come down, and the feeling is unbelievable." Let me tell you, he does have skill. Tom Bird—5'10" 165 lbs.—76— Chemistry Major—Nickname "Bird". A freshman with good potential. Has older brother on squad. He's a sticker. He tries his best. Fun guy to have around. He says of Pole Vaulting, "Insane! Anyone who runs as fast as he can with a fiberglass rod in his hand and sticks it in a little metal box, just to jump over a little metal bar, has to be crazy. I like to Pole Vault, I think?" He'll probably be crazy enough to do it outdoors.

Those were the pole vaulters. Now, the high jumpers who are a little different. They jump over a bar without a pole. Here they are:

Nathaniel Reeves—6'3" 180 lbs.—74— Economics Major—Nickname "Nate the snake." From Connecticut, Nate possesses enough ability to hold the school record. I believe he can do much better, but he has been plagued by injuries. Also plays varsity basketball. At one time, he jumped 6'11". Man, do I wish he could find that form again.

Steve Lynch—5'10" 160 lbs.—75— Nickname—"Lynx". Also is a good long jumper. He will be a top contender in this week's Yankee Conference Championship. Has good potential. He'll break Nate's record. Very competitive and determined type of guy who works hard to achieve the best. Also brother of Janet Lynch, who will be going to Madison Square Garden for Nationals in same event. Steve says, "I'm always striving to attain a higher position in life." "Nothing is impossible." For Steve, I hope not.

Rick Fisher—5'11" 170 lbs.—76— Pre-Med, Zoology Major. Probably throw javelin outdoors. Rick says of himself, "I'm a Vermont farmer and I wouldn't trade that for anything. In fact, if I had my life to live over again (all 18 years of it) I wouldn't do anything differently the second time around." Good Potential. Looks to be a good one in years to come.

Well that's the crews UVM will be taking. I can bet you now, that one will be in the top-three of the Yankee Conference in their respective events. Till next week, keep things and yourself on the right "track".

UPDATE: Mike Brace reminded me that he was a 600 yarder. I'm sorry Mike, but I had you with the miles. Don't worry Mike I'll get you in.

Arthur Newcombe (Priest) ended his indoor season while playing basketball. He tore ligaments in the ankle. See you during the outdoor season.

Pictures talk. Some little boys don't.

Some inner-city ghettos have special schools. For little boys who don't talk.

Not mute little boys. But children so withdrawn, so afraid of failure, they cannot make the slightest attempt to do anything at which they might fail.

Some don't talk. Some don't listen. Most don't behave. And all of them don't learn.

One day someone asked us to help. Through Kodak cameras and film were distributed to teachers. The teachers gave the cameras to the kids and told them to take pictures.

And then the miracle. Little boys who had never said anything, looked at the pictures and began to talk. They said "This is my house." "This is my dog." "This is where I like to hide." They began to explain, to describe, to communicate. And once the channels of communication had been opened, they began to learn.

We're helping the children of the inner-city. And we're also helping the adults. We're involved in inner-city job programs. To train unskilled people in useful jobs.

What does Kodak stand to gain from this? Well, we're showing how our products can help a teacher—and maybe creating a whole new market. And we're also cultivating young customers who will someday buy their own cameras and film. But more than that, we're cultivating alert, educated citizens. Who will someday be responsible for our society.

After all, our business depends on our society. So we care what happens to it.

Kodak
More than a business.

"It was a total team effort," said Chip LaCasse, head ski coach, following his team's first win ever at the Dartmouth Winter Carnival last weekend. The trophy is now on the way over to the President's (Dr. Edward C. Andrews, Jr.) office. Everyone is just thrilled with the team's performance," added LaCasse. "The runners and jumpers were the best of anyone at the Carnival and the alpine contingent kept us close to Dartmouth in both the slalom and giant slalom. Now, everyone will have to shoot for Vermont at the Williams and Middlebury Carnivals." Once again, UVM's ace jumper, Peter Kongis, set another hill record, this time at the small Dartmouth jump. Kongis leaped 47 meters on the 40-meter jump located on the Hanover Country Club golf course. While Kongis was winning the jumping event, three other UVM jumpers demonstrated their prowess, as Martin Grimes finished fifth, and Tom Oddy and Tom Lantz finished seventh and eighth, respectively. The biggest surprise of the weekend was Friday's (Feb. 9) outstanding performance by the young runners, as they captured a first, 3rd and 4th. Freshman Arne Lium won the cross-country event, and was followed by teammates Stan Dunklee (third) and Trygve Kjoseth (fourth). The amazing thing about the Nordic team is that Dunklee, Lium and Kjoseth are freshmen; Kongis, Oddy and Lantz are sophomores and Grimes is a junior. The alpine squad is also a young unit, with no seniors on the squad. In fact, the lone senior on the squad is who makes a significant point contribution is Hank Pfeiffer. While the UVM team prepares for the Williams Carnival, its jumping ace, Peter Kongis, will prepare for the 90-meter jumping event at Wesby, Wis., site of one of many international jumping events scheduled this month. Earlier in the year, Kongis won the Norge event in Chicago. He skipped last weekend's jumping event in Ishpeming, Mich., in order to help the team at the Dartmouth Carnival.

UVM Shuts Out UCONN 6-0

Over the weekend, the Catamounts traveled down to Storrs, Conn., to take on the UCONN Huskies. The game took place on an outdoor rink and the players seemed as cold as the fans. Ted Castle was the star of all as he decided to stay home and rest himself after suffering an injury in the Harvard game. It was a lackluster game but nevertheless the Cats romped to victory.

It was apparent that the Catamounts were not at all psyched and only scored one goal in the first period. Willie MacKinnon, playing opportunist, picked up a loose puck in front of the Connecticut cage and banged it right between the goalie's pads. For Willie, it was his eighth goal of the season, unassisted, and it came at the 8:46 mark.

In the second period, the Cats scored on a power play goal with Whitney Watts banging in a rebound off a scramble in front of the net with Brady and Murphy getting the assists.

There was no more scoring until the last minute of the period. At 19:16, Patty Wright picked up a loose puck at the right circle and let go with a fine wrist shot that beat Connecticut goaltender, Lou Parker, to the near side. Then,

The game puts UVM's Division II record at 10-0-0 and their overall record at 15-5-0. It's getting near playoff time for the Cats but two home games still remain. The next one will be Saturday Feb. 17 against Hamilton. All UVM home games are carried on WRUV radio 580.

SPEAKING OF HOCKEY

With Bob Whensik

Last Sunday afternoon (Feb. 4) while most students were relaxing from that long weekend, the Catamount hockey team embarked on a two night trip to play the Army team at West Point. It was a long tiring trip for a team that had played Colby and Bowdoin on the previous two nights. Coach Cross felt it was a good idea to stay overnight before the game so that the team could get ample rest.

After a four hour bus ride the team stopped over in Kingston, New York. The following day they toured the United States Military Academy. The most exciting part of the tour was the visit to the Military Museum at Thayer Hall. Most of the players were very impressed with the academy but there wasn't any rush to the local recruiting station!!

The game Monday evening was one of the most exciting I've ever witnessed. Smith rink is the largest artificial ice surface in North America. This size seemed to hamper the Vermont attack in the early going, but as the game progressed they overcame this disadvantage but were still frustrated by the Army goalie, Claire Olsen, and the Army defense that covered up well in front of the net. After two periods of hard checking and good defense the score was deadlocked at 1-1 with Patty Wright getting the goal for Vermont with assists from Fred Hunt and Teddy Child.

With 16:37 left in the final period Willie MacKinnon was sent to the penalty box for hooking, a must penalty on a breaking Army player. 42 seconds later Vermont found themselves trailing 2-1. With about 16 minutes left to play it seemed that Vermont had ample time to pull it off. Army had other ideas. They continued to shoot the puck down the length of the ice every time the Catamounts brought it into the Army zone. Frustration was evident on the faces of the Cats. But this frustration was soon relieved. With 58 seconds left in regulation time, Coach Cross pulled goalie Steve Eckerson in a do or die attempt to tie the score. 13 seconds later, Teddy Castle put it by the Army goalie to knot the score at 2-2. That goal was made possible by Wright, Hunt and Child. The remaining 46 seconds elapsed and Vermont found themselves going into overtime with a tough Army team. The Catamounts have taken some heartbreaking losses in overtime in previous years, but against Army they were not to be denied. With Vermont completely dominating play, it took about 4 1/2 minutes for Billy Koch to end the game in overtime.

The Cats almost lost assistant Coach George Kreiner for the season when he nearly fell from the press box after the winning goal was scored. It was a satisfying win for the Cats with great performances by all the players. Although the great line of MacKinnon, Miller and Hurley didn't score, they continued to put a great deal of pressure on the Army defense with Hurley putting pressure on Army's bodies. The line of Whit (fat lip), Watts, Eli Tubbs and Jack Clifford played their usual steady game. Steve Eckerson played another excellent game in the nets which is becoming commonplace as the season wears on, and the defense continues to be offensive to other teams. The Cats were in a hurry to leave West Point, not because of a lack of hospitality, but because they had a heavy date with Harvard on Wednesday night.

I spoke with Chris Miller at 10 a.m. on the day of the Harvard game. He said he had never been so nervous 9 1/2 hours before a game before. Miller and the rest of the Catamount hockey team wanted to win that game very badly. The Harvard hockey coach said, "I expected the UVM team to be flying about 2 feet off the ice, but I was wrong. They were 5 feet off the ice!"

Probably the most underrated player on the squad is goalie John Kiely. Kiely has only been in 6 games this year but must always be psyched and ready to play in the net at any time. Kiely will get his big chance next season and will definitely be outstanding. John is big and has great moves.

What can you say about Coach Cross? He's taken 22 hockey players and molded them into the best team in Vermont hockey history. He has all my respect as a man and coach. Any coach with his team and fans behind him as much as they are has to rate as one of the greatest coaches of all time.

The Harvard game is in the past. Now it is on to the Division Championship!

It must be twenty years since the place was painted. But you won't be able to tell it when the job's done. And while you're working, the great taste of Coca-Cola keeps everybody happy.

It's the real thing. Coke.

were 5 feet off the ice!"

I'm not going to rattle off any statistics about the game because that's not important now. What is important is that Vermont skated with Harvard all the way. It wasn't different from the games with B.U. The main factor of that game was the power play. Harvard put in 3 goals with the man advantage. If some breaks went out way, well, who knows? It could have been the other way around.

But I'd like to talk about the guts and hustle that makes our hockey team what it is. They didn't win that game but they did win tremendous amounts of admiration from the fans and the Harvard team themselves because the Cats never let up during the 60 minutes of that game. Even when the score was hopeless they would not give up. That makes them champions in my book. People can talk about Dave Reece as much as they wish, but it is about time they noticed Steve Eckerson who is an excellent goalie in his own right. It's a tough feeling for any goalie to have 8 goals scored on him in a game but Steve didn't let up. Steve has never let up. When this season ends Vermont hockey fans are going to realize that Eckerson was one of the best goalies in college hockey.

Ted Castle is also underrated in many ways. Most people think of Castle as only a point scorer. Watch Teddy the next time you witness a hockey game at Gutterson Field House. Teddy is always digging for the puck in the corners and takes a great deal of bruising punishment. He got hurt in the first period of the Harvard game but came back to play, stitches and all.

Another strongly underrated player is Billy Koch. You won't find him among the high scorers but he'll be along the boards doing his thing which is getting the puck and flattening other players.

I first met Willie MacKinnon in December of last year. He spoke very honestly about his frustration in the first half of the season. Willie just couldn't put the puck in the net. Since Christmas vacation, he's put it all together and is looking fantastic on the ice. The third line deserves a lot more attention than it has been receiving. Chris Miller who scored two goals in the Harvard game, and Chris Hurley have been super. Hurley is always hitting somebody and that really psychs the team up. Miller plays perfect position and has a great shot while MacKinnon just fakes opposing players with those patented "MacKinnon moves." They played a hard crisp game against Harvard.

Whit Watts, Eli Tubbs, and Jack Clifford make up the fourth line. They don't play as much as the other three lines but always play good hustling hockey when they are on the ice.

The defense continues to win many games for us with their aggressiveness and great speed. It's a great thrill to watch Brad Cooke's eyes light up when he checks an opposing player. John Murphy has that uncanny ability to block a shot, even when he's sprawling on the ice. Ted Child may be small but he puts all of his 167 pounds behind that great low slapshot of his. Ken Yeates is following his brother's footsteps as an outstanding defenseman. Ken is only a freshman. Ted Curtis is the fifth man on the defense. He played in only 7 games last season but is putting in full time now. He's big and strong and plays very aggressive defense in the Brad Cooke mold.

Probably the most underrated player on the squad is goalie John Kiely. Kiely has only been in 6 games this year but must always be psyched and ready to play in the net at any time. Kiely will get his big chance next season and will definitely be outstanding. John is big and has great moves.

What can you say about Coach Cross? He's taken 22 hockey players and molded them into the best team in Vermont hockey history. He has all my respect as a man and coach. Any coach with his team and fans behind him as much as they are has to rate as one of the greatest coaches of all time.

The Harvard game is in the past. Now it is on to the Division Championship!

It must be twenty years since the place was painted. But you won't be able to tell it when the job's done. And while you're working, the great taste of Coca-Cola keeps everybody happy.

It's the real thing. Coke.

General Amnesty

By Jim Bradley
Gen. George Patton, Jr., son of the famous World War I general of the same name, spoke in Williams Science Hall last Friday on "The Challenge of Today's Army."
The most poignant moments occurred during the question and answer period. Patton, who served in Vietnam, had just finished an answer to a question on amnesty for deserters and draft dodgers, when he disapproved of, with a remark that according to some Swedish officials he had recently seen the US resist in that country were mess up Swedish society with such activities as drug-pushing, man in the audience then asked the general if he didn't think the "US had messed up Vietnamese society, killing people and destroying the land and leaving millions homeless, and did he think President Nixon should be given amnesty. Patton appeared angry and disgusted at the incredulous over the question and replied, "I have a comment on that." The questioner continued, "Do you have any conscience, Vietnam?" Patton answered, "No, I don't. The conscience I have concerns Vietnam is for the men who lived there. I have a conscience about what command mistakes I have made." The questioner said, "If you have a conscience about what has been done to the Vietnam people, I pity you, General." At this point, a man in the front row threatened the questioner, saying, "Why don't you just come back and shut up before we come back and make you." The air was tense and charged. But in the moment which follows such words, whether one man backs off or words become action, Patton had taken command of the situation, telling the man, "Now wait a minute, cool down. That's all right," said, indicating the antagonist, "I took an oath to support that sort of thing, good for people to air differences." The people in audience, many of whom applauded when the threat made, cheered Patton at the point.
In the main body of speech, Patton left little doubt that he is a fighting man, that he is also sentimental, the core. He was a commanding, physically fit, middle-aged man who spoke friends and comrades, "buddies," who prefaced swear words with "excuse me," who used the "widgit" as a jocular word who tried to demonstrate humane character of the

General Patton Jr. Opposes Amnesty To Draft Resisters

By Jim Bradley
Gen. George Patton, Jr., son of the famous World War II general of the same name, spoke in Williams Science Hall last Friday on "The Challenge of Today's Army."

The most poignant moments occurred during the question and answer period. Patton, who served in Vietnam, had just finished an answer to a question on amnesty for draft resisters and deserters, which he disapproves of, with the remark that according to some Swedish officials he had recently seen the US resisters in that country were messing up Swedish society with such activities as drug pushing. A man in the audience then asked the general if he didn't think the US had messed up Vietnamese society. Killing the people and destroying the land and leaving millions homeless, and did he think President Nixon should be given amnesty. Patton appeared angry and disgusted and incredulous over the question and replied, "I have no comment on that." The questioner continued, "Don't you have any conscience on Vietnam?" Patton answered, "No, I don't. The only conscience I have concerning Vietnam is for the men whose lives were lost because of command mistakes I might have made." The questioner said, "If you have no conscience about what has been done to the Vietnamese then I pity you, General." At this point, a man in the front row threatened the questioner, saying, "Why don't you just sit there and shut up before I come back and make you!" The air was tense and charged. But in the moment which follows such words, when either one man backs off or words become action, Patton had taken command of the situation, telling the man in front, "Now wait a minute, cool down. That's all right," he said, indicating the antagonistic questioner. Gesturing toward his stars and bars, he continued, "I took an oath to support that sort of thing. It's good for people to air their differences." The people in the audience, many of whom had applauded when the threat was made, cheered Patton at this point.

In the main body of the speech, Patton left little doubt that he is a fighting man and that he is also sentimental to the core. He was a tall, commanding, physically fit, cigar smoking, white haired, middle-aged man who spoke of friends and comrades as "buddies," who prefaced his sweet words with "excuse me, ladies," who used the word "subject" as a jocular insult, who tried to demonstrate the human character of the US soldier in Vietnam by saying "look at all the pets he's picked up there and how he helps children in the combat zones." He told an anecdote about a soldier who lost an arm in Nam but maintained his spirit and patriotism, almost getting choked up with pride at the memory. As he described the soldier as "just a good old country boy," his voice was sweet and thick and full of reverence, the words falling from his mouth like honey dripping from the sides of a piece of toast. He revealed feelings of admiration and respect for the American soldier, the average guy in the combat zone. Often falling back on clichés to express himself, he voiced such sentiments as, "It's pride that makes 'em fight, not pay." "The only dumb question is the one you don't ask," and

Trustees Okay UVM Application To Switch To Division One Hockey

by Dan Haslam
Five committees of the Board of Trustees, other than the Finance and Budget committee, which proposed hikes in tuition and room and board charges, elaborated on their activities to the 19 members of the trustees who attended the meeting Saturday morning.

The Student Activities Committee authorized the Athletics Department to apply to the E.C.A.C. for admission into Division I hockey participation from its present status in Division II.

The same committee recommended denial of Vermont residency for tuition purposes to six UVM students. The six are: Robert Weiland, Dean Douglas, Martin Tennant, Rose Friedman, James Glasser, and William Jenney. Mrs. Jean Tennant also appealed for in-state status and was successful while the others were not.

The Buildings and Grounds committee recommended that the University impose restrictions on further human development to the summit of Mt. Mansfield as well as the use of University lands on Mt. Mansfield. Lease holders of University land will be able to purchase their holdings with certain exceptions, according to the trustees. Oil and mineral rights will be maintained by UVM, and the following properties will not be sold off: Castleton ETV station, Pease Mountain in Charlotte, Ethan Allen Air Force Base, in the towns of Colchester and Essex, the Forestry Research Farm in Jericho, the James Marvin property in Morrisville, the summit of Mt. Mansfield in the towns of Stowe and Underhill, the Morgan Horse Farm in Weybridge, the Colchester Bog, and the Williamstown ETV station. In addition, all leased lands with educational value but are delinquent in payments will be retained by UVM, as will all holdings in Burlington and South Burlington.

An ad-hoc committee will investigate the "totally inadequate" facilities of the Wason Infirmary, as described by Dr. Robert Boardman. Boardman queried the Trustees on whether or not they wished to spend between $500,000 and $1 million dollars to replace medical facilities "which can be duplicated a quarter of a mile away." The committee will report to the Trustees at their March meeting.

In other actions, Lawrence Doolin of the Development committee announced the search for a successor to V.P. Walter Bruska will begin late in March or early in April with a job description being compiled by a committee recently appointed by President Andrews.

Gifts to the Alumni Fund stand at $167,000, a 24% increase in dollar total over last year at this time. The Parents Fund is now at $48,000, a substantial increase over last year's $35,000 figure. The Ira Allen Fund, a group of donors of $1,000 or more per year, has 67 members, up from 51 last year. A special category for donors who give more than the thousand dollar minimum is in the process of being created.

Out-Of-State Tuition Hike Approved; Room And Board Fee Increased For All

The University of Vermont's Board of Trustees approved a $150 tuition increase for out-of-state students and a $125 room and board increase for all students who will be living in residence halls next year.

The tuition a Vermont student currently pays is the only major assessment which will remain unaffected in light of increases approved by the Trustees on Saturday, February 17.

The Trustees tackled the question of a $125 room and board increase first and approved it after careful scrutiny. Two board members were adamantly opposed to an increase of $125, and cited the 90% level of occupancy in the dormitories as their basis for disapproval. Francis Peisch was "appalled" that 10% of University residences remain vacant and moved to amend the resolution to direct the Administration to require older dorms being "tagged" with the same costs of the newer dormitories. Paul Low of Burlington concurred with 100% occupancy in its living units. "Every nickel that we increase the cost of education to our young people... we are limiting the University," he added that he disagreed with Peisch's amendment, after which Dean Powers explained the 90% occupancy figure. Even with the freshman requirement for on-campus residency, dorms have held a "hair above 90%", based over a five year period. A further requirement to insure maximum occupancy could result in an overcrowded situation. It was President Andrews, however, who defended both the $125 increase and the 90% figure. A dorm occupancy of 90% would cover operating expenses, 92% would pay on bond indentures and for some repairs, 95% and Andrews, was an optimum but difficult to reach and to avoid the overcrowding which was experienced last fall when 800 more freshmen than were expected moved into University housing. He added, "If I can be permitted a political statement, I would urge this board to vote against this amendment." The amendment for an increase of only $100, was overwhelmingly defeated, and the original resolution to raise room and board charges was adopted.

The tuition increase delved into more detail and will not be limited to affecting only out-of-state students. In addition to the $150, out-of-state increase, any undergraduate student taking more than 18 credit hours will be charged for each credit hour over the 18 hours limit. For Vermonters, the charge will also be in effect for $40. per hour, whereas the non-resident rate is now set at $110. per hour. Andrews lauded this step, pointing to the figure of 1100 students who, last semester exceeded 18 credit hours. Andrews called it "giving away 20% of enrollment" not to charge students for courses they select over the 18 credit hour limit. Graduate students will be limited to 12 credit hours per semester, with similar charges imposed should they exceed this limit. Also, non-resident Evening Division costs will increase to $110. per credit hour which establishes a rate equal to Day Division courses. Andrews was not optimistic about the in-state tuition rate remaining at $950. per year. He emphasized that "as of the moment" it will not change, but the future is unpredictable. The $150. increase for non-resident students was incorporated into the budget which was sent to the Legislature, and providing that the Nixon Administration forwards federal funds for land grant institutions, the in-state tuition rate will remain at its present figure.

Senate Allocates Funds To Indochina

by Dan Haslam

The S.A. Senate passed a controversial measure Tuesday night which will allocate $500 of Student Association funds to the Committee Against the War for the restoration of the Bao Mai Hospital in Hanoi, North Vietnam.

The resolution barely succeeded with 35.65% of the senate voting in support of the bill and 32.33% opposing it. This final Senate consideration of $5.65 came one week after a parliamentary maneuver by several senators last week not to answer a quorum call, thus blocking further business by the Senate. It was expected that senators opposed to the resolution would gather forces and challenge the issue in terms of percentage strength this week. However, the 8 town senators and one dormitory representative who supported the bill gave it the needed majority. All other University living units, fraternities, and sororities which were present at the meeting voted against appropriating the $500. The bill commanded no discussion before the vote, and further action to be taken by any parties has not been disclosed. In other business, Dean Richard Powers elaborated on a report which he had furnished to S.A. senators concerning University health facilities. He offered three courses of action open to improving health care facilities at UVM, the first being the possibility of renting hospital space for student care from the DeGoesbriand, Unit of the MCHV. The Medical Center is under consideration for this, but Powers was unsure about costs or space availability since the hospital has presented neither cost figures nor a concrete offer. He disclosed the chances of a joint venture to be undertaken with the University Health Services, Inc., a community health service which has expressed an interest in working with UVM. Powers concentrated his attention on renovation of the present structure, Wheeler House, which is an historic site. He illustrated improvements with a model of the infirmary (continued on page ten)

New Winter Carnival Slated For March

by Daniel Haslam

The Winter Weekend, originally scheduled for February 2-4 to coincide with the NCAA ski meet, has been definitely rescheduled for the weekend of March 16. S.A. President Bill Sisco announced Monday.

The decision comes after weeks of speculation over the rescheduling of the activities which were cancelled due to a lack of snow.

Sisco was able to elaborate on some of the specific activities to be held during the Winter Festival and sponsored by the Student Association Concert and Speakers Bureau. A special ski package for UVM students is in the process of being arranged with one of several surrounding ski areas. Selection of the area will be based on the best rate available to students, as well as consideration for arrangements for transportation. A ski day is in the works for either March 17 or 18.

Winter activities will include broomball tournaments on two courts to be constructed on the campus green, as well as a cross-country ski trail similar to the one last year which was used in a demonstration by the Canadian Olympic Team. Cross-country ski competition will then take place on this perimeter course around the green. There will be a snowshoe obstacle course set, snow sculpting by anyone interested in Burlington, and to complement outdoor activities, a human dog sled race.

The President of Fraternity Forum is also a member of the S.A. Coordinating Committee under the S.A. constitution.

contracted to perform during the week, and a concert group is tentatively planned. Rounding off the week will be a masked costume ball utilizing all of Billings, complete with a band. The S.A. has already allocated $2500. to help defray costs for a smorgasbord and will be approached for more money to purchase materials which will be useful this year as well as in future festivities. During the week, the UVM Baroque Ensemble is scheduled for Monday and Tuesday, March 12-13, and the play "The Man Who Came to Dinner" will be produced in the Billings Ape. A renowned comedian has also been

Sisco is pleased that the Festival is finally being launched. He feels that this endeavor is being "planned much more professionally" with "something left over from this Carnival besides bills." He urged all students to volunteer to help in the construction of the broomball courts and ski track, as well as to get involved in the spirit of the Festival. Greek interest in the Festival has been keen, and Sisco hopes it will continue. "All in all," he concluded, "it's time for a break."

Tax Rebate Project For Elderly

During the past week a series of meetings has been taking place under the direction of Dale Walker of the Vermont Department of Social Welfare which have been a part of a new project of the Office on Aging called the Elderly Tax Rebate Project. The meetings have been to "train and assist volunteers in learning how to fill out sales tax rebate forms."

Eligibility for the Sales Tax rebate is based on income for the past year and the person must also be over 65 years of age.

The UVM volunteers will be concentrating on Ward 2. It is hoped that other volunteers from the community will be also asked to help with some of the other wards of Burlington.

Other students are on "call" to help with particular problems with the form. The call numbers are 864-0251 which is Mr. Walker's Office and 656-2062 which is the Office initiating the project.

It is hoped that an Office can eventually be set up to deal with the various problems of the elderly. This phase of the project lasts until the last day of filing which is April 15th. Training is at the volunteers' convenience and it is stressed that many more volunteers are needed.

Mr. Walker, the Coordinator of Service for the Elderly of the Resource Unit of the Department of Social Welfare said that it is particularly valuable for young people to help the elderly of the community. This is especially true in a time when it is the "in" thing to be young both commercially and socially.

Two major resources for the program have been the Office of Volunteer Programs and H. and R. Block who have donated expertise when questions have arisen. The IRS have also been instrumental in initiating the project.

Job Opportunity For Liberal Arts Graduates

June liberal arts graduates can earn a salary while learning to be early childhood or elementary school teachers beginning this September at New York University's School of Education. The apprentice teacher curriculum, a joint effort with New York City's Board of Education, leads to a master's degree in education.

A small group will be selected to start course work this summer and in September will be assistants in inner-city schools. They will be paid $2,500 per hour for approximately twenty hours weekly. At the same time, they will take 8 to 10 points of academic work at N.Y.U. each semester. Further study follows in the summer of 1974.

In September 1974, the students will become regular teachers. The total program, designated as 1255X-AT, includes 40 credit hours of academic and field work. Further information can be obtained from Associate Professor Florence B. Lewis, New York University, School of Education, Division of Early Childhood and Elementary Education, 300 South Building, Washington Square, New York, N.Y. 10003 Telephone 598-2227.

Benefit Concert To Be Presented

The University Choral Union, under the direction of Dr. James G. Chapman, associate professor of music, University of Vermont, will perform a benefit concert Sunday, February 25, at 8:00 p.m. at the First Congregational Church, 38 S. Winooski Street, Burlington.

The program is sponsored by the Burlington Branch of the American Association of University Women. Formed in 1968 by Professor Chapman, the Choral Union is composed of more than 50 students, townspeople, and university faculty and staff. Its purpose is to perform choral literature from as wide a spectrum as possible. Selections for the concert include motets from the works by William Byrd, Johann Sebastian Bach, and Johannes Brahms. The group will also feature excerpts from Frederick Pike's Sea Chorus, chorographic choruses from Cantata by Carl Orff and Cantata by Francis Poulenc.

Co-chairmen for the benefit are Mrs. Ferdinand Sichel and Mrs. Ernest Stark. Proceeds will go to the AAUW fellowship fund. Tickets are available at the door. Admission for students, $1.00.

Photographs are needed by Image Eye for use in the student photography publication. Photographs should be glossy for reproduction purposes and enclosed in an addressed manila envelope. Photographs in a series or better still designed for a specific layout or format are preferred. Single images and assortments of images are also accepted. Pat Novotny is a candidate for Alderman Ward 6 on the Democratic Independent Taxpayers list. She is a businesswoman currently employed at Abernethy's, has served as Ward secretary and worked extensively with the League of Women Voters. She is interested in local government and noting a widening between the people and their representatives.

She is now seeking the aldermanic post with a pledge to reinstate responsiveness in government. Candidates For Alderman Pledge To Eliminate Alienation

by Deborah P. Kelly

Pat Novotny is the candidate for Alderman in Ward 6 on the Democratic and Independent Taxpayers ticket. She is a businesswoman currently employed at Abernathy's, has served as a Ward secretary and worked extensively with the League of Women Voters. Being interested in local government and noting a widening gap between the people and their representatives, she now seeks to eliminate this alienation by seeking the aldermatic position with a pledge, to reinstate responsiveness in government.

Cynic: The mayoral election has received much coverage at the University with the presumption that the aldermatic election is not as important. Could you explain the alderman's relationship to the mayor and the function of the alderman with regards to its working with the city?

Novotny: The Board of Aldermen is the main governing body of the City of Burlington. With two members from each ward sitting on the board, each alderman casts one vote on virtually every matter of legislative and financial importance. The mayor may veto the decisions of the aldermatic board but with a 2/3 plurality the board may override the mayor's veto. Hence the alderman and the mayor must work cooperatively to approve all the heads of commissions, budgets, etc.

Cynic: Many students at the University feel impotent in local government consequently their interest in local issues is dormant. What is the relevance of the aldermatic election to students and how do you feel about their becoming a viable force in local government?

Novotny: The student is a citizen of Burlington for the duration of his study here. He has all the rights of any resident voter and can as a collective force elect an alderman every year. With Redstone Campus, Harris-Mills, MAT, and Coolidge dorms, students are a great enough number to run their own candidate and if properly organized, get him elected. This would give them a direct and very effective voice in local government. I think participation is important even though students are going to move—they are residents right now and their student participation has context towards other cities and can act as an example. Additionally, students are used to forms of government that exist in Universities and tend to be rather superficial as the power ultimately lies with the President and the Board of Trustees. The Board of Aldermen is the real thing where laws are really made.

Cynic: As a city representative with many facets of red-tape to deal with, do you think you would have the time and the interest to present student views?

Novotny: One of the main issues in my campaign is responsiveness. I would listen to all opinions in my ward. My husband is a university professor and he is of course concerned with students. We don't look at them as second-class citizens. I don't believe they should be differentiated—the student is as much of a citizen as anybody else. Students represent an intelligent segment of the population and it's quite possible that they'd have a really good input and ideas for our city.

I am aware that there is a tendency for students to feel that they are being used by the community as a economic resource. An example of this is off-campus housing. I know there is a lot of sub-standard housing that is very expensive and one way to upgrade all this is through local ordinances which would have to pass through the board of Aldermen. There may be laws on the books already to protect students and other groups from this but what is needed is more vigorous support from the board. If there was organization a good alderman would be able to respond effectively to this problem.

Cynic: What can the board of aldermen do in relationship to the University problems such as the non-existence of on-campus parking?

Novotny: The Master Plan speaks directly to the University and its policies. The new zoning ordinances that are before the Board on work study right now has a requirement that before the issuance of any building permit for the University a parking plan must be approved by the Planning Commission and the Board. Hence the parking situation ultimately resides with the Aldermatic Board as there is a separate section that before the University may build it must provide adequate parking, show that and prove it to the town.

Cynic: Can the board of alderman do something to prevent the rise of industrialism and pollution among Burlington's lakefront and parks?

Novotny: Yes. Again in the Master Plan there is one policy item of intent that protects the physical and mental health of the citizens by reducing noise, water and air pollution. In the zoning performance standards these demands must be met.

Zoning ordinances are the teeth to the Master Plan which has the goal of preventing pollution. Industrialization is confined in the Master Plan so that there are specific zones reserved for industry so that it can not spread to other areas. The aldermen decide on Zoning regulations and the zoning regulations decide how the Master Plan will be implemented. Ultimately the vote of the Aldermatic Board can either emasculate or enforce this city plan.

Cynic: In conclusion, let me ask you why you decided to run?

Novotny: Being interested in government for some time I felt that there was a real need for somebody to listen to the opinions of the residents and to bring the issues directly to the people. The fact that many townspeople and most students do not know what or who their alderman is proves that this has been ineffective. Again speaking to the students, I think it is very exciting to have the ability to voice a direct vote. There is a very short distance between a student and an alderman. His vote in the coming election is the strongest vote he has in any government. I hope that the students recognize this power and responsibility and use it!

One World Crusade Visits UVM

by Wendy Nelson

A member of the One World Crusade, which recently occupied a table at Billings Center, stated, "We're mushrooming now—in five years, everyone will know us." This is the same crusade which visited UVM about 12 weeks ago and which continues to return here about every 10 weeks. Students may be familiar with One World through their candle-sales in the dorm if they have not seen representatives at Billings.

The purpose of One World at UVM was to present to students the Unification Principles upon which the religion is based. Founded in 1954 in South Korea, the One World religion is the result of the revelation of these principles to its spiritual leader, Sun Myung Moon. At UVM, Gary Dean, a worker for One World, said that they had had a "good response" from the students here and that many persons had stopped at their table to talk.

One World is a program of the Unification Church, based locally at 38 Hickok Place, Burlington. The Church is 100 nation-wide at present and has as its goal "the unification of all religions, all races, trying to form a common bond for understanding among all men."

The church has divided the United States into 10 sectors, and bus teams of 10 members each tour their particular sector throughout the year. During the day, some members sell candles to pay for their stay in the city and to finance the organization, and some promote the lecture series given daily to present the ideology of the church. Anni Blumager, one of the Austrian exchange members of One World, said she was looking forward to the next visit.

R.A.'s Are In The Process

Of Being Chosen

The UVM Housing Office has begun a search for qualified resident assistants to serve in residents halls, starting next semester.

The deadline for applications was February 9, however, late applications will be accepted until the first screening of candidates early in March. To be qualified as a resident assistant, a student must be in good standing as a sophomore, junior, or senior. A minimal accumulative Grade Point Average of 2.2 is necessary, with a 2.5 average and above preferred. A record of extra class activities and an interest and commitment to educational growth through dormitory life are recommended for applicants.

The selection process, according to Dr. Keith Miser, has been revised from what it was a year ago. This year the process was reviewed by four students and three resident advisors and centered around the role the R.A. plays. Dr. Miser feels the R.A. has a different role for the different class levels within the living unit. For freshmen, Miser commented, the R.A. is "an information person," a person to help the new student adapt, and someone to "turn high school seniors into college sophomores during their year of freshman transition." For the upperclassmen, the R.A.'s counseling function is less important. Rather, there is a need for a person, who is knowledgeable in services which the University provides, as well as a referral person to assist with career and lifestyle opportunities. In an evaluation filled out by students last semester concerning resident assistants and resident advisors, upperclassmen expressed the desire to get to know the other people on their floor. Dr. Miser added that the R.A. must act as a "catalyst to pull the floor together."

Two introductory sessions were held on January 29 and February 1 to acquaint resident assistant applicants with the demands of the position and to provide an opportunity for questions and small group discussions. In addition to at least one outside recommendation from an employer or a professor, an applicant must present three evaluations from students on his same floor, as well as two evaluations his resident advisor will distribute. Following this, three interviews will be held, one with a resident assistant of the applicant's choice, one with an assigned resident advisor, and the final interview with a member of the Housing Office staff. A screening period between March 1 and 11 will eliminate weak candidates, although the majority of applicants will continue through to the last interview. By April 13, letters of appointment will be sent to the newly chosen resident assistants, a week after which notification of acceptance/rejection should be received by the Housing Office. An April 28 Spring Workshop is planned for all new and returning residence hall staff.

The program is sponsored by the Burlington Branch of the American Association of University Women. Formed in 1965 by Professor Chapman, the Choral Union is composed of more than 50 students, townspeople, and university faculty and staff. Its purpose is to perform choral literature from as wide a spectrum as possible. Selections for the concert include motets from the works by William Byrd, Johann Sebastian Bach, and Johannes Brahms. The group will also feature excerpts from Frederick Pike's Sea Chorus, chorographic choruses from Carulli's Carmina by Carl Orff and Carmina by Francis Poulenc.

Co-chairmen for the benefit are Mrs. Ferdinand Sichel and Mrs. Ernest Stark. Proceeds will go to the AAUW fellowship fund. Tickets are available at the door. Admission for students, $1.00.

Photographs are needed by Image Eye for use in the student photography publication. Photographs should be glossy for reproduction purposes and enclosed in an addressed manila envelope. Photographs in a series or better still designed for a specific layout or format are preferred. Single images and assortments of images are also accepted. VPIRG Endorses Land Capability And Development Plan

by Jeff Ewen

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group has endorsed the controversial Land Capability and Development Plan that is now before the Vermont Legislature. Earlier this week VPIRG issued a clear analysis of the complicated document along with a summary of its major points. The purpose of the VPIRG analysis is to clarify the highly complex plan and to correct some of the misconceptions that have arisen about it.

Last December the State Planning Office released its original plan in a ten page newspaper edition that was difficult to both read and understand. After eight public hearings around the state, the plan was completely rewritten into a shorter, clearer form.

The first half of the revised document deals with policies and purposes of the plan, and these portions have no legal effect. Only the last half of the plan, with which the VPIRG analysis deals, establishes legally binding criteria which new development must meet. VPIRG stressed three main points in the plan, the first of these being that the proposed Land Capability and Development Plan serves to make Act 250, Vermont's existing statute on land use, much clearer. According to the VPIRG release, the new plan establishes specific criteria for certain kinds of development, an area in which Act 250 is very vague. In VPIRG's opinion, "this spelling out does not make the law stronger or weaker; it simply makes it easier to use."

The second major point noted by VPIRG is that the proposed plan makes it difficult to develop lands in Vermont in such a way as to destroy or seriously damage their value as natural resources. The plan also allows landowners to develop their land if it is the only way they can realize a reasonable return on its value.

The third major advantage of the plan, according to VPIRG, is that it allows towns to control development within their borders and to avoid the damaging effects of rapid land development. As a town's population increases, the expenditures necessary for essential services, such as schools, highways, water supplies, and the like, also grow, usually much faster than the actual increase in population itself. Such a rapid growth in expenditures, accompanied by tax increases, which fall most heavily on those landowners with low incomes. The zoning provisions of Act 250 and the Land Capability and Development Plan, in addition to local zoning ordinances, give Vermont towns a tool for protecting themselves against unplanned and unwanted development.

One popular misconception about the plan is that it will prevent a landowner from building a house for himself or from selling a few pieces of his land. According to VPIRG, this is simply not true. Act 250 does not apply to the first nine subdivisions of housing structures, nor does it apply to agricultural or forestry structures. Nor will the plan affect the style, color, size or location of any individual home, nor will it usurp the powers of local government.

In VPIRG's opinion the plan merely gives local and state government an opportunity for protecting the state's environment. The VPIRG analysis also noted that, while Vermont's economy relies heavily on tourism, continued unrestrained development will destroy the resources that attract tourists to the state in the first place.

The Rising Cost Of An Education

With the announcement this week that non-resident tuition will be raised next year to the tune of $150.00, one cannot help but wonder where all the money is going. It seems that it is altogether possible that this university may have too much "dead weight" floating around in administrative positions and non-teaching professors. It is also possible that a school that tries to be everything to everybody and to extend itself well beyond the bounds of the current student body just can't work in a state that seems to have few tax dollars available to the expansion of a major institution for higher education. Indeed, it is hard to visualize where all the money is going. There are great arguments against all the cost-increases at UVM: "After all," one might say, "who needs it?"

This may very well be the heart of the entire problem. As hard as it is to be slapped with a tuition increase at a time when the cost of everything else is rising, it becomes increasingly difficult to find the whims and demands of everyone who has an axe to grind.

First of all it is hard to believe that SAGA has been able to operate at all without raising its fee. The way food prices have been skyrocketing. Secondly if the university is going to continue to expand both the quality and quantity of such items as academic computing centers, modernized library facilities, and revolutionized teaching aides, somebody has to foot the bill. Should it always be the already overtaxed Vermonter? Thirdly, who is going to pay for the physical expansion of the university? The administration is feeling continued pressure for improvements to the hockey rink, more dorms, more classrooms, a better health center, and a new student center. All of this costs money and perhaps the ones to pay are those who are going to reap the benefits.

Not to be mistaken, the best thing that ever happened to UVM was to improve its facilities and services and the worst thing that could happen is to raise the price any more. After all, the students are the customers here.

It appears, however, that a compromise is in order. If the university is going to continue to bolster its facilities and services, then those who are demanding it all are going to have to help out with the costs. But let's not forget that the administration could very well "tighten the ship" a bit and not really forfeit any quality.

Student's Wishes Violated

by Barbara Frankel

Last December, the students of this university passed, in a referendum, a resolution which stated that the Student Association should not consider motions and/or resolutions concerning non-university affairs. That seemed satisfactory, and I, at least, considered the matter finished.

Now, however, the question has come before our Student Association once again. The Committee Against the War has again requested an allocation of S.A. funds - this time, the sum of $500 to help rebuild Bao Mai Hospital in Hanoi, North Vietnam. This, I will not deny, is certainly a worthy cause. Medical Aid to Indochina should be a necessary cause of any concerned citizen. That is not the problem; the problem, in this university, is whether or not students' funds, against the wishes of a majority of the Student body, shall go towards non-university affairs.

This problem may continue to be debated again and again unless the Student Association and the Student Body take a firm stand. The Committee Against the War (a rather outdated title at this time) could solicit funds from UVM students in any manner they wished to, such as drives, door-to-door solicitations, etc. They have no right, however, in view of the December referendum, to petition the Student Association for funds. The students have voted that our S.A. fees will go to University activities. It is time the Committee Against the War realized this.

Open Letter To President Andrews; University Reorganization StressedOpen Letter to the President of the University of Vermont
Re: The Collegiate Reorganization
Dr. Andrews

Just about a year ago the 1972 Report to the Legislature was delivered. There are some key points in the Report that pertain very clearly to the question of reorganization. They are of major importance for anyone who is trying to understand the vast and complicated mission of the University of Vermont. While truths, values, and knowledge itself are in continual flux the four basic missions that were presented in the Report must be of contemporary value. The Missions are as follows:

1. We must provide basic education in the arts and sciences and in so doing move in the direction not simply of knowledge accumulation but of the development of intellectual skills, of problem-solving, of the ability to think critically and act effectively.

2. In an age of accelerating technologies we must provide professional education not simply to train but to develop "core" discipline concepts to prepare students to deal with new challenges in their professions after graduation. We must do this for Vermonters on and off the campus in agricultural and environmental and health sciences, in education and home economics and forestry, to name perhaps the most obvious. If we cannot do it in other important fields we must arrange for students to get what they need elsewhere in the State or in the area.

3. We must pursue both basic and applied research which is related to our educational mission.

4. We must provide technical, demonstration, information, and social services for Vermont that are related to our educational missions. We must provide leadership in the identification and solution of environmental and social and scientific problems in our communities and State.

With these being the missions of the University of Vermont it is clear that the University shall remain a University and a Vermont University.

Increasing costs, major cuts in President Nixon's budget for Higher Education, and a squeeze on funds at the state level means that only one thing can and should happen. With all the "fat" already out of the University budget there must be reorganization. This is logical from a financial point of view and from an educational point of view. We all should hope that the University constantly changes to reflect the changes in the basic missions of higher education at the University.

Reorganization should occur at all levels in higher education to reflect these same changes in mission. The problem all too often is that only some names are changed and there are some minor changes in courses or positions.

I believe that a major reorganization of higher education is a must for the State of Vermont. The question of overlap of programs between state colleges must be raised at the same time the question of reorganization is discussed at one of these colleges. Many programs at the various state institutions should be eliminated and many modified. There presently is no statewide planning for higher education.

President Andrews is to be congratulated in his approach to the problem. There are some problems with the report of the UVM reorganizing committee. It should be modified accordingly, and the second, third, and fourth stages should be initiated. These latter stages should be aimed at the entire State of Vermont and they should include all the various constituencies involved in the decision-making process.

Cooperation between any groups that are in competition for funds is extremely difficult but we must have it in the name of the missions of Higher Education.

Women's Center Completely Misrepresented In Cynic Article

To the editor:

I felt compelled to answer Deborah Caldwell's article on the Women's Center in a recent Cynic. It is rare that one finds so much misinformation and bias outside of the Free Press. She says that officers, dues, meetings, projects and goals are non-existent. Meeting to set goals and plan projects have been regularly held at 7:30 Monday nights, Wednesday at that same time, women are getting together to play music. The Center is supported by women who are willing and able to make pledges. Dues are not required as it is not part of our policy to exclude any woman for lack of funds. Having no officers is consistent with the goals of women's liberation to abolish meaningless and frequently intimidating hierarchies.

The Center is just beginning to happen. The women who began it did not want to plan too much until we could assess the needs of the women who would relate to it. Now discussion and rap groups and skill-sharing classes are in the planning stages.

We are not so naive as to think a few women with variously feminist and movement politics can change the lifestyle of women in Burlington. As women who have been working to change our own lifestyles, we are aware of the difficulty and cost of that struggle and the different ramifications it has for each woman. We also know the value of solidarity and the importance of supporting our sisters in their individual and collective struggle. This seems to be the consensus of what the Center is about: a place to gain and give support. The specific manifestations of that central theme will change as we change and grow. One thing the Center can be now is a catalyst for things to happen as well as the space for them to happen. We will be working to make it a resource place for women.

Deborah Caldwell walked into our first social event, a housewarming party, and based (perhaps I should say biased) her picture of the center on that and her lack of knowledge of the women's movement. Contrary to her statement that they are barred, policy about men has not been made yet. We spoke of getting together to do that but it has not been a priority issue since no men are beating at the doors to get in. I cannot speak for other women on this point but I would welcome the chance to relate change and grow. One thing the Center can be now is a novelty of that idea appeals to me.

Questions Raised On Advantages Of Hockey Move

To the editor:

B. Smith's fine letter in the Cynic outlining the pseudo-"advantages" of a move to Division I hockey is only the top of the iceberg of important questions: 1) with our tuitions and/or other charges going up annually, how much longer can we be expected to support varsity teams to the levels of living to which they have become accustomed? 2) even though we pay almost the highest tuition for a state institution in the country, why do we, the general student body, get so little use of athletic facilities? (Answer: because varsity teams have exclusive use of them during the best hours.) 3) why do we have to be the last university in the country to drop the medieval P.E. requirement? 4) why is it that the swimming team can have outstanding records on a comparatively small budget while football and basketball put the university on the verge of bankruptcy and still cannot win? because they need more money? 5) should we go Div. I hockey to even go Div. I hockey to compensate for the fact that we are going to hell scholastically?

Finally, it is interesting to hear that after Gov. Salmori recommended a budget that will make education at UVM more scarce than ever, the big sport is reportedly favoring Div. I hockey. May our elders come to their senses and reorder their juvenile priorities!

UVM Hires Too Many Administrators

To the Editor:

The recent publication (This Week, February 5) of data on Affirmative Action at UVM, showing a degree of progress made in the employment of women and members of minority groups, unfortunately also provides another aspect of the University's development:

According to these figures, the total number of administrative personnel increased from 142 in 1969-70 to 244 in 1972-73—an increase of 71.8% in three years! In the same period the total number of faculty personnel increased from 559 to 603, an increase of 7.8%. During the period from October 1971 to December 1972, the number of people in Class P (Professional personnel, not including secretaries, etc.) administrative positions increased by 37, the number of faculty by 30.

Thus, UVM has lately actually hired more administrators than teachers, and over a three year period the rate of growth in the number of administrators has been nearly 10 times as great as the expansion of the faculty (or the student body). This in a period of such financial stringency that we are undertaken.

considering the termination of academic programs and of new tuition increases which threaten to make UVM inaccessible to the people of Vermont, and an exclusive preserve of the super-rich!

Our university appears to be suffering from an attack of Parkinson's disease of such the expansion of the faculty virulence that fatal consequences may ensue if period of such financial drastic surgery is not stringency that we are undertaken.

A Different Opinion :

Legalized Abortion Is Murder

by Tom E. McCormick

Last week, the Cynic carried an editorial on the Supreme Court's decision to legalize abortion. The editor perceived the implications of the ruling. It has created a "moral upheaval" in the nation, which is of course true. The writer also recognized the crux of the abortion question. "Should she (the mother) destroy something (sic) she has created or should she, perhaps, destroy her own plans, expectations, and future life by bringing an unwanted child into the world?" It's a choice, then, between a mother's lifestyle and her child's life.

The Supreme Court fuzzed up the dilemma by denying the humanity of the fetus. But that's been an historical rationale for oppression. If the oppressed aren't human, then one is not engaging in oppression.

The Declaration of Independence asserted the universal rights to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." But in 1857 the Court ruled that Dred Scott had no right to liberty because he wasn't a citizen. In short, he wasn't a human being. So slaveowners could go right ahead and continue to exploit other men.

Hitler used the same ploy. The Germans needed scapegoats for the debacle of World War I, so they turned their fury onto the Jewish bankers. When Hitler's invective slid into practice, the action couldn't resist because it believed that the Jews weren't human beings. And 6,000,000 Jews were exterminated.

The United States is now creeping into the same sort of callousness. There has been an attempt to strip the reality of its meaning. Fetus is a sterile, scientific term which hides the horror of abortion. To remove a fetus is quite different, emotionally speaking, than; say, to abort an unborn child. And despite the semantic sterilities, everyone knows that another life is involved in abortion.

The editor advised that abortion is a "serious step and should not be taken before careful consideration by both the woman and her doctor." What makes it serious? The operation isn't all that hazardous. A woman can whip right through the Health Center in a day. Hell, I spent three days in the hospital when I had my tonsils removed. Obviously abortion involves the life of another human being.

The editorial concluded that abortion "is an alternative to bringing a child who is unplanned and unwanted into a world already far too crowded and hungry." Genocide is an alternative to starvation in Bangle Deah, too, but that doesn't make it right, not even if the Supreme Court says it's OK.

Abortion is a present-day attempt to assert the supremacy of one person over another. It took the nation and the world many years of toil and heartache to discard that illusion. Let's not fall for it again.

Alternatives To Abortion

To the editor:

In response to the CYNIC's editorial on abortion:

1. Years ago a classmate confided that he was illegitimate. He told me of some of the slurs and some of the pain. But now he has a happy marriage, his own business, and several fine children, one of whom is in college.

2. A couple from my own modest neighborhood, moved to a large city and became very successful financially and very popular. They had everything except children so they adopted two. These children now are at the very center of their parents' existence, very much wanted.

Both stories are true in every detail. To me they say that life's meaning unfolds over a period of time.

The Bible Rewritten

To the Editor:

Isn't it about time someone rewrote the Bible so that our younger generation could enjoy reading it too? For example, in the story of Adam and Eve it might conclude as follows:

"When Eve realized what the serpent had caused she became infuriated. She rammed that snake right up Adam's ass and pushed the apple core in afterwards. Adam roared like a mighty lion . . ."

"Then when the whale spit Jonah up on the beach, Jonah muttered with awe, 'Jesus Christ! My wife is never gonna believe this fish story . . . etc. etc.'"

I think our younger generation would read this bible religiously.

Once upon a time in the land of Billings, there dwelt a king. He was a petty king, to be sure, for it was a petty kingdom over which he ruled.

His vassals were errant in their ways and it vexed the king greatly. The king, (we shall call him deBill) had a budget on which to run his kingdom. He thought it right to spend money on a new castle and on sporting events while denying the wishes and welfare of his vassals and subjects.

His vassals began to band together and confront him at their weekly council meetings. deBill became so incensed that he began spreading lies about his vassals, saying that it was they who were not concerned with the welfare of the kingdom. (The chronicle of past meetings clearly showed that it was his "errant" vassals who had proposed almost all legislation dealing with the welfare of the kingdom and its subjects.)

Distorting the facts did not seem to bother deBill though, for he wrote his slanderous version in the weekly kingdom news.

King deBill, sensing that everything was not alright, rode off to consult his superior and idyl, Emperor Richard. "Emperor, what should I do, my kingdom is stirring with discontent," Richard thought for a moment and said "You could put your friends on the Supreme Council, as I have done," deBill answered "but Richard I don't have any friends or a Supreme Council, in fact I have nothing supreme at all." "I see," said Richard, "then you will have to try a royal decree that states that you may overrule your vassals at will, follow my example."

With this advice, deBill rode back to his not so tranquil northern kingdom.

With amazement, neighboring kingdoms watched the despotic deBill try to gain absolute power over his vassals and subjects. He was a model of cunning and deceit. How long would it be until the people of Billingsland united and cut from among them this cancerous growth that threatened to destroy them?

Third Annual Cynic Photography Contest

The CYNIC announces the "Third Annual CYNIC Photography Contest." The rules are as follows:

1. The contest is open to all students of the University of Vermont who are amateurs. (Amateurs will be considered those people who do not support themselves by taking pictures.)
2. The pictures will be divided into the three following categories: faces, landscaping, and other subjects. The category of other subjects will include any picture not included in the categories of faces and landscaping.
3. All photographs will be black and white and will be approximately 8 x 10 inches. There is no limit to the number of photographs that each photographer may submit.
4. The picture submitted will be the property of the VERMONT CYNIC, which will have the consent of the photographer to publish them in the newspaper.
5. The VERMONT CYNIC has the right to request the photographer to submit a subject release form signed by those people who may appear in the photograph.
6. The pictures may have been taken at any time, past or present.
7. Pictures entered in the Third Annual CYNIC Photography Contest could not have been entered in any other photography contest sponsored by the CYNIC.
8. Photographs will be judged on print quality and composition by a board of judges.
9. The board of judges will consist of Edward Bobbins of Student Photography Service, Tito, of the University Photo Service, and Bob Recupero, of ARIEL. The judges will be ineligible to enter the contest.
10. All photographs should be placed in the CYNIC office or the SA desk.
11. The photographer's name, address, and telephone number should be lightly printed in pencil on the back of each photograph submitted, along with a title, if any.
12. Deadline for entries will be March 1, 1973.
13. One winner will be chosen from each category and the winners will be announced in the March 22 issue of the CYNIC.
14. The winner in each category will receive $25.00.
15. All questions should be referred directly to the CYNIC office.

The Real Life Versus The Unreal Life

by Zach Ramsey

Some of us face life as it confronts us daily. Some of us face life, dodging its realities, to go into a fake world, so-to-speak. But who is to say whose life is real or whose life isn't? Real life vs. Unreal Life. Think about it...

When I think of real life I see people as they really are, because all life is, in some aspect, is relationships to other people. I'll never forget when a professor said to me that "Life" is the "Dying" process. Death is inevitable. But while living it people seem to fall away from real life into a life unreal. This sounds repetitious, so let's look at examples. Maybe through examples one may conclude their own truths on the topic; for the author only knows through example.

To the bigot unreal life is seeing the one he hates get the best out of life. While real life is being ignorant to the fact, that he hates.

To the junkie unreal life, is not being high, not being able to nod, not having his fix. His real life is really just rolling away as he transfuses the "life" he knows into his veins.

To the pusher unreal life is not seeing anyone getting high on his merchandise. The real life is making a living, destroying life. And this real life to him, for he is only making a living.

To the pimp, an unreal life is working for a living. The real life being, having somebody working for him. Utilizing their mind and body for his own personal benefits. Usually putting his women on the streets turning tricks.

To the cop on the beat, an unreal life is not having crime at all, not carrying a gun, and not having to enforce laws. But the real life being a rough and rugged, and sometimes looked down upon, as the "pig." The real life being, living in fear of their life, because they have to "protect" his fellow man from other men. The real life being, the man everyone suppose to look up to, because...

To the common everyday worker, the unreal life, may be having and getting everything he wants. The real life is a relentless pursuit of the unreal life.

To the student an unreal life might be education, not in an accredited institution, but among people themselves, that is, using the communities as a direct educational facility. But yet the real life for the student are the indoctrinated, and sophisticated educational facilities for which there is no escape, until your mind permits you to. And then your labelled a dropout...

For a minority student on a predominantly white campus, unreal life is an understanding and realization of cultural and social differences that make us unique, with unique problems. But real life being, an often, polarization from one another, not really enjoying the "college experience."

To the dreamer, who distorts real life and unreal life into one, how does he live? I guess he is merely affected by the two as they lead him to his destiny.

But who is to say that two in love are also dreamers. For there are those who are truly in love, but yet know that they both lead real and unreal lives together. They do things together for love is another aspect of life, that make people become dreamers.

Being black helps me to understand and know my unreal life. It is a life, where I can truly say that I'm free from people and their "bang-ups." As for real life and the level of reality the blackman lives it is hard to say. I can't speak for everyone else, only myself. But generally, it is definitely real, as he goes through changes, among humanity, seeking and searching for freedom.

How about the white man? What's real or unreal to him? I don't know, for I am not white; then what about all men. Aren't all the latter mentioned above and on this page, aren't they all people, human beings? Yes they are, for as it stands, they all live real and unreal lives. Compare them and others, what do you have? You have a mass of confusion that is called life...real or unreal?...That is the question.....

Dogs Are Cleaner Than Humans

by Joan Westcott

Are dogs to be banned from the Billings Center Den? The Administration of this University says yes, but you, the students, are the University; what do you say?

There are of course the many arguments against this, pointing out the health hazards and compliance with the town and city ordinances, but many of these tend to be weak. For example, how about in your own or your parents home? Is the poor animal allowed out-of-doors just before every meal? And does he have to eat in a place separate from your living quarters? Didn't I hear somewhere that a dog's mouth is the cleanest of any animal's - including humans?

Then there's the vital consideration of the natural mistake. Perhaps this says something about how the needs of others are very easily overlooked. I've also seen worse messes left by students and/or others that would, and do turn my stomach equally as quickly. Perhaps the University should take that into consideration when they issue their next banning decree!

Perhaps the strongest argument the people against dogs in the Den have is the city and town ordinances. Most ordinances are said to be for the peoples' own good, but this writer doesn't see how the creation of an artificial situation, like the banning of dogs from public buildings, is going to benefit the students or the faculty and staff of the University of Vermont.

By the way I'm extremely scared of dogs.

Son Of Patton Speaks

To: The Editor
Re: General Patton's Address to the ROTC

Last Friday, about three o'clock, I crossed over to the Den to buy some Necoco Wafers (the only Consumable food at the Time) only to discover that Billings was dark and shut. I quickly checked my Calendar - Ambrose through Valentine - but was unable to find one: Good Reason to close the palace. A soldier, complete with pointed silver helmets "flashing like silver teeth in the sun," mace-guns newly mailed from the Pentagon, banner and bayonet, blocked Our Way. It did, however, graciously agree to cast some Light on my Confusion.

It appeared that the Son of Patton was granting audience to Second - Lieutenants, assorted clerks, bankers, computer - programmers (and their dates); a throng of motionless people lifted high above Williams' Hall. So, I gathered my spikes and mallet, brushed off the splinters, and headed for the Service.

Man Oh Man. I just arrived in Time! Weaving through the multitude, bursting through the doorblock, I caught a dark glimpse of the Silver Servant, gun in hand, sparkling on the dais, as he came crashing down on the withered skull of LTC Haploski. A big, big smile for the camera. War whoop and yell. Hot Damn! Vietnam! With cadets merrily weaving in and out - uh, uh - dancing around the elms, sprinkling lilies and Frankincense, spasmodically keeping tune to the grunts and groans of the Good General, I whipped off my clothes. Where was it? Yes. Digging deep, deep down in my pocket for the penny bubble-gum machine pen-knife that I just found in a ball of lint behind the toilet, I slit my eye, and reaching in with my free hand, popped out a nice, soft section of grey matter, wringing it like a dishwater sponge on the ooze spreading over the seats of the auditorium. Flames everywhere. We roasted and toasted and feasted on flesh: sucking, rubbing, humping to Barry Sadler - our aghs harmoniously floated through the hall, echoing oh so sweetly. To Dream. To Dream. General Patton, we love you. We love you.

General W.T. Sherman

We wish to apologize for the mistake in the word General. It won't happen again.

General Opposes Amnesty

"There are no practice games in life", his concluding remark.

Patton, who was primarily addressing the UVM ROTC cadets in his speech, said, "Leadership is not worn on the shoulders or on the calling card." The leader can expect his men only to meet his own endurance and his own courage. Leadership, he continued, requires being hard but fair. With an ability to understand the soldiers' problems. "The Army needs men, especially today, who are willing to stand up for what they think is right. But, if you go to your superior officer and suggest following procedure A, and he says, 'No, we're gonna follow B instead,' then you do B like it was your idea in the first place." The most important leadership quality of a lieutenant, he said, is the desire to lead men in combat.

He told the cadets, "If you don't have that desire, then you'd best drop out right now. Because if you don't have that desire, you're liable to make a mistake in command and the blood of young soldiers may then be on your hands, hands which will never come clean."

The responsibility of making decisions which can result in the deaths of soldiers under him weighed heavily on the general. He spoke with great feeling when he said, "If I'd been a better commander, a lot of dead men would still be alive today. Don't think that doesn't sit on my conscience. If it didn't sit on a man's conscience then he wouldn't be worth a damn."

On racism in the services, Patton said, "It's a definite problem, which we've got to keep on top of every minute. Every one of us is guilty of prejudice or has been at one time or another, and we've got to fight it. We have to understand the black man, what he's been through and what he's going through." He continued, "I have the officers under me read books like Soul On Ice and The Autobiography of Malcolm X." He described racism as one of the three most serious problems facing the services, the other two being drug addiction and alcoholism, and said the Army has put in a lot of work and study on the problem, and continues to do so. He also said he believes the Army is at the forefront of society in dealing with racism.

John Sebastian Visits UVM: Views Of The Concert In Words And Pictures

No Substitute

by Doug Collette

Howdy Moon opened Sunday evening's concert with a non-descript set of acoustic music. Their three-part harmonies are obviously modeled on the Crosby, Stills and Nash format, but the presence of a female voice gave the singing an element of schmaltz too strong to ignore. Most of the group's material was romantically amateurish original songs, and their self-consciously charming stage raps became cloying after about fifteen minutes.

Jim Croce easily gave the best performance of the night: originals at all. Most of the Unpretentious and relaxed, his between-song patter was as entertaining as his music. His songs were fairly evenly divided between pretty melodic pieces and Chuck Berryish semi-rockers with just a hint of country flavor. Croce's acoustic lead accompanist displayed the only true instrumental prowess I heard in the entire three hours.

It's a shame the concert didn't end with Croce. John Sebastian was a nostalgic step into a time warp. He's living proof that a performer can make a living from songs he wrote and performed (better) five years ago. Sebastian did raps, became cloying after about fifteen minutes.

Lofgren's Grin, Goodthunder Inject New Life Into Rock & Roll

by Doug Collette

ALL OUT

Grin

Spindizzy K2 31701

People like Nils Lofgren and his three rock and roll crazy companions restore my optimism about the future of this music. There's a surface simplicity in the songs Nils writes. His words have a disarming boyishness, especially in tone, but the things he's saying and the phrases he uses to speak about these things are but a condensation of some very complex truths.

Lofgren's style of playing—in which display equal proficiency on both guitars and keyboards—blends a vicious release of high energy with a tender lyricism. Nils, like drummer Bob Berberich, is as unself-conscious with his voice as he is with an instrument. The addition of Tom Lofgren on guitars eases Nils' burden and allows a freer, more spontaneous interplay of instruments. The bassist Bob Gordon, along with Berberich, play with a logical precision which, with just the proper touch of unpredictability plus a snappy lightness, make this team—the perfectly delightful rhythm section for this band. Kathy McDonald also appears on a few cuts, singing with as much force as the electric guitars and with more guts than any female rock and roll singer I've heard. (Janis Joplin included.)

I think if I could choose to be any rock and roll musician in the world, I'd choose to be Nils Lofgren because if I could make rock and roll music, I'd make it like it is on All Out.

GOODTHUNDER

Elektra 75041

Strong lively rock and roll is getting hard to come by these days, what with so much current fare being a (non-) choice between ponderous guitar sludge on one hand and self-conscious poetry on the other. Goodthunder's first LP exhibits budding strengths that could make this band first-rate rockers before too long. The guitarist—too often dredged up Claptonesque Hendrixisms, but when he isn't being so blatantly derivative, the interplay between his unquestionably dexterous playing and that of a formidable organist reminds one of Deep Purple. Now while such a comparison is admittedly a favorable one, the fact that the resemblance comes to mind so quickly means Goodthunder has a ways to go before they really sound like themselves.

vocals and a pinch of rock and roll—a larger pinch of which might remedy what I deem an unfortunate lack of dynamism. Plainsong's album contains a range of moods, from melancholy to cheery, which, in sum, I find almost as soothing as the music of Rod Stewart, Stephen Stills and Neil Young.

DINGLY DELL

Lindisfarne

Elektra 75043

Like Plainsong, Lindisfarne plays a relaxed music which while it contains its share of country (largely courtesy of the exemplary mandolin of Ray Jackson whose playing on "Maggie May" and "Mandolin Wind" helped in no small way to make those tracks among the finest Rod Stewart's recorded), has an even more influential dose of English folk music plus a good share of their country's vaudeville tradition. Dingly Dell has plenty of sprightly good moments, but unfortunately most of these instances, as well as some of the record's more restrained pieces, are damaged by lyrics, topical and otherwise. This didactic effect makes it necessary to ignore the words to really enjoy music that's with few exceptions delightful. Because of these unwieldy marriages of words and music, I have to make more of an effort than it's worth to really get close to Dingly Dell.

SHREDDER

The Wackers

Elektra 75046

If we define the first generation as those artists whose music served as foundation for the amalgam that's come to be rock and roll, we have such distinguished personages as Chuck Berry, Muddy Waters, and Hank Williams. The second generation people include the Stones, Eric Clapton and the Dead. The Wackers are a third generation rock and roll band who've learned from both preceding epochs. The Wackers have certainly learned their lessons well and they know their songs well before they sing and play them. Like the best of their forefathers, the Wackers haven't just absorbed and regurgitated, though they do at times verge on being derivative. They have synthesized their impressions and added a freshness of approach that not only makes their music their own, but makes it happily infectious to boot. They utilize ideas that might seem hackneyed to anyone else and their unaffected stance and absence of frills makes Shredder as charming as it is fun.

John Sebastian Visits UVM: Views Of The Concert In Words And Pictures

No Substitute

by Tony Collette

Howdy Moon opened Sunday evening's concert with a non-descript set of acoustic music. Their three-part harmonies are obviously modeled on the Crosby, Stills and Nash format, but the presence of a female voice gave the singing an element of schmalz too strong to ignore. Most of the group's material was romantically amateurish original songs, and their self-consciously charming stage caps became cloying after about fifteen minutes.

Jim Croce easily gave the best performance of the night. Unpretentious and relaxed, his between-song patter was as entertaining as his music. His songs were fairly evenly divided between pretty melodic pieces and Chuck Berryish semi-rockers with just a shot of country flavor. Croce's acoustic lead accompanied the only true instrumental prowess I heard in the entire three hours.

It's a shame the concert didn't end with Croce. John Sebastian was a nostalgic step into a time warp, he's living proof that a performer can make a living from songs he wrote and performed (better) five years ago. Sebastian did most of his well known Lovin' Spoonful tunes, but these renditions couldn't match the originals at all. Most of the remainder of his set was devoted to hard rock and roll, but Sebastian and his band looked ridiculous appearing to GET IT ON!!! while playing elementary stuff any high school band could master. John's endearing stage manner might be lovable, but it's no substitute for good music.

Deep Throat At The Flynn:

Students See Special Showing Of A Throaty Porno-Flick

by Peter Campbell

I had a chance to see Deep Throat last Friday afternoon for only a dollar—two dollars off the regular price the Flynn Theatre is charging to see the movie.

In case you have been out of the mainstream of American culture for the last few months, I should explain that Deep Throat is a top money-making porno-film of all-time which has the news media all-a-titter, the public curious, and the courts uneasy.

When I heard about the special showing I wrestled with the idea that I'd be skipping an important class just to see some tits and pee on screen. I hedged because I was sure that I would walk out feeling that I had been gypped. Though I am no connoisseur of the genre, I have been to Tjinn Square, not to mention my local Vermont drive-in. The typical porno-film was a shabby made with an insane plot, banal dialogue, and people who could not act and were unattractive anyway. The typical title would be catchy, and the marquee would promise all sorts of things. For example, if it was a western it might be called BRAND OF SHANE WITH BAD GUYS AND EVEN Badder Girls! But they never delivered what they promised, (sort of like that little used with the light sweater). And the next day I had totally forgotten the experience. On the other hand, this would only cost a dollar, and I had heard about Deep Throat's unique plot twist. It was intriguing...could this be what I knew I had been waiting for, the skin-flick that would finally satisfy me? So I ducked the class and opted for a blind date downtown at the Flynn with Deep Throat.

Well I was not the only one there. A long line of UVM students grinned their way along the cold sidewalk and into the warm dark theatre where about 500 other students gave the knowing grin too, and asked "what are you doing here?" or "Hey Phil, will you lend me your trench-coat?" Some people actually talked in this manner throughout the whole film. Nerves, I might add that the crowd was mostly male, but there were a fair share of females, too. The showings had been announced in both Frank Manchel's film class and the sex class.

Finally, the film started. Briefly, the plot: The heroine, Linda Lovelace, cannot get sexually excited, though she tries very hard. After repeated attempts she goes to the doctor for examination he suggests a looking down her throat. Well, lo and behold, damned if her clitoris isn't down her throat! That's not funny, Linda begins to cry. But the doctor has a solution. Because of her sexual curiosity and/or uniqueness, Linda is particularly well adapted for helping shy men with their sexual problems. So, the willow do-gooder Linda goes to work for the doctor, and she ends up marrying one of her patients after she has helped him become a man. A happy ending.

Yes, Deep Throat is a milestone in the history of porno-films. Yes, it was worth a dollar. No, it was not worth three dollars. No, I was not satisfied somewhat I was. Let me explain, please.

Deep Throat is considerably better than any previous porno-flick I have viewed. Art, it ain't. But the camera work was decent. It had a sound track; there was some sort of plot which was funny at times; and Linda Lovelace was physically attractive—though the others weren't. She could act and she was good. (If sex ever goes out of style, you can become a sword swallower, Linda). The sex was quite explicit. All sorts of positions and combinations! And I believe that this is, was the first time I have ever seen an erect penis on screen in a "legitimate" movie house.

But it was still just a porno-flick; in other words, it was made with the sole purpose of satisfying our solution. Because of her sexual curiosity and/or reminding us by showing sexual acts on screen with the plot pertaining exclusively to sex, and nothing else! Deep Throat was good because it poked fun at itself everytime the sex began to get boring. And it does get boring. I guess I do need something else. Gee, perhaps when Last Tango in Paris hits Burlington I'll get that something else. People are paying five whole dollars to see that one.

A few aspects of porno-films interest me in particular. First, is the incredible sexism in every porno-flick. All of the porno films I have seen have centered around the problem of satisfying the male. In this instance, it is self-deceiving to say that the story of Linda Lovelace is about a woman trying to find satisfaction. Linda's freakish problem is a tool of male fantasy. The fact that Linda gets automatic orgasms (in a very superficial way) any uneasiness we males may have about the clear emphasis on fellatio. It reminds me of the last great film with an innovative plot, The Immortal Mr. Teas, which was about a man who had the curious affliction of seeing all women without their clothes on. Nothing seems to help, and of course it is very embarrassing, so he goes to the

Folk Dancers Spin Until Dawn

By June Levinson

Carefree folk spun whizzily last Wednesday eve at Burlington's ethnic hotspot, UVM Folk Dance Club. Thousands raged to the sounds of Casablanca at dusk, Morocco at midnight, East Belgrade at dawn. Rapturous with appropriate scarlet cookies and Good Clean Fun, we would have danced till 8:00 A.M. clam syndrome but for ensuing dumptiness and Ken the custodian wanted to go home.

Over fifty people filled Southwick Ballroom for an evening of easygoing folkdancing: all that was needed was two feet and a little courage to keep upright on a slippery floor. Dances were taught from France, Bulgaria, Germany, Israel, and Greece, the favorite appeared to be The Man In The Hay, a German dance which afforded the ladies a gratuitous flight through the air, at the expense of their partner's mighty back muscles.

Come join folk dancing every Wednesday and Friday evening at 8:15. This past night was a party to encourage people to give folk dancing a try, and they still are clamoring and clawing for newcomers, students and non.

Program Honors Ezra Pound

Who was Ezra Pound? Is his poetry really worth our time? On Friday, February 23rd, at 4:00 in the Arena Theatre, there will be a tribute paid to Ezra Pound titled: "A Gathering For A Fugitive" and created by Robert Caswell. Everyone is invited, free of charge, to come and witness this poet's legacy. The presentation will include selections of his poetry, slides, and a film of Pound with interpretive music.

Ezra Pound changed the concept of poetry in the twentieth century. For his political beliefs, he was incarcerated at the end of W.W. II by American authorities in a mental institution after being judged insane. Eventually, with the aid of Robert Frost and T.S. Eliot, he was released. He returned to Italy where he died last November in Venice. He died alone, maligned, and in controversy. "A Gathering For A Fugitive" puts up front what has been kept back for many years: Pound's emanently human genius.

Cocteau's Powerful "Orpheus" Entangles And Transports Viewer

by Mina Carson

Cocteau's creations are without doubt, and by regions I only sense and have not yet pried into, art in a definitional form. They are complex; they have at times the deadly and sinister beauty which in its sensual effects is somewhat akin to the poems of Baudelaire (I have not explored this similarity to any extent—here it may end. I only mean to suggest the aspect of both which recalls that one way of feeling art is a pure mode, separate, really, from that of life).

Cocteau entangles and transports me against my will, with the attraction of something I do not and cannot understand. If he holds a profundity for me, I am not likely ever to find it, because I am not likely ever to seek it. He is a place I go to, and may open but does not touch my life. He is an artist, and as such has nothing to say to one who does not want to listen carefully.

His filmed version of Orpheus has much power. One finds, especially after having checked into the film's forebears (the Greek myth, of course, and then his original stage play), that Cocteau understands his medium. The story remains sketchily the same: Orpheus is a poet of almost superhuman proportions. His wife for some reason (this varies) dies and is transported to hell. Orpheus penetrates the boundary between life and death in order to get her back, and is allowed to do so on condition that he never look at her again. This works for awhile, but one day the inevitable happens: the condition is broken. Fin, basically, and we are at the point where each rendition parts ways with the others.

Cocteau, I think, does not work in symbols because they present too finite a limit to suggestion. The classical Orpheus is transposed into postwar France with no kind of hearkening back; that is, the myth is played out right there, which heightens the film's effect as there is no wandering between realities which are gratuitous to the intrinsic wanderings of Cocteau's vision. The medium through which Orpheus discovers the poetry beyond life which he had been "sleeping through" before is a car radio. The messengers and artists of death travel on earth via motorcycles and Rolls Royces.

Cocteau is fascinated by the interface between life and death, and its rules of passage. The boundary for him is only a mirror, a piece of glass whose silver backing serves to throw life back at the living, and shatters for the dead. His vision of that "place" is realized in concrete terms, and perfected work in symbols because they present too finite a limit to suggestion.

Cocteau is fascinated by the interface between life and death, and its rules of passage. The boundary for him is only a mirror, a piece of glass whose silver backing serves to throw life back at the living, and shatters for the dead. His vision of that "place" is realized in concrete terms, and perfected work in symbols because they present too finite a limit to suggestion.

wooded passages, strewn with rubble underfoot, a catchall of ancient and modern styles and relics, including the dead themselves. A chamber of judgment is not unlike a police station interrogation room, and the interrogators are officious old men in dark suits, wielding pencils and shuffling forms which must be signed and filed. In a sense Cocteau never leaves interiors. They establish his separate mode of being. Even his outdoor settings are flat and seem artificially lit, and remind one purposely of phony outdoor movie sets. Just as are the settings, the people are flat—or, that is, they are flat to us. They inhabit a different realm. They are cold. They are sketched, and what matters is their images, how they fit the interiors. Orpheus is beautifully chosen. He is superhumanly beautiful to the point of being laughable. The only detail which prevents the woman of death (Orpheus' death) from being perfectly sinister is a somewhat overlarge nose. Heurtebise, Orpheus' ally from the world of death, is altogether ordinary save his eyes. As far as the meaning of the film is concerned, you must not ask me that. I only work here. It haunts me. With some directors one has the funny feeling occasionally that what are acknowledged by the viewer as "brilliant pieces of business" were merely guesswork on their parts. Not really so with Cocteau. He does peals and a pinch of rock and roll—a larger pinch of which might remedy what I deem an unfortunate lack of dynamism. Plainson's album contains a range of moods from melancholy to cherry, which, in sum, I find almost as soothing as the music of Rod Stewart, Stephen Stills and Neil Young.

DINGLY DELL

Lindisfarne Elektra 75043

Like Plainson, Lindisfarne plays a relaxed music which while it contains its share of country (largely courtesy of the exemplary mandolin of Ray Jackson whose playing on "Maggie May" and "Mandolin Wind" helped in no small way to make those tracks among the finest Rod Stewart's recorded), has an even more influential dose of English folk music plus a good share of their country's vaudeville tradition. Dingly Dell has plenty of sprightly good moments, but unfortunately most of these instances, as well as some of the record's more restrained pieces, are damaged by lyrics, topical and otherwise. This didactic effect makes it necessary to ignore the words to really enjoy music that's with few exceptions delightful. Because of these unwieldy marriages of words and music, I have to make more of an effort than it's worth to really get close to Dingly Dell.

The Wackers Elektra 75046

If we define the first generation as those artists whose music served as foundation for the amalgam that's come to be rock and roll, we have such distinguished personages as Chuck Berry, Muddy Waters, and Hank Williams. The second generation people include the Stones, Eric Clapton and the Dead. The Wackers are a third generation rock and roll band who've learned from both preceding epochs. The Wackers have certainly learned their lessons well and they know their songs well before they sing and play them. Like the best of their forefathers, the Wackers haven't just absorbed and regurgitated, though they do at times verge on being derivative. They have synthesized their impressions and added a freshness of approach that not only makes their music their own, but makes it happily infectious to boot. They utilize ideas that might seem hackneyed to anyone else, and their collected dance and show tunes make Shredder as charming as it is fun.

'Judgement At Nuremburg' Continues Lane Series Of Great Trial Movies

Judgement at Nuremburg, one of the most widely acclaimed films of this decade, will be shown on Friday, February 23, at 8:00 p.m., in Marsh Life Sciences Building Auditorium, under the auspices of the Lane Film Society in its Great Trial Movies Series.

There will be only one showing, at 8:00 p.m., because of the length of the movie, which runs three hours.

Tickets, $1.00 each, are available at the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door. For reservations, telephone 656-3418.

This unprecedented drama, directed by Stanley Kramer and with screenplay by Abby Mann, depicts some of the stirring events attending the post-World War II trials that brought the judgment of mankind to bear upon the crimes against humanity committed by former judges in Nazi Germany.

The theme is human responsibility; the plot is fictional, the drama historical, and the whole is a deeply personal, totally involving, powerful and shattering motion picture.

The stellar cast includes Spencer Tracy, Burt Lancaster, Richard Widmark, Marlene Dietrich, Maximilian Schell, Judy Garland, and Montgomery Clift.

Nominated in 1961 for eleven Academy Awards, Judgement at Nuremburg won two Oscars: Maximilian Schell as Best Actor, and Abby

Mann for Best Screenplay. The New Yorker hailed it as "Writing in the New York Times, critic Bosley Crowther called the movie 'a brilliantly constructed and directed forensic account of the Alfred Hitchcock's 'The Nuremburg Trials—a most powerful persuasive film.'" And Z.

College Groups Will Press Congress To Restore Nixon's Student-Aid Cuts

by Cheryl M. Fields
Reported from the Chronicle

A fight to restore the Nixon Administration's budget cuts in existing programs for which popular student aid programs they hope Congress will appear to be the top lobbying appropriate funds, despite pressure for a number of higher education associations now eliminate them. These include planning their approaches to aid for construction of Congressional appropriations academic facilities, funds for language training and area studies centers, support for the opportunity grants for either Education, Professions this fiscal year or next, and no Development Act.

The team of Donna Baker, a sophomore from Burlington and Mary Ellen Smith, a freshman from Cranford, New Jersey, won seven and lost only one in the eight preliminary rounds. They defeated two teams from Alfred University, two teams from Fitchburg State College in Massachusetts, Youngstown, Geneseo and Pittsburg, losing only to the University of Niagara who went through the eight preliminary rounds undefeated. The Second Vermont team of two sophomores, Dan Mulcahy of Royalton and Cathy Bigelow of Brantford, also lost one and won seven in the preliminary rounds. QUESTION: It never fails, if I drink an alcoholic beverage of any type before dinner, on an empty stomach, I get bad stomach pains without nausea. The pains last for about fifteen minutes and then I am able to eat my meal. What could cause this? I don't think I have an ulcer because I can eat all foods, even very acid ones, without any resulting discomfort.

ANSWER: Few things get the gastric juices flowing like alcohol. Caffeine does a good job, as does nicotine. Alcohol stimulates acid secreting cells of the stomach and when there are no food stuffs around to dilute and neutralize the acid, sensitive people get quite a bit of burning and pain. The alcohol is also a direct irritant to the lining of the stomach.

People with ulcers are especially vulnerable to the situation you described. Many of them secrete large amounts of acid without too much stimulation. Some people have had ulcers or have ulcers and do not know it, as their symptoms may not be severe enough to drive them to a doctor. Common symptoms of a duodenal ulcer include abdominal pain between meals relieved by taking food, frequent eructations of "heart burn", a painful bloating feeling after over eating, and black tarry stools if the ulcer is bleeding.

For the salvation of your gastric lining, among other things, it would be wise to put some food in your stomach before you take a drink. Starchy foods and milk are usually recommended for this purpose. Having some food in your gut before you drink will also slow down the absorption of alcohol which will help keep you from becoming intoxicated on a small amount of drink.

QUESTION: How long after a woman gets pregnant can she have sexual intercourse as far as pleasure and the child's safety is concerned?

ANSWER: In a normal uncomplicated pregnancy, a woman may engage in sexual intercourse up until the time that labor begins or the membranes of the embryonic sac rupture, whichever comes first. In years past, physicians were apt to recommend that women not engage in sexual intercourse for six weeks before delivery. This injunction is no longer felt to be defensible on medical grounds. If a woman is having complications during the pregnancy such as bleeding, signs of fetal distress, evidence of possible premature labor and some other things, intercourse is prohibited. The woman's physician will always advise her if she is in this type of difficulty.

Some people have irrational fears about doing damage to the fetus by having intercourse during pregnancy. The developing baby doesn't seem to begrudge his future mother (or father) having sexual enjoyment. There is no chance of rupturing the uterus or doing other types of physical damage during sexual intercourse in healthy women, even in late pregnancy.

Some women become large enough so that intercourse becomes somewhat awkward from the sheer point of view of maintaining balance. Those who never had cause to experiment with different positions in sexual intercourse before, suddenly discover that they can be imaginative. The woman in the knee-chest position with the man entering from the rear provides a high degree of stability. The "wheelbarrow" approach, using the side of the bed is also good. Some people just find intercourse too difficult in the last part of pregnancy but still have considerable sexual desire and resort to mutual petting to orgasm or masturbation. Again, none of these methods of sexual release are harmful to anyone.

Following childbirth, the woman generally should not have intercourse for a period of a few weeks until bleeding has diminished to an inconsequential amount and any incidental reparative surgery has had a chance to heal. This is generally in the vicinity of three to four weeks. Physicians usually advise women not to have intercourse for about six weeks which coincides with the mother's first visit back to the doctor. Under uncomplicated circumstances, many feel this is an excessive period of time.

Mortar Board Holds Various Seminars

by Mike Cote

Mortar Board is the premier title of the University's senior women's honorary society although obviously not by initials. In the last 3-4 years, it has shed its status of remaining a totally "honorary" society to become a more functional organ of the University.

But a few weeks ago, the group sponsored a seminar on basketball, the first of various seminars for women. Coach Salzborg, who this year president, Virginia Beeson, elatedly referred to as having "arranged for North Carolina University to play UVM," was the featured speaker igniting their first efforts. Just last Tuesday they presented one on "hockey," and in March they plan another on "barnyarding." Also, in April, there will be one on "bicycle repairs and auto-mechanics"—a subject about which Virginia Beeson said most women have little knowledge. They are also undertaking the task of providing receptionists for the Fleming Museum which has been vandalized in previous years. The Mortar Board Society has twelve members (4 having graduated in December), barely enough to fill the 11 or 12 offices in the society. They are part of a national organization whose center is in Chicago. However, the ties are mostly scriptural. In the past, the group has more or less performed less involved services, such as providing speakers for luncheons given by the Dean of Women. However, last semester they did attempt to host on campus tours for high school groups, but this was unsuccessful due to the heavy schedules of most of the members.

As I have said, what is amazing about him is his total intuition for the difficult art of translation from one medium to another. He has said himself that Orpheus is meant to be seen by many so as to reach the few, and he matches his statement though a complete integrity to his vision as put onto film. I was not one of the few, as I have explained, but if he allows for fuzzy responses and occasional dim sparks of recognition, then I must be counted into a probably vast legion of grudgingly grateful viewers.

Producing their own instead of natural sexual pornography films. If it would be sounds, they used a "musical" interesting to see what would be emphasized. This is living rooms, kitchens, and the assuming that women can enjoy sex without emotion as much as men seem to when they go to porno-films.

The second aspect is the fact the film-makers make their film less erotic in spite of the marquee. Screw magazine gave Deep Throat 100% on

Now, thinking about Deep Throat and others of that genre, it occurs to me that the best porno-films are carried on the vehicle of any extended dirty joke. There is this travelling salesman. It is dusk and he is way-the-hell out in the country with no place to spend the night. He sees a farm house and he stops. A grizzled old yankee answers the door, "Sure, son, he says. You can stay in my barn." "Just as long as you milk the cows in the mornin' and you don't touch my three daughters..."

by Dan Hatten

Donald Ross, director of Citizen Action Group, Washington, D.C., spoke informally to a seminar of 30 people on Wednesday, February 14 in Billings Center. Ross directed his comments and discussion to VPIRG's efforts currently being undertaken throughout the country. Assessing the VPIRG movement on UVM's campus, Ross cited benefits from involvement in organized efforts to "know what you do," "power," and "education can be a great satisfaction is knowing that you have helped to be better."

Describing himself as a lawyer for Ralph Nader, Ross launched into the problems individual has in dealing with institutions. He pointed to the lack of controls which corporate entities have in dealing with individual citizens, but individual came with stiff and jail terms, but corporation as an individual.

by Margo Howland

As a result of many comments and questions raised on the nature of the Board of Trustees' action to raise fees for each credit hour over 18 credit hours a semester, Dr. Keith Muer announced to the members of the Inter Resident Association that he will try to have President Andrews name other member of Administration speak on subject next week.

President Sig Heller called the meeting to order at 7 pm.

IRA will have to keep close record of its allocation of funds, including determination of where allocated funds were in received and spent by proper authorities. He stated. Money had been given to the Experimental Program Darkroom by IRA in the past and there is some question to whether the money received, and if so, spent for intended purpose.

In other old business, Jaffee gave a report on leather shop. The request, Sam Boto, manager of shop, is for $450. Jaffee's $250 would go for tools, rest for leather. Stud would buy the leather at shop and would receive instruction by Boto on how to make such items as belts, shoes, etc.

The Leather Shop will be up in the Art Department Building. The hours have been fully set up yet, but plans are for 20 hours a week. Discussion centered on probability of non-resident hall students using the shop and whether IRA should fact have to appropriate money.

A motion to appropriate $450 was then made, seconded, and tabled until next week.

A motion to allocate for a dance was brought from last week. People working on getting a bar be announced later. The has not been set at yet because it is not known the Student Association have planned. Sig Heller stated the Concert Bureau over $5000 on the Sebastian concert held this Sunday, and added that Concert Bureau was very reticent" concerning future concert. When why the concert was held Sunday night, instead Friday or Saturday, he quoted Karen Wedge as saying that it was thought that students who had gone for the weekend would be returned by that time and would be available to. Also, there isn't much going on Sunday evenings anyway. Sig then suggested that vote on allocation of money and plan the dance, if there was one, at a later date. Weekend was also mentioned as starting this weekend. Motion was passed unanimously.

It was announced the 16th of March will be the day of vacation announcement came. President Andrews' office if your professors tell

Donald Ross Discusses VPIRG Role Within The State

By Dan Madam

Donald Ross, director of the Citizens Action Group in Washington, D.C., spoke informally to a seminar group of 30 people on Wednesday, February 14 in Billings Center.

Ross directed his comments and discussion to VPIRG's role within the state and other PIRG efforts currently being undertaken throughout the country. Among the VPIRG movement on UVM's campus as "weak". Ross cited as benefits from involvement with organized efforts the knowledge that "you do have power," and "education can be fun." He continued with "the greatest satisfaction is knowing that you have helped to better society."

Describing himself as "a lawyer for Ralph Nader", Ross launched into the problems the individual has in dealing with institutions. He pointed to the breaks in taxes and the lack of controls which corporations enjoy. Society deals with individual crime with stiff fines and jail terms, but a corporation as an individual is sanctioned from these penalties. "I've not seen a corporation," Ross quipped, "they're a legal fiction."

Ross believes "massive fines" could be a deterrent to pollution, shoddy workmanship, and other corporate crimes. However, Ross charged that large corporations make so much profit that the millions of dollars in fines they pay are minimal in comparison to what an individual could be charged. As an example, he said that General Motors has hourly revenues of 2.7 million dollars so a million dollar fine would not have a deterring effect.

In addition, Ross feels that the individuals within the corporations, the board of directors specifically, should be responsible for the actions of the corporation. "It's the individual within the institution," he commented. "Make him accountable for the act."

Ross cited specifics as the Gulf Oil spill on the California Pacific coast where the directors should have "donned the rubber boots" and gone to clean up the spill. He recognized that such a plan would never be enacted, but he stated that individual codes of ethics could be enforced in industries in all levels of employment. "Whistleblowing" according to Ross is one of the most effective deterrents to institutional crime.

The key problem, Ross feels, is to "develop a citizenry to recognize problems as well as to solve them." He attacked the Nixon Administration for a "systematic attempt in Washington to exclude the individual from having control over his institutions." He presented as evidence the government's attempts to change savings banks from equal control by each shareholder to control by the major depositors which are usually insurance trusts and large corporate holdings. "The battle to stop these problems must be waged on the local level."

Ross then switched his topic to specific areas of University interest. He announced the publication of his book, The Public Citizen's Action Manual, which gives detailed instructions on effective organization and how to go about training for action and raising financial resources. He spoke of 16 other PIRG efforts throughout the country and 13 new ones currently in the process of forming. They are forming because "they answer a need students have, citizens have, to press legislation." He cited the impact of VPIRG on food prices, toy studies, and dental care in Vermont.

Ross singled out UVM's OVP as a worthwhile effort but that most people working with it were "frustrated activists." He supported this by stating that the difference was the "measurable impact you have on society." He called the legislative efforts PIRG groups undertake "long term fights" but benefiting more people on the whole. For the most effective work to be done in public protection, Ross concluded, "we need a citizen group with a cutting edge of full-time professionals."

Publication Of "The Albatross" Postponed

By Jim Bradley

At the SA Senate meeting of Jan. 23 a motion by Senate Treasurer Tom Grant was passed resolving that the publication of the "Albatross" be postponed till June.

"The Albatross" publication of which was originally planned for this semester, is a student course evaluation guide which was last put out in 1970. The primary reason for the postponement decision is that the costs of publication rose higher than expected, to $3200, which can't be budgeted till the new fiscal year, beginning July 1. Also, according to Grant, the low returns of the "Albatross" forms for the first semester did not render the results useful enough to warrant publication. Plans now call for publication in June of an "Albatross" which will include the first semester results and results to be collected later this semester using the same form. This will be in time for Freshman Orientation, but not for Fall pre-enrollment of students already here. The Senate resolution also called for a projected charge of 10 to 25 cents per copy "to defray the high cost of publication," which will be in book form, like the faculty-staff telephone directory.

The last "Albatross" resulted in a certain amount of controversy. The questions asked to be responded to with a 1 to 5 rating, with the result being that professors were given a GPA type rating. For instance, a professor might have come out with a 2.9 rating on "overall lecture quality", a 3.2 on "Exam and Test Items", and a 3.8 on "Mastery of Subject". The result, said SA President Bill Sisco, was that people couldn't interpret the responses readily enough. What did a 3.2 mean? What was it to be compared to? Also, the type of questions asked were sometimes beyond the point where students were qualified to judge. Further, he said, the results were used improperly, for such purposes as departmental evaluation of faculty members for tenure.

Sisco sees the purpose of "The Albatross" as giving students an indication of what courses they might want to take. Tom Grant agrees. "The Albatross" should be designed to give students an indication of what to expect, and in no way should be used for deciding faculty tenure.

The man primarily responsible for making up the present form, Fred Curran of the Institutional Studies Office, also sees "The Albatross" primary purpose as helping students select courses, providing not just a faculty evaluation, but a course evaluation, with the faculty member an integral part of any course. It also will provide feedback for the instructor, he says. To avoid the ambiguities of the GPA type rating, the responses were limited to "Yes", "No", and "Does Not Apply."

Those involved were concerned with creating a questionnaire which would gain acceptance. They didn't want to alienate people, so they kept it fairly straight. Questions concerning recommendations for faculty promotion, for instance, were avoided. But the specific questions on the form are by no means final. The SA and Institutional Studies are looking for input from students and faculty. Curran made up the present questionnaire after research into what other people in other places thought most important toward ascertaining what students look for in course selection. The idea is that out of all the questions on this form, there should be some in which almost every student is interested for selecting a course.

The disappointing response first semester is seen by Curran, Sisco, and Grant as being primarily due to the failure of publicity to get through and to poor distribution, rather than to lack of interest. They expect that if these problems are overcome the returns this semester will be much higher. The SA will probably get the forms out in April, Sisco says he hopes that the credibility of "The Albatross" will be established, and that in the future it will be published each semester.

Connecticut Co-op Program

Beginning in the Summer 1973 term, the University of Bridgeport will initiate a Co-op graduate program leading to the M.S. degree in Electrical or Mechanical Engineering, for students holding the B.S. in engineering or the physical sciences.

The program, which can be completed in 1-1/2 to 2-1/2 years, consists of alternate terms of full-time study and college-placed paid work assignments. Earnings during the industrial phases can be used to offset the costs of tuition, room and board incurred during the on campus periods. Participants completing the program are assured of a sound academic background coupled with state-of-the-art experience in their major field. These activities can reflect problems uncovered during work-assignment portions of the program.

Interested U.S. residents are urged to contact the College of Engineering, University of Bridgeport, Bridgeport, Conn., 06602. A similar program leading the B.S. degree in various engineering disciplines has been available at Bridgeport for several years.

IRA Discusses Its Allocation Of Funds

by Margo Howland

As a result of many comments and questions raised on the nature of the Board of Trustees' action to raise room and board fees for all UVM students for each credit hour over 18 credit hours per semester, Dr. Keith Miser has announced to the members of the Intra-Residence Association that he will try to have President Andrews or some other member of the Administration speak on the subject next week.

President Sig Heller called the meeting to order at 7:07 pm. IRA will have to keep a close record of its allocations of funds, including determination of whether allocated funds were in fact received and spent by the proper authorities. Heller stated. Money had been given to the Experimental Program Darkroom by IRA in the past and there is some question as to whether the money was received, and if so, spent for its intended purpose.

In other old business, Rick Jaffee gave a report on the leather shop. The request, by Sam Boto, manager of the shop, is for $450. Jaffee stated $250 would go for tools, the rest for leather. Students would buy the leather at the shop and would receive instruction by Boto on how to make such items as belts, vests, shoes, etc.

The Leather Shop will be set up in the Art Department Building. The hours have not been fully set up yet, but the plans are for 20 hours a week. Discussion centered on the probability of non-residence hall students using the facilities and whether IRA should in fact have to appropriate the money.

A motion to appropriate the $450 was then made and seconded, and tabled until next week.

A motion to allocate $350 for a dance was brought up from last week. People are working on getting a band, to be announced later. The date has not been set at present because it is not known what the Student Association will have planned. Sig Heller stated that the Concert Bureau lost over $5000 on the John Sebastian concert held this past Sunday, and added that the Concert Bureau was being "very reticent" concerning future concerts. When asked why the concert was held on a Sunday night, instead of a Friday or Saturday, Heller quoted Karen Wedge as stating that it was thought that most students who had gone home for the weekend would have returned by that time and it would be available to them. Also, there isn't much going on Sunday evenings any way.

Sig then suggested that IRA vote on allocation of the money and plan the time of the dance, if there was to be one, at a later date. Winter Weekend was also mentioned as starting this weekend. The motion was passed unanimously.

It was announced that the 10th of March will be the start of the announcement week from President Andrews' office, so if your professors tell you there is class on Friday, March 16th - don't believe it!

Mary Ashcroft asked the IRA representatives last week to ask their constituents what they thought about requesting to have Town Meeting Day off so that Vermont students could go home and vote. Most of the reaction was a general lack of knowledge about Town Meeting Day, coupled with an expected enthusiastic response to the idea of getting the day off. Mary decided that she would not present the matter to President Andrews; rather, the truly conscientious Vermont student voter could probably arrange for permission from his individual professors to go home and vote, provided he could prove he did so.

The vote of the Board of Trustees to raise out of state tuition to $2,550 and all student room and board rates by $150 per year was then briefly discussed by members of IRA and Dr. Miser.

Dr. Miser stated that the main reason for this was explained by President Andrews at the SA Senate Meeting last week. The cut by Governor Salmon of over one million dollars in the UVM budget request is a major factor, as well as budget cuts made by President Nixon.

Of greater interest to IRA members however was the Trustees' decision that effective next fall, UVM students must pay extra for every credit-hour of courses per semester after 18 credit-hours. This would amount to an increase of $40 per credit-hour for Vermonters and $100 per credit-hour for out of state students.

Miser made it plain that he didn't like the decision but that as a result of budget cuts, UVM had to save money somewhere, and it was thought that this would be preferable to raising in-state tuition. As it is, Vermonters pay the highest in-state tuition for a State University in the country.

The representative from Tupper asked about the programs in which students get credits for being psychology professors or similar volunteer jobs, and asked if they would have to pay for the extra "volunteer" credits.

Dr. Miser was not sure, but the question will be checked out. He also allowed that there might be special exceptions for pre-med and other students who had specific permission to complete four years of work in three years' time.

Dr. Miser also discussed the room increases: they are planned out in three years cycles, with an increase usually being brought up at the end of each three year period. Most of the increase is due to the rising cost of utilities.

One of the representatives from the Wing-Davis-Wilks complex made a request to allocate $130 for a new stove, since the one there recently blew out. Dean Gloria Thompson said the Office of Resident Halls would pay for whatever was needed.

The Bike Shop is now open from 7-10 pm Tuesdays and Wednesdays in the basement of Robinson Hall. The meeting was adjourned at 8:05 pm.

Registrar's Office Is Busy

By Wendy Nelson

Despite the fact that most students had selected their courses during pre-enrollment week, and even after forced changes had been made, the Registrar's Office processed 28,000 add/drop slips during the time period allotted for this function. One new course offered this semester, Witchcraft, attracted many requests for enrollment, as did several other elective courses of contemporary interest offered during past semesters.

Although there were no figures available on the numbers of withdrawals/failing, the number of students in required courses remained about the same as in the Fall. Team-teaching, particularly in the College of Education and in Medical Science, was more in evidence, as was reliance upon discussion groups. The 200 transfer-students accepted this semester did not significantly affect enrollment in any one college; transfers between colleges generally balanced each other out fairly evenly.

At UVM, figures for Fall enrollment in most courses are usually highly predictable by historical trends. Second semester figures are even more predictable, as those students in two semester courses, science courses, for example, usually take the second semester. This was true of this past semester's enrollment.

Every semester, certain elective courses appear to meet a majority of students' interests outside their majors. About 12 such elective courses were offered this Spring; the highly popular Home Ec 161, Human Relations and Sexuality, for example, rose in enrollment from 375 to 425 students.

Three hundred students requested enrollment in the much-in-demand course, The Philosophy of Death. However, only 74 students could be accommodated. When there is not a classroom of sufficient seating capacity available, it is up to the department to determine whether they can furnish a professor to teach a second section. This is not always possible.

Mr. Richard O. Barwin, Registrar, noted that overenrollment causes problems for those students who sincerely want to take a course, but who are denied due to a lack of space. Senior requests have priority over those of freshmen and a freshman may be denied enrollment in a course that an upperclassman drops the next week.

The overenrollment problem may not be affected in the future by a drop-off in applicants should there be a tuition increase. Although he feels the effect of a tuition increase would be "hard to predict," Mr. Barwin stated that, "As long as we continue to maintain quality programs in an atmosphere that is conducive to learning and where the individual's needs are still recognized, we will continue to have a paced enrollment increase in the foreseeable future."

In the meantime, the faculty is trying to aid students who must have a course for their major. For many departments, the Registrar's Office merely supplies the number of students requesting each course and that department decides how many students per section can be accommodated and how many sections to provide.

A ruling effected late this past Fall required students undertaking over 18 credit hours to obtain the Dean's permission "to do so. At present, the Registrar's 5-person staff is working upon pre-enrollment for next semester. They will then have some idea of demand for courses this Fall.

Trustees Approve . . .

President Andrews accepted for the University a 145 acre parcel of land known as the Colchester Bog which is located fifteen miles north of Burlington. Andrews read, "We'd like to emphasize that we are accepting the Colchester Bog as a trust for the benefit of the present and future generations of Vermonters."

Davis Cherington of The Nature Conservancy presented a gift-wrapped cellophane bagful of dirt from the bog to Andrews with a tag reading: "Taken from a depth of 15 feet and C 14 dated at 6820 plus or minus 120 years old." Concluding the three hour meeting, two resolutions in Memorandum to two recently deceased trustees, Leon Latham and Bartholomew Garrity were read.

Four trustees have completed their six year terms. They are: Peter Gullham, Elyn E. Miller, George H. Sloan, and Board Chairman Dr. Robert I. O'Brien. O'Brien complimented the Board for its "selflessness of dedication" he "had known in the nine and one-half years he had been with the trustees."

and that through the "give and take" of perfect love, man can be restored to oneness with God.

"There will be a copy of The Divine Principle and its Application in the library as soon as its revision is complete," Edwin Ang, Director of the New England bus team stated. One world plans to return to UVM in about 8 more weeks.

Cats Rout Hamilton

Tubbs, Watts and Hurley apply pressure on Hamilton goaltender Greg Root in 9-1 victory over Continentals.

UVM Continues Division II Domination Downing UMass

by Fred Coombs

Monday night the Cats and Calfans trucked on down to take on the Minutemen of UMass at Springfield's new Civic Center. An enjoyable time was had by all. The Cats, after a 3 1/2 hour drive, rested their weary heads on the Civic Center's nice soft theatre seats and soothed their scratchy throats with Schlitz draft.

With two of the fans' primary needs taken care of, the Cats promptly took care of the third and most important need: the domination of UMass. The 5-4 decision doesn't tell the story; the 54-25 margin in shots on goal does. The Cats totally dominated play throughout the game.

At the 8 minute mark of the 1st period, the Cats led 3-0. Chris Miller at 6:06 took the puck from behind the UMass goal and bounced it off UMass goalie Charlie Rheault to kick off the scoring in the game. UVM scored twice in the next two minutes.

Patty Wright caromed a 10 foot shot off Rheault to Ted Castle, out in front, who walloped it into the web without hesitation. UVM came back for more when Roger Mallette missed once but not twice as he socked in his own rebound at 8:00.

The first period ended with UVM on top 3-2 and with UMass very much in the game. UVM had the definite edge in the second period outshooting UMass 20-9 but only managed one goal, with many near misses.

Bill Koch blasted one by Rheault from 10 feet out on the left side, at 1:09. He connected on a rebound off Rheault; the initial shot was taken by Mallette. UVM controlled the puck for the rest of the second period and left the ice with a 4-2 lead.

Between periods the fans were entertained by the UMass band and a lovely not so little girl in a skin tight orange shirt. Memories of the quite glibbous girl faded fast as UMass bounded back in the third period when Ron Avery put one between Eckerson's legs at 8:29.

At this time the Cats said "nough of this shit," and came right back with the winning goal. Fittingly it was scored by Patty Wright, who beat Rheault to his own rebound and lifted it into the lace at 9:54.

UMass came back again when Mike Ellis took a shot from the point that squeaked by Eckerson's outstretched leg at 15:54.

UMass just couldn't get their shit together however and UVM left the ice with a 5-4 victory and one of their best performances of the season.

Eckerson had a helluva game, many times making series of saves that simply astounded the crowd, not to mention saving the game.

All lines played well and proved without a doubt who's number 1 in Division II.

The game was one of the cleanest of the season, with only 4 rather picky penalties.

UMass coach Jack Caniff was stacking the deck as not since during the game did UMass' 1st line of Keenan, Avery and Harris share the ice with UVM's 1st line.

Four of UVM's five goals came on rebounds off Rheault or other things. Rheault turned in an amazing performance, stopping 49 shots and preventing what could otherwise have been a 10-4 rout.

Three stars of the game: Eckerson, Wright and Mallette. The "Floating at the Blue Line Award" goes to Keenan and "the Almost is Only Good in Horseshoes Award" goes to an anonymous UVM player who put it halfway across the goal line.

On Tuesday, February 13, the Icecats traveled to Clarkson and displayed perhaps its best technically played hockey game in its history. At the time of the game, Clarkson was ranked fourth in division I; so obviously we entered the rink with a certain amount of apprehension. The first period was marked by superb up and down hustle by Vermont with an occasional blast on the Clarkson twine. Chris Hurley was the first to score on a beautiful deflection from a John Murphy point shot.

The second period was a carbon copy of the first. We kept waiting for the powerful attack of Clarkson. Fred Hunt made it 2-0 on a well-executed breakaway in the locker room between the second and third period the psyche factor was soaring. Even Eckto managed to murmur a few words. We knew we were going to defeat these "not-so" Golden Knights. After all, they exploded for ten goals against Cornell.

Midway through the period Hunt lit the lamp for his second tally with a bullet like blast to the along the way to take some pictures of Joe's Bar and Grill and Bill's Barber Shop. Probably the most uncomfortable player on the team was Patty Wright. He couldn't sleep because Steve Eckerson's shoulder wasn't soft enough for his head. Steve and Patty are the team's odd couple.

All seriousness aside, the hockey game was all Vermont for 37 out of the 60 minutes. The unhappy moment was when Eckerson lost his shutout with about 3 minutes to go in the final period. It was an excellent shot and Steve didn't have a chance. Two minutes later Steve got screened and the Clarkson team had their two goal quota for the night. Steve was super in the nets again for the Cats and stopped shots that seemed destined to hit the back of the net.

The Cats played perfectly from a technical standpoint. The forwards forechecked Clarkson to death and the defense was all over the ice to break up their attack. Fred Hunt had the big night scoring a goal in each of the last two stanzas. He added a third point when he assisted on Patty Wright's goal along with Ted Castle in the final period. Hunt picked his spot on both goals and cleanly beat the Clarkson goalie with blistering shots. All Hunt could say afterwards was, "It's been a long time!" Chris Hurley got the other goal for the Cats in the first period from Murphy and Willie Ted Castle missed the previous game against UConn but played with abandon on the ice. He had a bad leg bruise but fought hard to position himself in front of the net which he did consistently.

It was a jubilant locker room after the game as Coach Cross congratulated his players. Patty Wright was ecstatic as he told me that his line is really together now. That was an understatement!

I started covering hockey for the Cynic at West Point. Since then, the first line has scored a total of 15 goals in 6 games. This includes our great win over UMass. Hunt and Castle have 4 goals each for that stretch. Wright has 7, counting 7 goals for that six game stretch. Since West Point, the first line averaged 2.5 goals a game which is a very healthy average. No one has the right to say the first line isn't putting out enough.

I will be back after we talk about the big games at Middlebury and Boston State.

Round the Track

with Zach Ramsey

As the semester ends before summer vacation, and friends depart, the most repeated statement that is heard from friends, professors, and coaches is, "see you next semester, have a good summer." And for most of us we do come back, and we do have a good summer. But what about those who don't come back, and have a terrible, or even tragic summer. This is the case of Mike Bilza.

Mike didn't have a very good summer at all last year. When ending spring semester of '72, Mike was having his best track season at UVM. He had become the Yankee Conference Indoor Champion at the shot put, and 35 lb. weight throw, and outdoor champ in the shot. Only a sophomore, Mike was breaking UVM records at a regular pace. With a promising career, the semester ended and the summer began. This is when the dark shadow fell over Mike. Mike didn't compete this year.

You have to understand the gravity of the situation. At UVM, there are no track scholarships given out, so you're on your own as far as financial backing goes. Mike had to work hard to stay in school. For he was paying for his college education by working hard jobs that paid good money.

But what happened? In a freak accident, Mike broke his leg on the job early in the summer. Not being able to work and not being able to make money, Mike was unable to return to UVM in the fall. It was a terrible summer for Mike Bilza.

I was a little disturbed that Mike's situation could not be helped by the track team. But as I said before, there is no aide from the track team. A fine athlete, and a real nice guy to know, could not be helped. He has to sit out a year so he can work to get money to come to school. I guess, as Coach Kuziak has said, "If that would have happened at another school, where a school has interest in its track program, a guy of Mike's calibre would have been generously helped, and Mike would be in school right now!"

I've seen Mike and talked to him. He's still the same friendly, kind, guy he is. With no words of regret in his throat, Mike looks forward to next year. You can see Mike sometimes practicing in the cage. A defeated champion. Defeated by time and money. I hope Mike's future summers will not be like the past one. I hope no one's summer will ever be like Mike's. Mike, see you next year...Your good friend, Zach.

UVM Ski Coach Micky Cochran

Skiers Make Bid For NCAA Championships

For the first time ever, Catamount skiers will compete in the St. Lawrence Winter Carnival, March 2-3. Losing its first Carnival of the year, the Catamounts hope to regain the form displayed two weekends ago at Dartmouth, as they have everyone back for the EISA's Vermont's - and the East's - top jumper, Petter Kongali, will be back to compete in the Middlebury event. He spent last weekend in Wisconsin competing in an individual jumping event. Earlier in the year, Kongali shattered the Middlebury hill record, formerly held by Middlebury coach, John Bower.

The UVM Gymnastics Club is having its final home meet versus Plymouth State College this Saturday, Feb. 24, at 2 p.m. at Patrick Gym. The Club has just come off two tough losses to Division II powers UNH and Dartmouth, and is looking for a big win this week. The meet is free to the public.

Plexiglass For Playoffs?

by Steve Leisig
Bob Hodde, former UVM center, is heading the campaign for the installation of Plexiglas in Gusteron Field House. Hodde is hopeful that the glass will be put in before the upcoming playoffs.

Along with obtaining the necessary $13,000, Hodde is trying to create widespread interest in the plexiglas issue and the overall progress of UVM hockey. This is mainly directed at the student body of UVM, although a good deal of work is being done in the community. Any donation will be greatly appreciated and checks, made payable to the University of Vermont Plexiglas Fund may be sent to: University of Vermont Plexiglas Fund, Gift Records Office, Burlington, Vt.

With UVM almost definitely moving into Division One in the 1974-75 season, it is high time that the chicken wire is replaced in favor of the plexiglas. Bob Hodde is doing a tremendous job to see that this important improvement is made. So, if at all possible, help Bob and UVM hockey by pitching in whatever you can spare.

HOW STUDENTS MAY OBTAIN TICKETS FOR ECAC PLAYOFFS IF THE PLAYOFFS ARE HELD AT THE UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT.

General Admission tickets for the first game will go on sale March 1 at 9 A.M. at the Patrick Gymnasium for those who purchased season books; Adult, Faculty/Staff, Students. One for each book purchased. BRING YOUR BOOK WITH YOU!

It is expected that this will leave approximately 1400 general admission tickets to go on sale Friday morning. A letter system is being worked out for the sale of these tickets. Details will be posted in the early part of the week.

Aquacats To Face UNH In Home Finale

by Debbie Hennes

What is brewing behind those venetian blinds...? I have had great difficulty getting info on the swim team this week as they have been swimming closed practices. Reports look out that the team is getting it together for a grand finale against UNH this Saturday. For some this will be the last home meet of their UVM careers, and after talking to a few swimmers I am convinced that the seniors are out to break all records in the meet.

The most exciting race promises to be the 200 yd. breaststroke. Seniors John Ackerson, Roger Pelli, and George Potekhen who have been UVM's strength in the event of all season will be racing among themselves to establish a new 200 yd. breaststroke record.

John "rednut" Ackerson is letting it all hang out against UNH this weekend. Ackerson who, up until now, has subdued the full extent of his talents, has vowed to prove himself the new breaststroke king.

Roger Pelli has been preparing himself to break the 200 yd. breaststroke all season. To date his time has been down, he's in top physical shape, and he's more than ready to take this race.

Gritty George Potekhen, who was plagued with the flu at the Yankee Conference, has sworn that the jinx is off. George is going into the meet determined to come out victorious.

Another event of interest to the seniors is the 100 yd. freestyle. Fred Alexy and Bruce Willard will be battling it out for the new record. Fred has let it be known that he can do forty-eight seconds for the 100 yd. which would upset the old record, set by Bruce Willard, by a second. Bruce Willard who has dominated the event all year will be put to give Alexy a fierce run for his money.

There is yet another race in which a senior is out to take all corners. Tim Hansen in the 200 yd. butterfly will be up against stiff competition both from his own team and from UNH. Hansen's maturity and firmness of purpose should give him a lot of leverage in the water. Racing against him will be freshman Mike Goulet, the current record holder in the 200 yd. butterfly. The third UVM butterfly sophomore John Mahoney is also very much in contention. Mahoney's hunger for victory has grown with every meet and this reporter expects to see an upset.

Another exciting event will undoubtedly be the 200 yd. Individual Medley with sophomore Cliff Johnson swimming against the only man to beat him in the Yankee Conference this season. Cliff is in fine shape with a good season's work behind him, and I'm convinced that this will be Cliff's race from the firing of the starter gun to the touch after 8 laps.

Mike Kurt, emerging South

Burlington star is going after records in the 1000 yd and 500 yd. freestyle. Although not a senior, Mike is swimming each meet as if it was his last, but I think he's only just started "moving-out" - to who knows where? Mike's positive attitude toward swimming has created a stir in the team this year (in fact, didn't I hear something about a 5,000 yd. work out in the "animal lanes" in the absence of Coach Leggett the other day?) and I am convinced that this flamboyant new swimmer will know no bounds this Saturday.

The UNH-UVM contest is the last home meet of the year, and believe me, the UVM swimmers are worth watching. The first starter gun fires at 1:30 and from then on promises to be a great meet. Get over to the pool and take it in, but be prepared for ACTION!

Women's Varsity Remains Undefeated

by Sally Rouse

The Cats have been going full strength for the past week picking up one win after another. The Varsity has a 4-0 record and the JV team has a 2-0 record.

Sally Bremner was high scorer with 17 points against Castleton. That score was 82-29. The game was fast-break as you can see.

Last Saturday was a game that has started the team on their hopeful way to the tournament. University of Maine had a good team and played an aggressive, driving game. The women won by a score of 61-43. This was the best game the women's team has played all season.

Tremendous defense was played by the whole team allowing very few inside shots. Fast break all the way with Chris Morgan, guard, scoring 21 pts. Debby Westman, local Essex Junction player, was high scorer for U. Maine. Most of Maine's shots were from far corners of the court and most were good. The whole Varsity team should be congratulated on a fine game played. As of now our scoring average per game is 67 points and our opponents average is 38 points.

The JV took their second game Thursday against Middlebury by a score of 54-31. The offensive standouts were Sue Cronin, Lou Lord and Carol Shostak. The whole team played good defense not letting Middlebury get in for the "good" shot. Their defense of man-to-man put pressure on Middlebury and caused quite a few turnovers. Faye Goldberger was high scorer for Middlebury.

Both teams go to Plymouth State Thursday looking for their next win against this strong team.

Student Health Fee May Increase; Board Of Trustees To Decide Soon

by Harriet Gluck

The University Board of Trustees will decide whether to increase the health fee for students in the academic year. The fee, which is currently $1.00, is used to pay for the health services of the University. The Board will meet on March 15 to decide on the issue.

University Liquor License Debated; Vermont Legislature Considers Bill

by Deborah Cadwell

A bill providing for the sale of alcohol for consumption on college campuses is now under consideration in the Vermont Legislature. The bill was introduced by Senator Buckley of Bennington.

Last year the bill was defeated soundly by the House after having been passed by the Senate. It is speculated by members of the UVM Administration that the House will again kill the bill this year. The controversy is centered in the amendment of the liquor bill introduced by Senator Buckley of Bennington.

Any license to sell alcoholic beverages which may be issued to such institutions of higher education shall be issued to any person or persons, if requested by such institution, who holds any concession license contract or right to conduct a business or perform a service as agent for any such institution.

This act would take place thirty days from passage.

enabling UVM to procure a liquor license and serve liquor on campus. The administration was in favor of such an action. No plans have yet been announced as to the University's policy should the bill be passed.

Karen Wedge, Director of Student Activities, expressed her neutral position in regard to the idea of a Rathskeller in the Den, a project that has been recently discussed by the students. She mentioned that "it would certainly enhance our coffee house program, and like all other concerns, we will address ourselves to it positively when it happens." She added that "the logical course of action should the bill pass would be for those of us who work with the general activity program on the campus to consider the bill and our needs as an institution for this type of service on campus."

Andrews noted that the bill may be less important to UVM students than it would be to other more rural colleges. President Andrews, who has shown his approval of the bill, expressed his concern for the students at other smaller state colleges.

Elections Held To Fill Vacant Senate Seats

Elections to fill positions in the S.A. Senate were held last week in several University dormitories.

Vacancies had been created in Robinson, Redstone, Converse, Simpson, Mason, and Davis halls from senators having moved off campus, no longer representing their constituency.

According to Paul Cillo, secretary of elections, the posts in Converse, Simpson, and Mason have been filled by three men who ran unopposed in the elections held between the 19th and 21st of February.

They are: for Converse, Christopher Barrett, a senior from White River Junction, Vt.; for Simpson, Francis McVeigh, a sophomore from East Hartford, Ct.; and for Mason, Stewart Lattin, a freshman from Mendon, Vt.

They will replace Jim Judd, Mike Burns, and Dick Cassidy respectively, all of whom have moved off campus.

Cillo described the voting turnout as "light" and added that he felt it was due to the unopposed status of each of the candidates. Barrett received 36 votes, McVeigh 28, and Lattin 40.

Elections for Robinson, Redstone, and Davis are expected to be held before the senate meeting on February 27. Robinson and Redstone will conduct their elections in a different manner than the other dorms because of their smaller size. Residents of Davis have informed Cillo that their election replacing Gene Bergman, who has moved off campus, will be held "soon."

Cillo also took the opportunity to announce the start of the S.A. presidential race. Petitions, which require 200 valid student signatures, have been available in the S.A. office since February 22, and will be due back by March 5 at 5:00 p.m. Applicants are advised that a student may sign only one petition, and each signature must be accompanied by the "address and social security number of that student."

Three campaign forums have been scheduled to give UVM students the opportunity to speak with and question the candidates. The first will be a Greek forum on March 6 at 7:15 p.m. On March 7, candidates will face a forum in Billings Center at 7:15, and the final forum on March 8 at 7:15 p.m. will be held in the Wilks-Davis-Wing complex.

All candidates are instructed to compile a list of campaign receipts and expenditures to be submitted in a record to the secretary of elections on March 22. Campaign contributions may be solicited and must be noted in the campaign record. A receipt should be given to each donor, and expenses may not exceed $150.

Cillo will conduct the presidential elections to be held on March 19, 20, and 21. Voting machines to facilitate the voting process will again be used in Waterman lobby, Billings lobby, the Den, Lafayette Hall, Marsh Life Science Building, Bookstore, Bailey Library, and at designated times in the Waterman Dining Hall. The December referendum resulted in approval of the use of voting machines, which are rented from the City, replacing printed ballots.

The secretary of elections will announce the S.A. President-Elect on March 22 at 10:00 a.m. The president-elect

Plexiglass Fund Drive Reports Success

by Jeff Yacker

The fund raising campaign for a new plexiglass shield around the hockey rink has yielded to date $7,318. Robert Hodde, UVM alumnus from Summit, N.J., and a former varsity player himself, is heading the drive, which is aiming for the $15,000 necessary for the purchase and installation of the plexiglass. The two main reasons for the new shield, Hodde stated, are players' safety and better viewing for spectators. Many fans can attest to the difficulty encountered if one sits too far down in the stands, due to the present shield made from chicken wire. In a letter of solicitation, Hodde said that "by adding the plexiglass we will significantly improve our rink, putting it back on top in a class with the other top college hockey facilities in the country." However, he noted that overall, UVM's rink facility is better than many schools, including some in Division I.

Although he has met with good cooperation from many quarters so far, Hodde said that "he intends to solicit funds at one, and only one game during the season." (continued on page five)

Upcoming "Midwinter Festival '73" To Provide New Entertainment Concept

by Lissa Charles

"It is not an attempt to revive the traditional 'Winter Weekend', we don't have the time or the money for that. But the purpose of this thing is to provide some kind of entertaining break during the spring semester."

This "thing" which Terry Demas describes as UVM's "Mid-Winter Festival '73," scheduled for the entire week

March 9th through the 18th, Demas, acting as entertainment coordinator, started planning for these upcoming events last year, immediately following what was gratuitously reputed to be "Winter Weekend '72."

"The age of the kake-walk and the glorious tradition of Winter Weekend is over," declared Demas. "This 'festival' is simply designed to provide a week of concentrated entertainment for the university community."

With this new concept in mind, Demas and the various organizations, have scheduled performances occurring throughout the week.

definitely add some color to the stagnating, often depressing months of the mid-winter season.

The following is a chronological schedule of events and theatrical performances occurring throughout the week.

March 9
The Skating Club of Lake Placid, in cooperation with the Champlain Valley Skating Club presents "Ice Time '73", a show of national and international skaters. The performance will begin at 8 p.m. in Gutterson Field House. Price of tickets for students with SA ID cards is $1, and $2.00 for other spectators.

March 9-13
Five performances of Kaufman and Hart's play "The Man Who Came to Dinner" Directed by Chip Towers, the performances will be in Billings Ape at 8 P.M. each evening. Cost of tickets for students holding ID cards is $1.00 and $2.00 for those without cards.

March 14 & 15
The UVM Baroque Ensemble presents "Back to Bach - An evening with Johann Sebastian Bach." Conducted by Professor William Metcalfe, the group will perform two concertos and one cantata written by Bach. The admission to the concert is free, and it will be held in the main court of Billings at 8 p.m.

March 16 (all classes cancelled)

recording artist for Columbia Records and producer of the television series "The Music Scene". Appearing with Steinberg will be folk singer Jimmie Speer. The concert will begin at 8 p.m. in Patrick Gymnasium. Tickets cost $1.50 for students with ID's and $2.50 for those without cards.

A free concert by the UVM Brass Ensemble in the main court of Billings at 8 p.m.

March 16th, 17th, and 18th
Four performances (including a Saturday matinee at 12 noon) of Jean Anouilh's "L'Alouette." The play, directed by Professor Geno, will be presented in French at the Arena Theater. Tickets cost $1.00 for students with ID's, and $2.00 for others. Reservations may be confirmed at the theatre box office starting Friday, March 9.

March 17
The University Players will sponsor a "Masked Costume Ball" at Billings. The entire main floor will be utilized to accommodate and present a string ensemble and a jazz-rock group. Refreshments will include a buffet of cold-cuts, salad, and beverages. Admission is $2.00 per couple, $1.00 per person.

Fifth Annual Winooski Raft Race

Due to the enormous number of turnouts at the Fifth Annual Winooski Raft Race in 1972, the Outing Club has found it necessary to make some limitations and restrictions this year. Everyone must at all costs consider safety. There is a short section of rapids which can be the highlight of the course, but which can also be quite dangerous if not approached soberly, in every sense of the word. It is essential to have everyone's cooperation in regard to drinking, trespassing and littering. Please follow the directions of the traffic directors, police, and other designated race officials. A $20.00 deposit has been added to the entry requirements to help enforce these rules. The $20.00 deposit will be returned provided the rules are followed, and your raft is cleared from the site of the race by midnight May 6, 1973. Deposits will be sent back during the following week.

Spectators are urged to use car pools and mass transportation, or preferably bicycles and feet. Spectators are also requested to obey the trespassing, littering and traffic regulations set up by the Outing Club and County Police.

Come rain or shine, and welcome!

DATE: Saturday, April 28, 1973

START: Bolton Falls, on the Winooski River about 9 miles from Richmond Village, 25 miles from Burlington (see map). Each raft will receive a litter bag from starting line judge. He will make final judgement concerning any eligibility of a raft.

TIME: First rafts start at 8:00 A.M. and continue until all rafts are launched. All entries are requested to be at the launching site as early as possible.

FINISH: One mile upstream from the Jonesville Bridge.

LENGTH: Six miles.

COURSE: The course begins at Bolton Falls below the old power dam. One-half mile downstream is the one major rapid, known as Rainbow Rapids. This culminates in the swift run beneath the notorious railroad trestle at North Duxbury. The last 5 miles are more smooth; but there are smaller rapids which appear at different water levels. The entire course bisects the backbone of the Green Mountains.

TIME: Approximately 1 hour and 30 minutes.

TROPHIES: First and Second prizes will be awarded to the fastest rafts in the Male, Mixed, and Female Divisions (provided that enough all female crews enter the race).

There will be in addition a "torpedo raft" division this year (see DIVISIONS).

Trophies will also be awarded for:

Most unusual in design.

The raft which brings in the most litter.

ENTRY FEE: There will be a $3.00 entry fee to cover the expenses, plus a $20.00 deposit which will be returned after the race, provided all the rules are followed.

Entries in the Sixth Annual Winooski River Raft Race must conform to the following regulations:

CREW:

1. Minimum crew is six.

2. Each raft will be provided with a number which must be exhibited on the raft and each member of the crew. The number on the raft must be permanently painted or carved onto the raft itself.

3. Maximum crew is unlimited, providing there is 6 square feet of deck area per person.

4. To qualify for the mixed trophy, at least one member of the crew must be female.

FLOTATION:

1. Nothing that was commercially constructed to be a boat, raft, pontoon or any part thereof may be used.

2. For safety's sake, all rafts must be designed so if they capsize they will still float upside down.

DECKING:

1. Area

a. At least one unbroken section of deck must measure 36 square feet or larger. There is no maximum size, but each person must be allotted at least 6 square feet.

b. The unbroken section must be 6 feet wide at least.

c. The area shall be determined by measurement of the outside dimensions of the raft as viewed from above.

2. The deck must be capable of supporting crew members without capsizing.

3. The raft may have any number of decks, platforms, outriggers, etc., as long as one section satisfies the requirement above.

4. Flotation devices such as barrels, etc., may be counted as parts of the area of deck where they are continuous with the rest of it.

5. The area measured need not be on the same level.

PROPULSION:

1. Rafts may be propelled by anything run by hand, foot, body, wind or current. No engines or motors may be used.

2. POLES, PADDLES, OARLOCKS, and SAILS MUST BE HANDMADE or improvised from something that was not commercially contrived or marketed to be a canoe, paddle, oar, oarlock or sail. It is suggested that all rafts have some propulsion other than poles which would enable them to move sideways in deep water to reach the bank at the end of the race.

DIVISIONS:

1. All male

2. Female (provided enough all-female rafts enter)

3. Mixed (must contain at least one member of the opposite sex.)

4. Torpedo rafts (due to the popularity of "airplane wing tank" rafts, there will be a special division for these rafts this year because of their special speed capacity).

SAFETY:

1. All crew members of all rafts must be competent swimmers.

2. Life jackets MUST be worn by all crew members, without exception. Due to water temperature, thermal underwear or wetsuits are recommended. The water temperature will be about 32 degrees.

3. There will be no drinking of alcoholic beverages before your raft has completed the race and is out of the water. Each crew member must also be sober at the start of the race.

4. There will be no trespassing on unauthorized areas.

5. Each raft crew member will please follow the directions of the designated officials.

JUDGING:

Judging will be done by raft race committee members.

LITTERING:

Any raft seen littering during the race will be disqualified from the race and will lose the $20.00 deposit.

CLEAN UP:

All crews are responsible for the removal of the raft and materials from the site of the race by May 6, 1973.

Violation of any of the rules will mean disqualification and loss of the $20.00 deposit.

SIGN UP:

1. Race will be limited to 75 raft entries.

2. Rafts will be accepted on a first come, first serve basis.

3. The deadline for entry blanks is April 4, 1973; however, entries are asked to turn in their entry blanks earlier if possible.

4. Entry blanks will be signed by a sponsor or captain who must be over 18 years old.

5. Please designate which division your raft will be entered in. (Refer to division section)

6. Filled-out entry blank, entry fee and deposit must be sent to or given in person to Andrea Johnson, Box 38, Jeanne Mance Hall, UVM, Burlington, Vermont 05401. Make checks payable to Andrea P. Johnson. Questions can be directed to her or Pam Moore at 656-2668. Entry blanks are available at the Outing Club meetings, Wednesdays at 7:00 p.m., 303 Votey. Or see or write to Andrea Johnson or Pam Moore at the above address.

Opposed The Jughandle:

Ward Six Incumbent In Running

by Daniel Haslam

Incumbent Ward 6 Alderman Torrey Carpenter is running for his third term on the Board of Aldermen, again on the Republican ticket.

His relationship and interest in the University of Vermont will, he feels, with the support of the University community. Carpenter and his wife are both alumni of UVM and have two children, Case '74, and Mrs. Sarah Carpenter Ross '74 in UVM.

Carpenter was one of the few Burlington aldermen who opposed the construction of the Jughandle on Main Street surrounding MAT and the Living and Learning Center. He did so because he was against the blacktopping of the field, which now makes up the jughandles, and because he does not believe it has or will solve any traffic problems. He pointed out that the stretch of road in front of Gaynes is still congested and that toward the University on Main Street the merger of two lanes into one is dangerous to both drivers and pedestrians in terms of speed and safety.

As a candidate, Carpenter is concerned about whether or not students will be voting in the March 6 election. Five hundred students reside in Ward six and are eligible to vote, but Carpenter thinks the students may feel the city issues do not concern them. He suggested that the plan for ward reapportionment should be of special interest to students since it will divide campus living units currently together in Ward 6. Under the proposed legislation, Harris-Mullis, MAT, and the Living and Learning Center would join Ward 1 from their location in Ward 6.

Carpenter agrees with proposed changes which would more than double the size of the Burlington School Board from 6 to 13 members. He pointed to the school board's budget which receives more than half of the city's budget. "Any body which spends over half of the tax dollars," Carpenter stated, should have adequate representation of the taxpayers.

Carpenter theorized that there would be five new aldermen on the board this year because 5 incumbents are stepping down and not running for reelection. In view of this, Carpenter suggested that "we keep what experience we have available," referring to his own candidacy. He praised his opponent, Pat Novotny, for her interest, but he criticized her for her lack of specifics with city issues.

Recognizing transportation as a necessary and practical issue to students, Carpenter referred to the recent decision of the aldermen to force set rates by taxi service to and from the Burlington

International Airport. Independent taxi drivers had had the reputation of charging the rider what they felt he could afford to pay, Carpenter commented, and he feels the contract between one taxi company and the airport will solve many problems for students and townspeople.

He also expects that the Chittenden County Transit Authority, anticipated to commence service July 1, will prove to be a more efficient bus service for Burlington and vicinity. He indicated that this is another issue slated for voter approval March 6. Burlington, Colby Burlington, Essex Junction, and Winooski will each share a portion of the total subsidy of the Authority, with Burlington shouldering slightly more than 60% of the cost. $200,000 has been pledged by Burlington from revenue sharing funds to finance the first year of its operation.

Carpenter would like to see more interest by students in city affairs. He feels that the "University and city relationship should be closer." He lauded student projects in engineering which have helped Burlington with traffic problems and hopes for further participation and help from the University.

A member of both the Ordinance and Licensing Committee, Carpenter has been involved in changes in zoning for the Master Plan as well as a supporter of the Urban Renewal efforts which culminated in an agreement last week.

function." Dr. Andrews also displayed approval in this area since he is often called on to provide a place for such entertainment.

Concerning the idea of a Rathskeller on campus, President Andrews mentioned that, "if it were well controlled, well managed, it would add to the learning and cultural life on campus." He related his experiences in medical school where the professors, doctors and students would gather at a nearby pub to relax and discuss the problems they had encountered throughout the day.

Any plans for a University Rathskeller are entirely speculative however, and await the Legislature's decision.

Midwinter Festival

In addition to these events, special coffee houses (to be scheduled) will serve refreshments and present a combination of student and local musicians. While SA has

To secure a more organized and scheduled musical concert, it has tentatively arranged a showing of the award winning film "The French Connection." Skiers can expect reduced rates at the local resorts for both weekends of the 9th and the 16th. Details concerning this arrangement will be announced at a later date, along with other athletic tournaments and sports events to be scheduled. And successful week, an activities booth will be located at Marsh Lounge starting Tuesday, March 6th. For the convenience of the students, this booth will provide all information and ticket sales for each event of the Mid-Winter Festival. Students can visit or call the booth at 2068 every day from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M.

For lack of a better title, Terry Demas is considered the principal entertainment coordinator of the Mid-Winter Festival. However, the various events and concerts have been organized and budgeted by each cooperating student association. In other words, there is no formal "Mid Winter Festival Committee." While this may suggest a lack of unity and organization, Demas reports only successful cooperation among individual organizations in contributing to the merit of this week.

Although the concept of "Winter Weekend" has become obsolete, Demas feels that the spirit of festivity is not lost. Both SA Speakers and Concert Bureaus have made a conscientious attempt to organize and present an inexpensive, diversified, colorful program of cultural entertainment for the student community. The bureaus and organizational coordinators share optimistic expectation of an enjoyable, perhaps memorable week. However, only the students can render their service a success. Think about it.

voiced a similar opinion when he stated: "If the student body doesn't do anything, no one is going to." Sisco added, "Personally, I'd like to give money to a war-stricken nation, but as a student I don't want my money spent on this. The Power Of The President

A petition is currently being circulated to bring to the student body a referendum to amend the Student Association Constitution by giving the S.A. President the power to veto motions of the S.A. Senate. The Senate, according to this petition, could only override a Presidential veto by a three-fourth's vote of the entire Senate and subsequent referendum passed by the student body.

The S.A. President, as matters now stand, can do little to combat blocks of Senators who may railroad motions through sparsely attended S.A. meetings. He is the only official elected by the entire student body and should not be reduced to an ineffectual figurehead. Through the presidential veto, he can, as a representative of all UVM students, at least temporarily halt certain elite factions from pushing their own concerns through the Senate.

Although the presidential veto is a necessity in our present Senate, we must not go to the other extreme and give the President too much authority. As the proposed amendment now reads, a three-fourth's vote of the entire Senate is needed to bring a motion to referendum. Due to the lack of Senators present at any given meeting, this would be almost impossible to secure. It would, in effect, make the presidential veto an absolute veto. Perhaps the amendment should state that the veto be overridden by a three-fourth's or even two-third's vote of the Senate present, thus making the chances for referendum much greater.

The presidential veto is essential in order to force the Senate to represent the wishes of a majority of UVM students, instead of a few select groups. The President must not, however, be allowed to become an absolute dictator. The Constitution should be amended, but only after some modification. The President needs the power to veto, not the chance to become omnipotent.

Redirect UVM For Self-Determination

by Gene Bergman

The Nixon Budget cut with a $1.5 million loss for UVM, 95% tenured faculty, an administrative bureaucracy that grows geometrically as the rest of UVM grows arithmetically, projected 1973 completion of the Spear St. joghandle (which without free UVM land could not have been started), inadequate health care and housing services, chaotic parking policy and facilities, $150 tuition increase for 40% of UVM, $125 housing contract increase for all students in the dorm, etc., etc.

It's becoming increasingly clear that our institution, UVM, has failed to serve the needs of its constituent parts. As each year passes students are becoming more aware of the basic contradiction between the potentiality of UVM and the present mess. And there is a growing realization among UVM students that the present structure of UVM is totally inadequate to meet the needs of students and the community.

The solution to our problem seems to be related to the theory of self-determination, the direction and control of institutions by those directly affected by them and the use of those institutions for the good of the entire community. Our present dilemma stems directly from the lack of control exercised by the constituent parties of UVM.

Students have traditionally reacted to the university by ignoring it, or going home, in effect doing what they want regardless of the university. Recent developments, however, make these individualistic solutions meaningless on a practical level; trustee and administrative decisions affect every student directly (i.e. Parenti, tuition and housing increases, Spear St.). New forms of "struggle" are needed, the key being collectivity.

As of now only one student "organization" exists which has the possibility to initiate the primary objectives of students into actions, the S.A. Senate. To do this the senate must overcome its credibility gap and prove itself a true friend of the collective student body. This means promoting student interests on all levels. It means providing positive programs with S.A. monies as well as calling for changes in admissions, etc. It means setting up workshops in the dorm complexes as well as setting up structures for university reorganization. It means promoting fairs, exhibitions and concerts on a bigger scale. It means bringing out the inherent contradictions of the present situation. It means "serving the people" because only the "people" and not an elite group can effectuate a transformation of the system which makes possible the realization of human potential and creativity.

The basic need is to gain control of our institutions and use them to realize our (and the community's) basic needs and potentials. The contradictions between the present and the possible point out the total incapability of the present administration to deal with the situation. In organizing any transformation of basic institutions, the desires of "the people" (i.e. common student) must be kept foremost in the "organizers" mind. What is now needed is a two pronged attack by the S.A. Senate, one part filling the basic needs left out by the university, the other bringing to light the contradiction within the university.

Letters To The Editor

Discharge Of Radioactive Material Amounts To Less Than Claimed

To the Editor:

To correct an error in my letter of early February, the following is a quotation from a letter to me from Richard V. de Grasse, Deputy Commissioner of the Vermont Public Service Board.

"I would like to point out that Mr. Stensrud of my office was not quoted correctly concerning the recent discharge of radioactive material. The eight-minute discharge was equivalent to 15 hours worth of radioactive release and not one year. You can be sure that if the recent eight-minute radioactive discharge at the Vernon plant amounted to one year's worth, the Public Service Board would be much more concerned and we would take immediate and forceful action."

I am very grateful to Mr. de Grasse for his courteous and personal correction of the error. I am also grateful to the reporters and wonder that they make as few errors as they do. It is better to have errors and correct them than to have reporters afraid or unable to report. It is my belief that the public must be presented with the facts of serious issues if democracy is to survive. In the case of nuclear fission much has been suppressed.

Certainly the lower discharge means less harm done, but I still believe that the sooner we have a moratorium on nuclear plants the better off we will be. However I am grateful that the Public Service Board Industrial Hygiene Director Harry Ashe and the Governor are concerned about the Vernon plant. But I wish the main concern were for the perpetuation of a livable environment. Why should the main concern of the Public Service Board Chairman be "the economic impact on Vermont utilities and rate-payers." (Please correct me, Mr. Gilbert, if this is misquoted.)

Maybe the reason is that this is our first concern. How many of us are willing to cut down on our consumption, unnecessarily great, even to prevent the agonies of cancer. We could do this, and we would be conserving our natural resources for future generations. And we could pay more for less in order to have employment and money used for producing a clean environment.

I hope to write soon about other sources of energy and costs, including hidden costs.

The Controversy Continues:

Abortion Offers Alternative To Unwanted Children

To the Editor:

Having read the "Legalized Abortion Is Murder" article by Thomas E. McCormick in the February 22nd issue of the Vermont Cynic, I was struck by the author's rather rigid abstraction processes that boiled certain many-faceted issues down to leave only those aspects that he chose to espouse. If I have interpreted correctly, Mr. McCormick states in his opening paragraph that the crux of the abortion issue is that it is a choice between the mother's lifestyle and her child's life. Perhaps the way he sees the matter, it is. But aren't there many other critical factors involved? What about the lives of those who will be directly and indirectly affected by the possible consequences of not aborting? Recent statistics from various law enforcement and mental health agencies indicate that there is a high correlation between those who come from broken or unhappy homes and those who ultimately show socially unacceptable forms of behavior. Psychological studies also show that the potential happiness and normal adjustment of a child is closely tied to the degree of love, understanding, and attention he receives while growing up. The mere fact that a woman seeks an abortion would indicate to me that, if born, the youngster could be one more addition to the growing category of unwanted and unloved children that are presently being born every year throughout the country.

In a later paragraph, the author also utilizes a perhaps extreme abstraction process when he likens Hitler to those who support abortion and, according to him, deny the humanity of the fetus. This brings up an intriguing and philosophic (or morale, if Mr. McCormick likes) question: Is the two-month-old fetus to be regarded on the same level as a fully-developed adult or child? I will not attempt to discuss this highly-charged issue but relate the following incident instead: "At a recent party, I posed this question to a wife who was arguing passionately against abortion in a lively debate on the subject: 'If you were pregnant and, for some reason, had to make a choice between the unborn child and your husband's life, which would you take?' She had also supported the argument that abortion is killing, but after a moment's consideration on the matter, admitted that she would obviously choose her husband. This piqued my curiosity enough to quiz others present on the issue. The answer was unflinchingly the same. In spite of the fact that they vigorously supported the "Abortion is Killing" doctrine, it appeared to this writer that they held the life of the unborn in a different light than that of a fully-developed adult or child.

Mr. McCormick goes on to speak of the "horror of abortion" and state that "Despite the semantic sterilities, everyone knows that another life is involved in abortion." I was particularly intrigued by the presence of the words "semantic sterilities" as his use of such extreme terms as "horror" and "everyone knows" violated one of the basic guidelines on which any course in general semantics is built. It might also behoove the reader to keep in mind another fundamental of semantics in reading Mr. McCormick's article—The meaning of any word is determined by the user.

Perhaps the "horror of abortion" is more extreme to him than it is to many of his contemporaries. In closing I will state that it is at least reassuring to observe that the increase in availability of present-day abortion facilities indicates that the predominant influence in this area is by cooler heads more concerned with the medical and sociological plight of Mankind than with Thomas E. McCormick's offended sense of morality.

Additional View Of Hockey Move

To the Editor:

The action of the Board of Trustees concerning the move to Division I deserves at least one additional interpretation.

When the Athletic Council of the University recommended to the Board that the move be made, it was so with conditions. Their first recommendation was that no monies come from the athletic budget. The other recommendations were the financial amounts. They recommended one additional grant-in-aid and enough money for the additional traveling that would be necessary in Division I. Keep in mind the first recommendation.

One of the key comments made in committee at the Board meeting was that this wasn't material for the Board of Trustees to be dealing with.

Many referred to it as a matter for the athletic department and no one else. The Board did after a lengthy discussion make the recommendation but only after it was stripped of the pre-conditions. Another comment was that like any other department the Athletic Department would have to make its own priorities and when it came time for the Board to evaluate the monies available to the various departments the additional funds would be considered. This was said very tongue in cheek and another comment was made that it was not likely that there would be an increase in the athletic budget but rather a decrease was likely.

In light of the preceding, I ask the following questions:

1. If the move is made what other cuts are going to be made to offset the additional funds needed?
2. What are the priorities of the athletic department?
3. Why don't the women on the campus complain or at least react to the amount of monies that are spent on male sports?
4. What is the future of football and basketball?

In short there are many people in many places who are thinking about the value of athletics, and the various types on this campus. We all should be forewarned that a crunch is on the way.

In a last note Coach Cross is to be highly congratulated on this year's team and his perseverance in light of the many pressures that are on him, his staff, and the team.

VPIRG Opposes Plan To Build Highway On Route 7

by Fred Dotsen

"Any man who owns land holds that land in trust for future generations." So said Calvin Stone in an article in the October-November 1972 issue of National Wildlife Magazine. Land that is owned by anyone goes when that owner dies, to the future generations to enjoy. But what worth of heritage can it be when cars zoom over it, houses are planted on it like trees, and wastes clog the rivers and open country?

VPIRG, backed by this ecological principle, opposed the plan to construct an interstate highway along the Route 7 corridor. The plan, though not formally announced, implies that a four lane interstate-specification highway will come from Interstate 95 in Norwalk, Connecticut, along the present Route 7, and join with Interstate 89 in Bethel or Burlington. The road would in effect connect the big megalopolis area of the east directly with the heart of Vermont and the open country of Western New England.

The plan, unannounced and as yet unfinished, is suggested by the scattering of construction in the post-planning stage or already going on. Connecticut and Massachusetts have already started building major bypasses around the cities along the Route 7 passage, and some of them have been completed. In Vermont, plans have been instituted for "improvement of Route 7" to four lane highway specifications, and preliminary engineering has been completed for some of the stretches. Money for interstate highways comes predominantly from the Federal government, whereas improvement of existing roads must be financed mostly by the state, and thus a desire for such a four lane system, though a monetary compromise can hardly be taken for irreplaceable land.

The sectioning of the road allows the planners to file the required Environmental Impact Statements only for the small areas that are being built on, and not to produce one for the overall effect of such a highway on the total environment and population involved. Such a statement would require an estimation of the damage caused by the actual construction of the road, the resources affected, the long-run effects, and alternate proposals to the location of the road. The statement also would meet with the disapproval of many Vermont citizens concerned about the development of their state, and hence the institution of the road in sections.

VPIRG director Scott Skinner said in his attack of Vermont Highway Commissioner John Gray that VPIRG did not stand in the way of improvement of the existing Route 7 in Vermont, and in fact encouraged it. But he supported the need of a comprehensive Impact Statement to determine the total effect of a four lane highway on Vermont's scenic forest land and social structure. He claimed that wildlife habitats, and living patterns of people residing near Route 7 and depending upon it as a major means of short-distance travel, would be greatly harmed by the implementation of a limited access four lane superhighway, and that the rest of the state would suffer as well by the influx of travelers likely to be brought with the system.

VPIRG aided in the study which uncovered the plans of construction of the segments, and takes an interest in the effects of the completed road on the environment. They believe that Vermont's beauty must be preserved for those who enjoy it now and will want to enjoy it in the future.

The Family Associates Support Plexiglass Fund

To the Editor:

Deborah Cadwell completely misquoted me in your issue of the 22nd in the article about The Family Associates. I did not say that I felt there were more important needs than the plexiglass for the hockey rink, but that there were other important needs in addition to it. Minority Faculty & Administrators Organize: Discuss Objectives

Out of a concern for the condition of minority students at UVM, and out of a desire to interact with colleagues, grew a very recent organization—that of minority faculty and administrators. Discussion of a need for an organization began in the latter part of the fall semester but it was not until January 29, 1973, that this discussion became a reality.

Frankie Felder, graduate student in Student Personnel Administration and practicum intern to Dr. Dolores Stocker, Assistant to the President on Human Resources, felt a need for more communication between faculty, students, and staff. Resultantly, a two hour meeting was held on January 29th in the President's Dining Room, Waterman Building. At the conclusion of that meeting, those in attendance decided unanimously to continue meeting.

The second meeting was held on February 13, at the home of Dr. Jackson Clemmons in Charlotte, Vermont. It was at this meeting that officers were chosen and objectives were discussed. The officers are: President—Joseph Jones, College of Education; Vice-President—Rodger Summers, Admissions Office; and Secretary—Frankie Felder, Graduate Intern. Among the objectives discussed were:

...dealing with specific problems of minority students—i.e., academic advising, recruitment, social aspects, etc.

...organizing cultural events in conjunction with Third World. For example, sponsoring guest speakers, organizing a Cultural Arts Festival.

...serving as a welcoming committee for prospective minority employees and their spouses

...assisting in the recruitment of minority professionals

...functioning as a social-cultural group

The faculty also suggested that minority students attend their meetings. At the last Third World meeting several students volunteered to attend the next meeting. They were: Lynn Harvey, Marie Toussaint, and Antoinette Soto. Jennifer Cover, Communication and Theatre, will attend the Third World Organization meetings as the official faculty advisor.

Any minority faculty who has not been contacted regarding this organization may contact Joseph Jones in the College of Education.

SA Constitution Changes...

finished, the agenda moved to old business.

Last week, Glen Austin, senator from Mullis Hall proposed several constitutional proposals, which called for various deletions or additions to the present constitution. The motions $ 69, 70, 71, 80, 81, 82 were tabled so senators could further review them in light of discussion originating Tuesday.

572, recognition of the UNICEF organization on campus passed unanimously. $ 74, allocation of money to the UVM band passed. However, discussion of the motion and allocation stressed that the band should make more effort to center its activities on campus versus its present tour status. The band now plans to tour four high schools in Massachusetts and three in Vermont. $ 75, allocation of $1460 to OVP in order to start new projects was amended to $1960. Originally, OVP had requested $1960, but the Finance Committee cut it down.

The Winter Weekend motion, $ 76 calling for the allocation of $3,391 passed. This is in addition to the $2500 already allocated. The Winter Carnival, March 9-17, will include an ice show, broomball, masked ball, a drama production, and reduced rates and smorgasbord at a local ski area, if everything occurs according to plan. The total allocation of $5791 also includes expenses for a Spring Weekend at the end of April.

Among Glen Austin's other proposals were three motions.

$ 77, 78, 79 calling for a financial policy statement. The motions attempted to solve the problem of consolidated accounts which caused many problems last fall. The motion, as Glen stated, was an effort to get present policy on paper concerning funds, allocation and responsibility. Another of his motions, $ 83, was a "Right to know" proposal.

This, which Austin is again trying to get down on paper, is the present policy of the SA calling for open records and meetings. It passed. Another Austin proposal, honorariums for treasurer and president, was defeated, the reasons being that if one member of the governing body received money, then everyone should be a factor also.

$ 84, a motion to open Patrick Gymnasium on Sundays, was tabled pending further investigation. The final motion of the evening, $ 87, allocation of $118 to the UVM Rugby Club was passed.

Under New Business, Steve Goodkind, town senator entered a motion calling for a strike by non-resident students of the $150 tuition increase.

He felt that the reasons President Andrews gave for the increase were invalid and contradictory to actual data.

William Pearson, author of the Bac Mai motion, proposed a motion to force action of the $500 check for Bac Mai. It dated that the president and treasurer may not interfere with the normal procedure of the check. However, this call for the sending of the check before the referendum is held. It was called for a suspension of the rules to force action of the motion. It was defeated. His motion would have to call for a suspension of the constitution. There being no further business, the meeting was adjourned.

The Billings Center Governing Board Theatre Committee, in an attempt to present theatre in the Round Room has definitely scheduled two major productions and a tentative third. The timetable is as follows: THE MAN WHO CAME TO DINNER—March 9-13 (performance) March 2-13 (closing of Round Room); HAPPY BIRTHDAY, WANDA JUNE—April 6-10 (performance) March 23-April 10 (closing of Round Room); OTHELLO—tentative April 19-23 (performance) April 14-23 (closing of Round Room).

The Round Room is sealed off for several days before actual performances to enable the construction of set and an opportunity to rehearse on the set. This means that the room is not open for ordinary usages during the day. We would like to know of student support or opposition. Please answer for this in your Billings Center.

"Exchange" Student Sounding Board

by Bruce Madden

Counseling and Testing now offers students a new project available this semester. Program "Exchange", as it is called, will hopefully facilitate life for many UVM students. The "Exchange" is an attempt to offer students a central core watershed for university resources. The best description for the program is given in the summary, "The Exchange will provide a service to students in facilitating life at the university, to the institution in providing feedback useful to growth, and to the Counseling Center in giving us a constant feedback regarding the ebb and flow of student's concerns." In essence, it will offer a sounding board for any problem a student may have with the university structure. Anything from a complaint to a suggestion can be voiced, confidentially if need be. Any range of problems from the University Health Service to curriculum information or red tape with the Bursar's Office can be effectively dealt with.

The Exchange is open at Counseling and Testing Monday through Friday from one to four. There, special sheets are available to lodge the complaint, problem, or suggestion. Sheets are also available at various student centers, such as Billings. Hopefully one of the staff will be able to provide the answers; if not the Center will conduct the needed research to find out what the problem is or actually if one exists. A feedback unit is built into the system so that the university structure can correct the problem.

This semester, as Doctor Does, Director of Counseling and Testing explained, it is only a pilot program to see if students want some kind of a central plug with which to tap university resources. The Exchange will be able to show what the university needs to do and didn't anticipate," Dr.

Does further mentioned.

Another point was the fact that this service could provide a lobbying force in the university. Hopefully, the Exchange will be a neutral third party found somewhere in between the administration and the Student Association, and will offer helpful suggestions and sound complaints. Dr. Does mentioned that this was an effort to get away from the "mental" aspect surrounding the center. This program will bring to light only one of the many facets of Counseling and Testing open to students in a variety of areas.

In the growing complexity of the university in which the student tends to become a smaller and smaller, often unheard, member Program Exchange will offer a useful outlet to many of the frustrations that accompany university life.

An important announcement to every student in the health professions:

NEW SCHOLARSHIPS ARE AVAILABLE IMMEDIATELY.

THEY COVER TUITION AND RELATED COSTS AND PROVIDE AN ANNUAL INCOME OF $5,300 AS WELL.

If a steady salary of $400 a month and paid-up tuition will help you continue your professional training, the scholarships just made possible by the Uniformed Services Health Professions Revitalization Act of 1972 deserve your close attention. Because if you are now in a medical, osteopathic, dental, veterinary, podiatry, or optometry school, or are working toward a PhD in Clinical Psychology, you may qualify. We make it easy for you to complete your studies. You're commissioned as an officer as soon as you enter the program, but remain in student status until graduation. And, during each year you will be on active duty (with extra pay) for 46 days. Naturally, if your academic schedule requires that you remain on campus, you stay on campus and still receive your active duty pay.

Active duty requirements are fair. Basically, you serve one year as a commissioned officer for each year you've participated in the program, with a two year minimum. You may apply for a scholarship with either the Army, Navy or Air Force, and know that upon entering active duty you'll have rank and duties in keeping with your professional training.

The life's work you've chosen for yourself requires long, hard, expensive training. Now we are in a position to give you some help. Mail in the coupon at your earliest convenience for more detailed information.

If You Speak French "Joan" Is For You

by Peter Campbell

The French Department is presenting a production of Jean I. Anouilh's L'Alouette in the Arena Theatre room.

The play is about the life of Joan of Arc, the legendary woman who led France into God's hands, and into victory over the English, but was persecuted as a witch by her countrymen. L'Alouette will be performed, completely in French.

The play is being directed in French as well "so that it may be a more total experience for those involved," said the director of the play, Professor Thomas Geno.

"Modern languages have been approached in the manner of the Classics for too long. One way to deal with this problem is through drama. Plays are language in action," he added.

Professor Geno explained why the French Department chose L'Alouette in particular. "Joan of Arc never ceases to intrigue us; she is an enigma that people are forever trying to formulate an opinion about. The play is itself modern, and yet not an absurdist demonstration of theatrical technique. He went on to explain that while many modern "French play-wrights come from other fields, Anouilh has always been a dramatist. "As far as roles are concerned there are no problems, Anouilh is a very theatrical writer, and as a result he is a true actors' dramatist. Each role is a gem in itself," the director added.

One problem is not pronunciation, as might be expected, rather it is one of accent. "We are dealing with a number of different accents," some are from the southern part of France and Canada, and some are from Parisian, and these accents have to come together in order to make the production more coherent," said Professor Geno.

A unique conglomerate of people have volunteered to help make the production go.

The lead "Joan" is played by Teresa Hwert, a senior at UVM, who is majoring in Theatre and minoring in French, and has acted in a number of past University productions. The role of Warwick is played by Scott Hendrickson, a graduate assistant in the French Department. Bishop Chouchon will be played by Jean-Pierre Detcherashas, a native Frenchman, who teaches at Edmonds Junior High in Burlington. Charles VII is played by Jean-Pierre Lascouwer, another Frenchman, who teaches in the Total Immersion program at Burlington High School. And the Grand Inquisitor is being played by Jacques Gosselin.

Professor Geno said of his own experience, "I started on the boards when I was eight years old, and I have had trouble keeping off them since."

L'Alouette is the first real cooperative effort between the Communications and Theatre

Department and the French Department. A lot of the technical know-how is coming from the Arena Theatre regulars. Gerard Bourcier, a junior Theatre major, who is fortunately fluent in French, is designing both the staging and the lighting. Nancy Haynes is making all of the thirty-three costumes needed. Props are by Kathy Osgood, Christy Sherman is in charge of the technical crew.

While it is true that there will be no translation, this play should be very entertaining for anyone who has some knowledge of French. Nor should a pantomime be expected, for L'Alouette is going to be theatrical excitement in the fullest, and rich with language.

Performances will be on March 16, 17, and 18, in the evenings, with a matinee on Saturday afternoon. Tickets may be reserved at the Arena Theatre box-office for $1.00 with a student ID.

Renoir's "Game" Proves Great

by Mike Carson

The Rules of the Game is begun by a strange title asserting that the film is not meant as social criticism, but rather as entertainment. This sort of touch is neither capricious nor to be taken at face value in a director of Renoir's quality, but neither here is it clever or sarcastic. It is true, more or less, true because Renoir is kind, and gentle, and because there is nothing to criticize. His people, aristocrats of pre-World War II France, are all dead. They have been replaced by a much more lethal, because less self-contained, class.

A group of ladies and gentlemen go to a country estate for a week of shooting. The host invites his mistress; the hostess invites an aviator who has flown the Atlantic in twenty-three hours for her. The sexual complications and their incredible casualness unfold ceaselessly through the film, intercut with scenes of rabbit shooting and charade parties. We see the rules become less and less clear as the game envelops and defeats them, for the rules are the limits and the game required indulgence when they are overstepped. Thus the game is given no means by which to sustain itself. The process of disintegration is telescoped in the film to be allegorical, not critically caricatured. Thus exaggeration is funny and infinitely sad (not tragic), but not cruel.

And indeed Renoir cannot find it in himself to be mean to these pretty people, these tremendously real and rather scared people. They are not harsh, they do not glitter. They are rather thoughtless. The servants line up and beat the brush for game, rabbits and pheasants, who fly out, frightened, to be shot by the masters. The animals run and are bowled over by a single bullet. The lifeless, contorted. The birds flap clumsily in the air and are downed for the dogs. But the first level of potential power of this sequence on film - its horror, its callousness - is left quickly for, and belied by, the second.

This small cruelty is inconsequential; it is impotent by the nature of its perpetrators. The servants, also, are infected with the sad impotence of their masters. These people of a lower class, one by birth with the mythic future conquerors of Europe, are also in the game, and like their masters, they play it in full consciousness of its presence and full powerlessness over its rules. This comes to us clearly in the last scene when the aviator is shot. Neither master nor servant is capable of handling the situation. They are children on holiday, and the reality mustn't touch.

We see that in the last century we have forgotten the true meaning of aristocracy: the total assurance of position which allows for its constant confident chucking away, as in the camaraderie of master and man. This is why the story of the demise of an aristocracy is always, in itself, a sad one.

Contrasted with the pettiness of its entire lifestyle is the realization that the pettiness of the present class of rulers is much more dangerous. Once the aristocracy lost its ability to harm, it was doomed to extinction.

This is how Renoir sees these people, and his camera observes them with humor and with love and with a nondebilitating pity which, tinged with the other two qualities, leaves his characters with whatever dignity they may still by rights retain. The film has the beauty and perfection of sensitive comprehension of its own time. (Renoir himself acts in the movie. He is lovely and somewhat a ham. Whether this be so, or whether a powerful bit of acting, it speaks well of him. He's my man from here on in, as they say.)

At least that was the thought I had when they left the auditorium stage for the last time and that's the most cheerful, optimistic feeling I've had in a long time.

Whose Responsibility?

by Margo Howard

How much responsibility can an individual take for carrying out or condoning actions of his country deemed war crimes by international law? Is it better to follow orders if they are thought to be for the good of the country? Or can a person, in times of national crisis, weaken the chain of command by insubordination and disloyalty? Exactly where does one draw the line?

In these times of a fragile peace in Vietnam, an uncertain situation in Laos, of paradoxes such as convicted murderer Lieutenant Calley being eulogized as a hero and martyr while our returning POW's are declared "war criminals" by the likes of Philip Berrigan, these questions are quite relevant.

They pertain to another tragedy of war. They are the questions raised by the German Defense Attorney Hans Rolfe in the chilling and powerful film Judgement At Nuremberg.

Written by Abby Mann and directed by Stanley Kramer, Judgement At Nuremberg (1961) is the second in a series of six "Great Trail Movies" presented by the Lane Series. It is based not only on any one Nuremberg trial in particular, but is rather a composite of several. Thus, while the characters are fictionalized, the circumstances are taken from history. Actual film clips taken by the British when liberating one of the infamous concentration camps are skillfully woven into the plot, with the dual result of emphasizing the horrible reality of the atrocities done to six million men, women and children - and of turning the stomach of the viewer in the process.

The result is a very timely, very disturbing, and very good film, headed by a cast of stars - Spencer Tracy, Maximilian Schell, Judy Garland, Marlene Dietrich, Richard Widmark, Montgomery Clift, Burt Lancaster and Werner Klemperer - and winner of two Academy Awards.

Maximilian Schell is simply magnificent as the Defense Attorney, representing four prominent German judges - each of whom are charged with crimes against humanity - authorizing and signing the orders to such horrors as sterilization of the so-called "mentally incompetent," execution of Jews on charges of "racial pollution," gassing, vivisection and numerous other atrocities.

Schell won an Academy Award for "Best Actor" in this film. His Attorney Rolfe is simply incredible - calculating, logical, devastating, warm and compassionate, yet as merciless as a cold North wind when cross-examining an adversary - and very much a patriot.

Richard Widmark is excellent as the stiff-necked American Colonel Tad Lawson, Prosecuting Attorney, who weaves his case ever closer with surprise witnesses and damning films.

The three-judge tribunal is headed by Spencer Tracy as the thoughtful, honest Dan Haywood. Not only will he listen to the arguments and testimony presented in the courtroom, he tours the city of Nuremberg and the surrounding area in order to get a better perspective of the German people. He meets the aristocratic German widow Madame Bertholt, whose husband, an army officer, was prosecuted and executed by one of the defendants. Marlene Dietrich is the widow who proves to Haywood that "not all Germans are monsters."

The plot itself moves from point to point with clarity. The prosecution endeavors to clearly present the role each of the defendants took in the crimes they are charged with.

The defense is multi-faceted - first, the comparison of the decrees with laws of a similar nature in the United States. The example of Oliver Wendell Holmes' edict on sterilization laws in Virginia was especially devastating.

The defense then suggests that the orders were in fact valid. Here are some of the most impressive forensic dialogues of the film.

Montgomery Clift plays Rudolf Peterson, a German baker who recounts to the court his seizure and sterilization at the order of one of the defendants. Judy Garland is a fat young housewife whose friendship with a Jewish neighbor her father's age led to his execution on the charges of "racial contamination" and her imprisonment for perjury again on the order of one of the defendants.

It is when Attorney Rolfe, in his line of interrogation, insinuates that these witnesses were perhaps really guilty of the charges brought against them, that the case is blown wide open. Former Judge and defendant Ernst Janning (Burt Lancaster) suddenly and dramatically takes the stand. A man haunted by knowledge too terrible to bear, he evokes the wrath of his comrades and counsel as the truth settles, upon the courtroom like a noxious fog.

Now there remains for Judge Haywood a moral dilemma. Were not others, other nations, in fact, deserving of a share in the responsibility of these crimes? What about the loyalty these men had for their country? A new crisis of war has broken out, and the cooperation of Germany is desperately needed.

Logic and reason battle with right and wrong but, in the words of Judge Haywood, "To be logical is not to be right." And that is as it should be.

String Quartet Plays Well

by Allison Davis

The Tokyo String Quartet performed brilliantly last Tuesday evening, February 20th at the Ira Allen Chapel as part of the Lane Chamber Arts Series. The audience sat spellbound as the four young musicians impeccably performed the works of Schubert, Bartok, Debussy and Haydn.

The group, composed of three men and one woman, are all graduates of the Toho Gakuen Conservatory in Japan. Each of the performers had the opportunity to study as

The Byrds Fly High

by Doug Collette

The most satisfying rock and roll show I've seen this entire school year, produced by St. Michael's, began with a well-paced set by Orphan whose clean harmonies and solid musical punch served to set the tone for the evening. The group commenced with acoustic based music, cooking steadily while gradually working their way up to an energy level that, by the time they finished, was a full, churning boogie. Jonathan Edwards is a totally captivating performer. His stage presence is completely charming and his array of talents is amazing. It would be enough if all he had was his warm, experience singing, but his harp playing is as fast as his nimble acoustic guitar picking, and his original songs are intelligent and expertly arranged. His sidekick, besides playing a mean bass, made his fiddle sing when he and Edwards were joined by a couple members of Orphan. Their musical display of mutual friendship and generosity only increased the already plentiful good feelings in the auditorium.

The Byrds are now a different band than the one Burlington saw last December at UVM. They had some problems Friday night: Chris Hillman, the original Byrds bassist and an unknown drummer had just gotten into the group with Roger McGuinn and Clarence White, and the two newcomers were obviously not fully integrated into the Byrds' stage act. Yet the Byrds I saw last week were, despite their apparent aloofness, enthusiastic, seeming to really enjoy the music they were playing and the audience that was enjoying it.

Most of their set was vintage, definitely vintage, including classics like "Chimes of Freedom," "So You Want To Be a Rock and Roll Star," and two versions of "Mr. Tambourine Man" plus some infectious bluegrass and a touch of Chuck Berry. Hillman's spectacular bass guided the new drummer and provided a steady bottom for McGuinn's jet engine twelve-string and White's outerspace country leads.

The original Byrds were nearly as influential as the Beatles, Dylan and the Stones: one only has to look at the tremendous amount of superb music that has come from them, directly and indirectly, individually and collectively. The new Byrds have the potential to be a force as inspiring in the sixties as were their predecessors in the sixties. At least that was the thought I had when they left the auditorium stage for the last time and that's the most cheerful, optimistic feeling I've had in a long time.

The Underground Revisited.

There was a time when a young woman of college age or a little older shopped in the Underground regularly. But times change. Clothes aren't the alpha and omega in a young woman's life the way they used to be. Jeans and a couple of shirts can get you through the school year. O.K. We'll accept that.

Still, we think there might come a moment when you want something for a special occasion. And when that occasion comes, we invite you to come into the Underground and take a look through our selection of pants, shirts, sweaters and dresses. There's something there for any occasion.

Or, we might say, for all occasions. The young look today is adaptable for any time and place. That means you can afford to invest in an outfit and know that you will get your money's worth. A pants, shirt and sweater outfit isn't going to be worn once and then hung in the closet because it won't go for another occasion. Not at all.

We also invite you to open a limited charge account. Talk to us about it the next time you visit the Underground.

Theatre Group Presents Classic Comedy

by Margo Howland

The Billings Center Theatre Group, in cooperation with the Midway Festival, will present a classic comedy, The Man Who Came To Dinner, on March 9-13 at 8:00 p.m. in the Round Room, Billings Center.

Written by George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart, the play is based on the character of Alexander Woollcott, the drama critic, lecturer, and radio orator of the 1920s and 1930s. The play is a satire on the times to which Kaufman belonged.

In the play, the character based on Woollcott, Sheridan Whiteside, has agreed to come to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley of Ohio only to dip on a piece of ice and become confined in a wheelchair, in their home, for an indeterminate length of time. He makes a rather large pest of himself by completely taking over the household, bringing in numerous friends for dinner and generally getting underfoot the guest that doesn't leave, and doesn't leave, and doesn't leave!

Group, director Chip Towers expressed the need for the Billings Student Activity Center to become more of a true student activities center. While Billings is used for studying, it is also our only existing student union building, Towers said, and there is a definite need for entertainment and activities.

For these reasons the Billings Center Governing Board set up a Program Committee, and the committee created the Billings Center Theatre Group.

The Theatre Group is set up for theatre in all forms, including one-act plays, readings, poetic enactments, and other such forms of entertainment that can be produced almost anywhere in Billings that one's imagination can think of — not only the Round Room, but North Lounge, the Den, You name it. Any student that has an idea for theatre and needs a place to produce it is encouraged to the Billings Center Theatre Group by leaving a note in the Concert Room mailbox.

The committee wishes to enlarge the theatre experience on the UVM campus, and to serve the needs of students in two areas: those who come to work on it, and those who come to enjoy the results.

Great Trial Movies: Hitchcock Drama Is Next

Alfred Hitchcock's courtroom film drama The Paradine Case will be shown on Friday, March 2, as the next movie in the Lane Film Society Series "Great Trial Movies."

There will be two showings of the film in Marsh Life Sciences Building Auditorium: at 7:30 p.m. and 10:00 p.m. Tickets, $1 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door. For advance reservations, telephone 656-3418.

Starring in the film are Gregory Peck, Alida Valli, Charles Laughton, Ethel Barrymore, Ann Todd, Charles Coburn, Louis Jouran and Leo G. Carroll.

Ethel Barrymore received an Oscar nomination for her performance as the nervous wife of the judge.

"The Paradine Case" was Hitchcock's last film produced for David O. Selznick. The brilliant, romantic photography is by Lee Garmes. Joseph von Sternberg's cameraman on "Shanghai Express," "Morocco," and "Dishonored." The movie runs for 115 minutes.

In an interview by Francon Truffaut, Hitchcock spoke of his fascination with the idea of an elegant, upper-class woman suddenly placed in company with the lowest element of society: "an expression of my own fear, that of all normal people who might suddenly have their freedom taken away, and be imprisoned with professional criminals. It's normal to show a hoodlum put in prison, but when it involves a person of class, that involves a contrast of colors that intrigues me enormously."

The next movie on the Lane Great Trial Movie Series is Franz Kafka's "Trial," March

solists themselves, but their dedication to chamber string music led them to form the quartet in 1970. The group is gaining recognition throughout the United States and Europe and is considered to be of the high caliber of such groups as the Budapest and Juilliard String Quartets.

The program opened with the Quartet in a minor, Opus 29, no. 13 by Franz Schubert. All the performers had a lovely, flowing, melodious line. The dynamics were well placed, and were achieved together. The cellist is to be noted as especially fine; the instrument sang with a full, rich tone which enhanced the flowing lines which are so typically Schubert. In the Minuetto-allegro, the music truly came alive, and one could feel the audience move with the group. The technique was superb.

Quartet no. 6 by Bartok was next. Mesto Vivace, a very difficult movement, was played to perfection. The violist is to be noted here. He simply lived the music. Most impressive with this quartet was the subtlety with which contact was made between members for the entrances, cut-offs, tempo and dynamics.

Mesto Marcia was rhythmically extremely difficult. So obvious here in particular was the high caliber of musicianship of the individual performer. Unique sounds, available only to stringed instruments, were employed with great success.

Then came the Debussy Quartet in G minor, Opus 10, "Anima et tres decise" had very technical, but flowing lines. "Asses vil et bien rythme" used a great deal of pizzicato, which could have been mistaken for harp.

The favorable response of the audience prompted an encore of Haydn's Opus 76, no. 1. It was magnificent.

The group was indeed superb. The musicians were so free from the page that they were able to successfully attempt innovative ideas on their instruments, ideas other groups would not dare try. It was certainly a fine way to pass an evening.

Sermonizer Makes Good

Whatever else has emerged in the world of show business in 1971, it will be remembered as the year that actor-humorist David Steinberg became an established and prominent part of the American scene.

David's early education was at the Hebrew Theological Seminary in Chicago and after living and studying in Jerusalem for a year, he returned to Chicago where he received an M.A. in English Literature at the University of Chicago. Steinberg started his acting career as a member of the famous Second City company — the improvisational theatre which had already provided training and a springboard for such prominent artists as Mike Nichols, Elaine May, Barbara Harris and Alan Arkin. David spent five years with Second City in New York, Los Angeles and London working as a writer and a director as well as a performer.

David made his Broadway debut in the hit musical revue The Mad Show and subsequently starred in two Broadway plays, "Carry Me Back to Morning Heights" and "The World of Sholem Aleichem."

David's hilarious and irreverent sermons which were humanized versions of Biblical myths and which became a standard part of David's performances were recorded and Time Magazine recognized and raved about the phenomenon which they called "a pop version of God-is-dead theology." Steinberg became a front page news when one of his sermons turned out to be the cause for the cancellation of the Smothers Brothers Show. David ended up however with his own television series, "The Music Scene" and had already written the distinguished NBC-TV special, "The World of Sholem Aleichem."

SA Will Sponsor First-Ever Burlington Ice Show

The Student Association of the University of Vermont soon will sponsor an ice show of champions, believed to be the first of its kind ever to appear in Burlington. The show will open Winter Weekend on Friday, March 9th at 8 p.m. in Gutterston Field House. Skaters with national and international rankings will appear in "Ice Time '73" presented by the Skating Club of Lake Placid in cooperation with the Champlain Valley Skating Club.

Featured are six skaters recently returned from the national competition in Minneapolis, Minnesota. Additionally, there will be high test skaters from one of the oldest and most famous skating centers in the country, Lake Placid, New York. Local talent will include gold medalist Cathy Ryan and Barbara Levitt performing a similar pairs number.

Performing in the Senior Ladies category will be the skating sensation Priscilla Hill of Lexington, Massachusetts. At nine years of age Priscilla set a world record by being the youngest skater ever to win any nation's gold medal for figure skating. Now only eleven, Priscilla has the distinction of being the Eastern United States Bronze Medalist in Senior Ladies, and is a favorite subject of sport writers throughout the country. She has been featured in two national magazines.

In the Senior Men's category will be Stephen Savino from Westwood, New Jersey. Stephen is the current Eastern United States Men's Champion, and does explosive triple jumps as part of his repertoire.

Cozette Cady and Jack Courtney, currently training with the United States' leading pair and ice dance specialist, Ron Ludington, in Wilmington, Delaware, will head the pairs category. Jack was World Champion in roller skating before switching to the ice. Cozette and Jack won the Nebelhorn Trophy in international competition this past summer at Obersdorf, Germany.

In ice dancing, the 1973 national bronze medalists, Jane Pankey and Richard Horne, will also be coming from Wilmington. In 1970 and 1971 they were World Roller Dance Champions. Their precision and verve on the ice since then have pleased crowds across the country.

A full house is expected, so everyone is encouraged to get tickets early. Prices are $1.00 for students with UVM SA ID cards and $2.00 for all other spectators. Tickets may be purchased from the Bookstore and Billings Center.

Nuremberg and the surrounding areas in order to get a better perspective of the German people. He meets the aristocratic German widow Madame Bertholt, whose husband, an army officer, was prosecuted and executed by one of the defendants. Marlene Dietrich is the widow who proves to Haywood that "not all Germans are monsters."

The plot itself moves from point to point with clarity. The prosecution endeavors to clearly present the role each of the defendants took in the crimes they are charged with. The defense is multi-faceted first, the comparison of the decrees with laws of a similar nature in the United States. The example of Oliver Wendell Holmes' edict on sterilization laws in Virginia was especially devastating.

The defense then suggests that the orders were in fact valid. Here are some of the most impressive forensic dialogues of the film.

Montgomery Clift plays Rudolf Peterson, a German baker who recounts to the court his seizure and sterilization at the order of one of the defendants, Judy Garland is a fat young housewife whose friendship with a Jewish neighbor her father's age led to his execution on the charges of "racial contamination" and her imprisonment for perjury again on the order of one of the defendants.

It is when Attorney Rolle, in his line of interrogation, insinuates that these witnesses were perhaps really guilty of the charges brought against them, that the case is blown wide open. Former Judge and defendant Ernst Janning (Burt Lancaster) suddenly and dramatically takes the stand. A man haunted by knowledge too terrible to bear, he evokes the wrath of his comrades and counsel as the truth settles upon the courtroom like a noxious fog.

Now there remains for Judge Haywood a moral dilemma. Were not others, other nations, in fact, deserving of a share in the responsibility of these crimes? What about the loyalty these men had for their country? A new crisis of war has broken out, and the cooperation of Germany is desperately needed.

Logic and reason battle with right and wrong but, in the words of Judge Haywood, "To be logical is not to be right." And that is as it should be.

String Quartet Plays Well

by Allison Davis

The Tokyo String Quartet performed brilliantly last Tuesday evening, February 20th at the Ira Allen Chapel as part of the Lane Chamber Arts Series. The audience sat spellbound as the four young musicians impeccably performed the works of Schubert, Bartok, Debussy and Haydn.

The group, composed of three men and one woman, are all graduates of the Toho Gakuin Conservatory in Japan. Each of the performers had the opportunity to study as to today's bridal ensembles - and one that's young in heart. In keeping with the simplicity of the original prong-set solitaire, these, however, have a definitely modern verve with their graceful, sweeping curves.

Skiers Crowned Eastern Champs

Last weekend the University of Vermont Ski Team, for the first time in modern history, was the team to upset both Dartmouth and Middlebury for the distinction of being the finest ski team in the east—the Eastern Intercollegiate Ski Champions. The win brings not only the Eastern Championship to the young Vermont team but also the top eastern berth in the upcoming 1973 NCAA Championships to be held at the Middlebury College Snowbowl, March 8-10.

In the words of UVM's outstanding second year coach, Chip LaCasse, "It was a total team effort, just as the NCAA's will have to be now." LaCasse went on to explain that the Catamount Skiers totally dominated the first day of competition (Friday) with Chris Brown's win in the downhill and Arnie Lewis' first place in the cross-country. It appeared on Friday night that no team had any hope of challenging Vermont for the win based on the first day point spread and the fact that UVM had consistently outpaced the rival teams in the slalom and the jump—all season—the two remaining events.

As it turned out, only two Vermont skiers finished the slalom Saturday morning. Coupled with Middlebury's fine showing and UVM's defeat on the steep and fast Ross Trail course, the Cats found themselves in fourth place going into the jump. It was true that LaCasse was speaking of a total team effort. The jumping team knew that only by their dedication to a team victory could Vermont remain in contention for the prize they had dreamed of for years. Hampered by an injured hip suffered in a wild flip before the first postponement, Petter Kongali went on to yet another victory and enough points to capture the eastern crown for UVM. Kongali's performance was followed closely by the entire Vermont Team and established once and for all that Carnival Skiing is a team sport and only the most talented and closely knit teams will consistently be winners.

Women Cagers Crush St. Lawrence 63-29

by Sally Rouse

This past week was the scene of some happiness and sadness. St. Lawrence was the district of happiness. The women's team beat St. Lawrence by a score of 63-29. Chris Morgan was the high scorer for the UVM team. There was a good solid defense played by the UVM team not letting any inside shots be taken.

The sadness was at Plymouth State where the UVM team dropped its first game of the season by a score of 56-42. Plymouth played a hard-fought game and the UVM team was ahead until the third quarter. Chris Morgan was the high scorer with 17 points.

The JV team lost a squeaker to Plymouth 43-41. The teams were equally matched and it was close all the way. The excitement came in the last few seconds when the score was 43-41 and UVM had the ball. To some chance of fate, Plymouth came up with the ball and the buzzer blew.

Thursday against Johnson State College. They now have a 2-1 record. The varsity team has a hard two week schedule left. The Women's Varsity team has applied to the Eastern Tournament, and is waiting anxiously for a positive reply. This year the tournament is held at Northeastern University in Boston. The team has gone in the past two years and wants to keep attending for many years to come. "On to the tournament."

UVM Ends Streak With Victory Over Norwich

by Michael Schwartz

After an eight game losing streak the University of Vermont basketball team found a team they could fool around with. Norwich was 2-15 beating two New England powerhouses, St. Anselm and Johnson St. The result was obvious as UVM beat Norwich 74-47 in front of a private audience of 217 fans.

The Cats were slow at the start. With 5:02 left in the first half they trailed 21-15. But from that point on, UVM showed what they could do to a team that really has problems. The Cats closed the half with 14 points in a row before a Norwich player hit a shot at the buzzer to make the half time score 29-23 in favor of UVM.

The second half was much better. George Peredy and Dan Oslar helped widen the gap to 37-27. Gradually UVM widened their lead. When Bernie Palmer and Terry Green made baskets it was 46-30. The bench was emptied with 6:00 minutes play and UVM leading 57-37. The rest of the game was pure enjoyment for a UVM bench that had not won a game since January 23.

For the Cats the key to the game was balance. Coach Salzborg was even able to play the two freshmen guards Jeff Niles and Brian Donahue in the middle of the game. There was really no way the Cats could lose to a frustrated Norwich team. Off the boards UVM had a 53-26 advantage. They shot 50% compared to the Cadets 30% from the field. The Cats were able to fast break with more success than in games against taller opponents. They were able to pass well, take the high percentage shot, and take out the frustration of losing eight in a row.

The balance is seen in the scoring statistics. Greg Ashford was high man with 13 points and 9 rebounds. Peredy and Mario Macias had 10 and Green 11. Palmer played a strong all around game contributing 6 points, 8 rebounds, and 5 assists. Even Gabe Vicks hit 6 points in the final 4 minutes of the game. This was all accomplished without Jos Greco, still nursing a foot injury. Norwich was led by Scott Williams with 10 points. Eddie Jenkins added nine.

The Cadets were having their problems; one foul shot they made was disallowed because a player had stepped over the line trying for a rebound. Another time a UVM player did the same thing but the Norwich foul shooter missed all three foul shots.

Putting the game in perspective, Vermont did what they had to. Playing Norwich was more agreeable than playing UMass, who has clinched this year's Yankee Conference championship and has hopes for a post-season tournament bid. However it is Swim Team . . .

8's and an unheard of 9. His points totalled 235.60. I've since heard that Byrne is expected to win the diving events in the New England's this week, and it wouldn't surprise me at all!

Bob Nold performed impressively for U.V.M. He drew a few "ahs" from the crowd himself with several smooth, perfect from the start, forward dives. His point tally was 203.45. Don Wood also dove for U.V.M. accumulating 137.50 points. Although not up to his usual form on Saturday, Wood has been a strong contender all season.

The senior relay team of Potikhen, Ackerson, Alexy, and Willard wound up this last home meet with an exciting 400 yd. freestyle relay. Their strength and speed, being unbeatable—the seniors reigned!

And so the meet ended. UVM-76, UNH-35—a final smashing victory to conclude our season. As spectators filed out of the natatorium and UNH and UVM shouted team cheers, senior swimmers, a statistician, and Coach Leggett landed in the pool. Swimmers were even seen jumping madly into the pool through upstairs windows.

Hurley Leads Cats To 13-3 Triumph

by Fred Coombs

It was Center at Little Big Horn, Lee at Appomattox and Napoleon at Waterloo all wrapped into one as the Norwich Cadets suffered one of the worst defeats in their collegiate hockey history. It was a massacre as the Cats shot'em out of their bootstraps to the tune of a 13-3 score.

Chris Hurley, who collected his first collegiate hat trick led the barrage by taking a pass from Willie MacKinnon and socking it home from 3 feet out at 7:54.

Then Tim O'Connell barged in on Norwich goalie Bill Cantwell, faked and passed to Bill Koch on right wing who slapped it in from 10 feet out at 10:19.

Willie MacKinnon stole the puck in UVM's zone, broke in on Cantwell and tickled the twine for an unassisted, short-handed goal at 11:43.

Norwich scored on the powerplay as Tom Cadigan flipped it over Eckerson's shoulder at 13:00.

Roger Mallette made it 4-1 on an instant replay of MacKinnon's goal, also short-handed at 13:59.

Norwich came back again on the powerplay with a backhander over Eckerson by Don Mountford at 14:48.

Chris Hurley got his second goal, a slap shot from five feet at 15:09. The score after the first period was 5-2 with most of the bloodshed yet to come.

Fred Hunt started off the second round by knocking in his own rebound from 10 feet out at 0:53. Ken Yeates came back on a blue line at 1:37.

The Cats were really rolling as Hurley collected the hat trick at 2:06 on a 3 foot conversion from MacKinnon. Cantwell swallowed another as Ted Castle connected on a rebound at 18:10. Doug Howard tipped one in at 18:32 to end Norwich's feeble attack.

Leading 9-3 going into the third round, the Cats showed to mercy as they continued to use the Cadets. At 0:15 Patrick Wright tipped in a Brad Cooke slap shot past Cantwell's left side.

Hunt sent Cantwell reeling out of the game as he hit from an impossible angle, catching the short side at 0:31.

Castle smashed in a rebound off a Ted Child slap shot, seating goalie Jim Pesock at 13:23.

The Black Aces finished it off as Jack Clifford lit the lamp at 14:54.

UVM played to perfection leaving the Norwich crowd mumbling such choice adjectives as "Amazing!" "Incredible!"

Cantwell and his friends definitely did not have one of their better games and to think they are used third in the playoffs is a joke.

The stars of the game were Hurley, MacKinnon, Castle, Hunt, Yeates, etc.

VAL CARTER!

Found a different station on the AM band around 580. That's us. WRUV-AM. Not FM. AM. We appear in special places, like dorms, and the Den. We might even be in your dining hall. We don't get off campus much because of the Federal Communications Commission but where we are, we are definitely. That's because we have new transmitters. These transmitters really put our signal across.

what is a WRUV-AM?

- a student owned and operated carrier-current radio station
- where any student of the University can be a Disc Jockey, Newsmen, or Entertainer without the requirement of license
- a number to call or write to announce rides, activities, and get a favorite record played. Dial 3220
- a friend and fellow student who's there 24 hours a day in one form or another (we rebroadcast CHOM-FM when not originating student programming.)
- hockey games, remotes, campus information, radio drama, music, ABC news.
- a good time for everyone.

the great radio rip-off!

We feel that our listeners are really special people and we'd like to do something for you. We've got a pair of Yamaha All-around 1 skis courtesy of the Ski Rack that we're going to give to one of you out there. All you have to do is fill out the coupon. Send it by campus mail or drop it off yourself at our station. By March 8th, then listen to WRUV-AM because we'll draw one name each hour of student programming. If it's your name you'll have 60 minutes to call and claim the skis. We'll keep drawin' till somebody schuss's away with the skis.

University Year for Action (UYA) was recruiting UVM students last week and was drawing crowds with their revolving slide projector.

UYA is funded by ACTION, the parent of Peace Corps and VISTA as well. The original grant from the ACTION agency was extended through the 18-month period ending August, 1974.

There has been a really fine student reception," reported Chris Maylahn. "Close to eighty students have applied for September placement." About thirty-five students will be accepted in all for this fourth round of UYA volunteers.

The work will be centered in Burlington. About half of the group will work in ongoing projects in areas such as rural health and consumer protection. The others will staff new projects currently being developed by the UYA staff.

The same guidelines apply to the forthcoming group of volunteers as for previous years.

The applicant must be a full-time student, graduate or undergraduate. It is felt that freshmen should have more experience with school life first before they consider applying for this type of work. The volunteers consist mostly of juniors and seniors.

UYA participants must live off campus, preferably in a low-income area. The volunteer receives a government stipend to cover living expenses which he will incur during his year as a UYA volunteer.

"The work is full time forty hours plus per week," explained Maylahn. "Depending on the nature and responsibilities of the work."

UVM-UYA volunteers earn a full year's academic credit. Each student's individual academic program is aimed at integrating his project needs with his personal and academic needs.

"Courses are selected which relate to the volunteer work. The volunteer and instructor jointly design the courses and decide what the requirements and contents will be. The field experience becomes the major part of the course," Maylahn added.

"You get help with problems that you are having. The professors are your academic resources."

David Osgood is the new field supervisor from Montpelier. He is there to help the students with problems they might be having on the job. John Engroff is coordinator of the whole program. He works out of the OVP office in Mansfield House.

The UYA volunteers agree that this is a good project for those students interested in volunteer work but don't have the time with academic pressures.

"Often education stagnates the student so that he learns without applying it. This program offers a chance to put skills to work."

The UYA volunteers working on projects now were helping with the recruiting. They felt this was important because they "feel an allegiance to the program."

Al Zampini is presently working on the TAP project. TAP's concern is bringing good piped water to those who are in need.

Michele Ferland works on the Bread and Law Task Force, and Jean Granger worked to institute the Breakfast program which is already underway serving breakfast to children at the Fresh Ground Coffee House.

Nancy Stevens works in Vermont Legal Aid in Montpelier while Jim Abrams works at Waterbury doing drug counseling, and legal aid for the involuntary commitments.

Their aim is to instruct instructors in March and April every Wednesday night at seven o'clock at the Newman Center starting March 14. These instructors, in turn, will conduct Bicycle Clinics in May, which is Bicycle Month. This will coincide with the plan to set up bicycle lanes on the roads.

There is a great need for instructors to carry out the bicycle safety aims, to register bikes, and to add to the support for legislation.

Training will be provided through the program. More information about both of these projects may be obtained through Mansfield House, or call 656-2062.

Problem Of "Tenure And Its Alternatives" Discussed By College Faculty Union Panel

by Jim Bradley

The UVM Union of College Faculty held a panel discussion Tuesday evening, Feb. 26, on "Tenure and Its Alternatives." Following the panel was a meeting. There were a dozen union members in attendance including the two panelists, Prof. Bob Detenbeck of Physics and Prof. Will Miller of Philosophy, out of a total Union of College Faculty membership of some 75.

The panel discussion was short and informal. Detenbeck opened with a brief discussion of the quota system of granting tenure, the system currently used by Middlebury College. Under this system, each department would have the number of its tenured faculty members determined by a set percentage, such as between one and 60% of the whole. If a department already had 60% of its members tenured, then no tenure could be granted to any new member, regardless of his or her qualifications. The advantage to this method, pointed out Detenbeck, is that a teacher would know when he or she is first hired what the chances of being rehired are.

Certain disadvantages were pointed out, particularly that a quota system is too inflexible. For instance, out of five professors coming up for a decision on tenure in a particular year, the quota for that year might allow for tenure to be given to two of them. But perhaps of the five there are three truly outstanding individuals who are clearly better than anyone else in the university could expect to replace them with. The University does not want to do it, but by the quota system one of them would have to be let go. On the other hand, in another year there might be none of the five who is considered truly worthy of being tenured, but with the quota system calling for two, two would be rehired anyway.

Another objection raised to a quota system was that it would tend to set tenured faculty members against non-tenured. Also, a floating body of young teachers perceiving themselves with no future at an institution because of filled quotas might not take part in the full life of the place.

In his short talk, Prof. Miller suggested a system of renewable contracts as an alternative to tenure. By this system, teachers would be hired for a long-term period, such as five or seven years, with provision made for rehiring if certain specific conditions were met, specific conditions negotiated by the faculty union and the administration and written into the contract. The long-range view of the contract system, said Miller, would be to remove tenure altogether. He emphasized, however, that if a new contract system were adopted, it should not apply retroactively to anyone already here at UVM.

Objections to the long-term contract system were raised. Prof. Huck Gutman of the English department pointed out that with the contract system there would be an economic incentive for the administration to not rehire the high-salaried twenty-five year old. He also expressed concern over the lack of job security the older person would have, especially in the face of our society's tendency to throw aside its older people.

Miller suggested that one alternative would be a system in which tenure could be attained after a certain lengthy term of service, such as 20 years, which would help protect the older and higher paid faculty. After suggested as possibilities were an earlier retirement age, and a part-time teaching option for senior faculty.

In the meeting, the major objection raised to a contract system was that it would require the protection of a strong union behind it to be effective. Without a strong union, both job security and academic freedom would be threatened. Specifically, if the contract system were to work, the administration would have to honor it, rehiring faculty members as provided by contract if they lived up to the terms of their negotiated contracts. There could be no assurance that the university administration would not break those provisions unless the faculty were united to the extent that they would stand behind any one of their fellows who was being mistreated. It was pointed out during the meeting that the problem now is that a strong union clearly does not exist, as evidenced by the scant dozen people in attendance, and that there is no evidence that the union is about to grow considerably stronger in the near future.

Behind the tenure argument lies one major fact: There are presently more people around who want to be college professors than there are teaching jobs available. It looks like the situation will become increasingly tight in the next years. Whether the system of hiring and firing finally used is the present one, or a contract one, or a quota one, the fact remains that the competition for a career in college teaching will remain very high. There will be a lot of candidates for each position, meaning escalating competition between people, and a dog-eat-dog, survival of the fittest kind of situation.

In an attempt to deal with the question of what will happen to all these people who don't make it, but who are nonetheless useful, and intelligent, and can teach, and are human beings after all, Prof. Gutman offered the possibility of a continuing education program.

Three Candidates Compete In Race For Student Association Presidency

by Barbara Frankel

Three candidates, Sig Heller, Alan King and Rob Desautels, have entered the upcoming Student Association Presidential Race which will be conducted on March 19, 20, and 21. Amid much speculation, a coalition consisting of three students, Senate Chairperson Jim Sloman, Suzanne Goulet and Mary Ellen Pisanelli, decided not to run for reasons undisclosed at this time.

Sig Heller, current President of the S.A., is a sophomore from Brooklyn, N.Y. stated that he is not running on any set platform. "I'm a student and I'm interested in seeing that the University be changed. I want to improve the intellectual and aesthetic value of this campus," he commented. Heller added, "The S.A. involves itself too much outside and not enough with specific student wants and needs. This campus is apathetic, we should try and ask people what they want. S.A. can learn a little from other campus organizations."

Alan King, senator from Phi Gamma Delta, expressed his belief that "it would be really nice if we could get back to practical matters rather than debating philosophical matters. I am worried about the apathy and the image the Student Association has with students." King, a junior from North Falmouth, Mass., further stated,

"The S.A. has been literally taken over by 'concerned students.' Somehow we should try to equalize their power, perhaps by an increase of the number of town senators. I don't think the S.A. should be taken over by any interest group."

The third candidate, Rob Desautels, a sophomore from Barre, Vt. and a proponent of the proposed new Senate constitution, commented, "As President, I would like to decentralize power, get more people involved, more attendance at S.A. meetings and give the students the new constitution which would give them an input at university committees and the Board of Trustees. They need to learn why things are happening, not just that they do."

All three candidates expressed their views on the current issue of sending S.A. funds to the Bac Mai Hospital in Indochina. King and Heller voiced similar opinions, while Desautels took a different stand. Commented King, "I'm all for spending S.A. money in the university as the students wanted it in the last referendum. The students' opinions were stated and I don't think the matter should have been brought up again. It sets a dangerous precedent because if this passes, you can pass all kinds of things. The people who sponsored the Bac Mai motions should have done what other groups do—solicit funds on campus."

Heller similarly stated, "I don't feel that the money should be sent because the S.A. is involved too much outside. The December referendum passed the student body by an overwhelming majority. Some groups in the Senate don't listen to what others want." Desautels disagreed when he said, "It's such a minor issue. It's only $500, such a small percentage of the S.A. funds. If the Financial committee supported OVP, there is no reason not to support Bac Mai. Since so much has changed since December, the Students opinion has changed. The amount of money is incidental, it's getting the S.A. to back it that counts."

Desautels does not support the current referendum which wants to give the S.A. President the power to veto. He commented, "The presidential veto gives absolute power; it goes against what the S.A. is for. The President then becomes god's arm of the Senate. He should be loyal to the Senate, the Senate should not be loyal to him." Heller voiced a dissenting view, "I like the veto the way it stands. But you have to be careful that the President does not use this for his own benefit. If the President doesn't overuse it, the veto is needed." King offered a third view when he stated, "The veto should be

by Dan Haslam

A lengthy Senate meeting of the Student Association heard discussion Tuesday night over ratification of a new constitution for that body.

The major change in the proposed constitution over the existing one was the implementation of a policy to send 7 student representatives to the Board of Trustees to act with full voting privileges at both Board committee meetings and full-Board sessions.

Under the proposal, a student representative would be sent to each of the 7 standing committees of the Board of Trustees. The student representative, elected by the student body, would co-chair a standing committee of the Student Association which would correspond closely to a standing committee of the Board.

At a noonday press conference held on Tuesday, members of the Senate workshop which drafted the new constitution explained the uncertain future of the constitution. Ratification of it by the Senate is required, whenupon it will be submitted for the approval of the student body in a referendum. The Board of Trustees must then approve the new constitution, as does the Vermont legislature for a charter change.

Further Senate action on the proposal will be a priority matter at the next meeting of the Senate on March 13. The Second Annual Blues Festival was announced tentatively for April 14 when leading blues artists are scheduled to appear in concert. Speculatively, Lightnin' Hopkins, Howlin' Wolf, Freddie King, and John and Lee Hooker will appear at the concert. Big Mama Thornton and the Otis Rush Blues Band are more definite prospects for the festival, which is being produced by the Community Medium. All profits will benefit the NAACP, and tickets are expected to be $3 for UVM student advance sales, and a general admission price of around $3.50 at the door.

The Finance Committee presented 1974 budget requests for $147,000 by recognized organizations, with only $137,000 in anticipated revenues next year. Tom Grant advised that only 85% of the budget should be allocated during budget hearings, the remaining 15% should be left for allocation during the academic year. He suggested that all senators attend the budget hearings to understand the financial situation of the

by Jim Bradley

The Experimental Program of UVM, in its fourth year now, is designed to offer an alternative to the regular program for the first two years of college to randomly selected freshmen who choose to join it. A number of questions often arise concerning it. What is experimental about it? How is it different from the regular program? What are its goals? Has it been successful? What problems does it face?

Jon Fackler, the UVM History Professor who heads the EP, explains that the most important experimental aspect of the program has been the attempt to look to the general personal development of its students, not only to their intellectual growth. Behind this attempt lies a philosophy of education which stresses that the intellectual growth of the student is incomplete, even if possible, without the growth of the student as a person. Filling up a head with facts and ideas by itself accomplishes nothing worthwhile. Only when a person sees how the facts and ideas can be applied to his or her own thought, experience, present life, and future goals do they become meaningful. Fackler calls that which they are after "active knowledge, the kind you don't need to write down in a notebook to remember."

The EP has tried a different organizational approach. Rather than basing instruction on a departmental level with the students going to the professors, the professors are, in effect, brought to the

CALENDAR/ANNOUNCEMENTS

Applications For Slade Hall 1973-74

The French Residence Hall, La Maison Française, will be open during the academic year, 1973-74 to Sophomore, Junior and Senior Men and Women who can and want to use the French Language as their prime means of communication.

Those students desiring to live in La Maison Française next year should fill out and sign a special form which can be obtained in the Romance Language Department in the Secretary's Office, Room 520 Waterman, between 9:00 am and 12:00 noon, and 1:00 pm and 4:30 pm, Thursday, March 8th through Friday, March 16th. Every applicant should sign a list posted in the Romance Language Department in the Secretary's Office for an interview with Mademoiselle Lesdelinger or call her at Ext. 3389.

Order of Priority:
1. Students who intend to major in French are encouraged to live in La Maison Française.
2. Students planning to spend a year in France under the VOSP are encouraged to precede their overseas experience by living in La Maison Française.
3. Seniors planning to teach French should plan to spend at least a year in La Maison Française.

4. Students currently living in La Maison Française and those returning to the U.S. after a year in Nice, France, with the VOSP.
5. All other interested students.
More information about La Maison Française may be obtained from Mrs. Gené, Mademoiselle Lesdelinger or any other French instructor.

Raft Race Clarifications

CLARIFICATION OF THE DIVISIONS OF THE RAFT RACE

1. All male: Any raft but a "torpedo" raft containing an all male crew.
2. All female: Any raft but a "torpedo" raft containing an all female crew.
3. Mixed: Any raft but a "torpedo" raft containing a crew with at least one member of the opposite sex.
4. "Torpedo" Rafts: "Torpedo" rafts are rafts made up with airplane wing tanks, pontoons or any such flotation which gives the raft a special catamaran-like streamlining, not usually unique to rafts.
5. All Male or Mixed "Torpedo": A "torpedo" raft containing an all male crew or a crew containing at least one female.
6. All Female "Torpedo": A "torpedo" raft containing an all female crew.

If not enough rafts of any division enter the race so as not to make a legitimate division they will be placed into another division. Placement of rafts will be in all cases left to the judgement of the race officials. He will try to be consistent and fair in his placements.

The raft race is to be a fun occasion and not an athletic competition. The trophies themselves are merely tokens of your efforts, and are to be taken in the spirit of the race.

UVM Baroque Ensemble Presents Free Concert

The University of Vermont Baroque Ensemble will be performing in Billings Center on the evenings of March 14 and 15. Admission is free but tickets must be acquired prior to the concert. They may be picked up in Billings Center. The program will consist entirely of Bach, ranging from music for a solo soprano, to be sung by Jill Lewis of Stowe, to various types of baroque music performed by members of the UVM music department on strange baroque instruments. Professor Metcalfe, conductor of the Baroque Ensemble, requests that all ticket holders not attending the concert, return the tickets to the SA desk.

Getting To Know People

An extraordinary new international student program has been developed by the British Universities North America Club, a non-profit London-based student organization. Called the Student Guest Program, it has been founded and administered by two American students currently studying in the United Kingdom.

"We felt the need," says one of the students, Richard H. Witmer, Brown '74, "to provide British students with an opportunity to get to know their American counterparts as we have come to know them. Unfortunately, many of them travel in the United States without ever meeting Americans of their own age group. The program is hoping to get these students in touch with Americans who might like to invite them into their homes for a week, and who might enjoy a reciprocal invitation at some future date."

To this end, the Program directors have embarked on a campaign to acquaint American students all over the U.S. with the details of this program, and to match those interested with a British student who wishes to visit the American's locality at a mutually convenient time during the spring or summer vacations. The British guest, naturally, will have a return invitation to his host for a visit to the United Kingdom. The Program will place both students in communication

Pre-Cana Class

The next marriage preparation series (pre-Cana) will begin Tuesday, March 13, 7:30 p.m. at the Cunningham Newman Center. The series will continue six consecutive Tuesday evenings. The series includes presentations of sexuality, communication, finances and religious aspects of marriage. No charge.

"Modern Israel"

State University College at Oneonta, New York, in cooperation with Hebrew University, Haifa University, and Bar-Ilan University in Israel, and the Department of Education and Culture of the Jewish Agency, is offering its seventh academic program in Israel in July and August, 1973. The overseas program will be for an eight week period and will award nine semester hours of credit to students completing the academic work satisfactorily.

"Modern Israel" is for students who desire an intensive study of Israel's economic, social, political, religious, educational, and scientific institutions; an opportunity for research on a particular aspect of the country; and a humanizing broadening contact with old-new Israel.

Participation for both courses is limited to teachers, and undergraduate and graduate students who can meet the entrance requirements of the State University of New York, and who have a serious purpose for participating. There are no language requirements.

Dr. Yonah Alexander, Professor of International and Foreign Area Studies of the State University College at Oneonta, will be the Director of this program for the seventh consecutive summer. During the 1968-69 and 1969-70 academic years he was Resident Director for the full-year State University of New York programs in Israel at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem and the Tel Aviv University.

Persons desiring further information may write Professor Alexander at State University College, Oneonta, New York 13820, or the Department of Education and Culture of the Jewish Agency, 515 Park Avenue, New York, New York, 10022. As only a limited number of enrollees will be accepted, early application is recommended.

Dean Corrigan Elected To

AACTE Board Of Directors

Dean Corrigan, Dean of the College of Education at the University of Vermont has been elected to the Board of Directors of the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education, which represents the 1650 institutions preparing educational personnel in the United States. On February 20th at the Board of Directors meeting of the Association in Chicago, he presented a position statement

"The Role of Universities in Serving the Public Interest." The statement suggested ways that university research and training could help to build healthy, human communities, and be made more meaningful in the process. The news release from AACTE announcing Dr. Corrigan's election referred to his other professional experiences. He is currently president of the New England Teacher Preparation Association. He is the vice-chairman of the Vermont Title III and the Education Professions Development Act Advisory Councils.

Corrigan is a member of the Office of Education's Commission on the Undergraduate Preparation of Educational Personnel and chairman of the dean's subcommittee for that Commission. In addition, he is a member of the Office of Education's National Advisory Council-Teacher Development for Desegregation of Schools. He is also a member of Kappa Delta Pi's National Commission on Educational Problems.

The author of several AACTE publications, Dr. Corrigan wrote "Teacher Education for the Next 20 Years," a report given at the 14th Biennial School for Executives. He is also the author of "Affiliated Schools and Research and Development Centers," which appeared in Partnership in Teacher Education, an AACTE/Association for Teacher Education publication. Dr. Corrigan is a former member of the Advisory Board of the Journal of Teacher Education and is the former chairman of the Association of Teacher Educators' Commission on the Implications of Recent Research on Teaching in Teacher Education.

Death Of A Skier

Douglas McGowen is dead. It will probably be said that his death was needless — and it probably was. His death may be used as yet another example of why college students "ought to get back down to studying like the old days and forget all this other foolishness."

Doug McGowen died this week while preparing for the N.C.A.A. Ski Championship at the Middlebury College Snow Bowl. Along with his University of Nevada teammates, he had traveled a long way to compete in these races and it is not at all fitting or proper for his reward to be a violent crash against an oak tree at sixty miles an hour. Yet, what happened to Doug McGowen, or for that matter to David Allen, who was killed in last year's national championship downhill at Winter Park, Colorado, was an act of fate, a human error, an element of sport.

Part of going to college, perhaps the largest part, is the fact that whenever young people gather they are bound to pit their talents of mind and body against one another. Man has recognized that physical maturity must accompany mental maturity for either to be complete. Doug McGowen was a participant in a gathering of this nation's finest young athletes, competing in the mountains of Vermont, pitted against each other in a display of the talents of both body and mind, yet united together in a respect for the idea of complete development.

Certainly Doug McGowen's life will never be complete. But with equal certainty it can be said that the heights he had reached in such a short time far surpass that of most young people and indeed far surpass those individuals who criticize intercollegiate athletics as a general waste of time, often too dangerous and beyond the bounds of "college education."

Douglas McGowen is dead, but he would be the first to fight for the complete development of youth — the development of both mind and body.

New Future Forecast For Environmental Groups

by Gene Benadon

CO-OPTED is a word that has been widely used by many to refer to a person or a movement that has been defeated or forced to join the opposition. The environmental movement has been co-opted. There are strongholds. There are also many who espouse the case but have also been co-opted. There are few true social ecologists left in the environmental movement, or in the country.

What is needed are new ways to analyze the problems and the various aspects of the environment. New ways to look at environmental problems in relation to the overall ecological system. When in Montpelier or Washington a problem is considered it is considered by a certain group of people who have a certain stake in the status quo. A prime example of this is the question of the electric power rates for the state of Vermont. Traditionally the user pays more per unit of energy the less he uses. Hence the big users pay the least rate per unit of energy. Presently there is a bill in the legislature to equalize the rate system. It would occur to me that a reverse scale of rates is in order. True, a radical approach of the problem. Is it not also radical to think that the ecosystem is not finite and that the United States can go on using all the energy it wants to for as long as it wants to.

Over and above the analysis of the problem is the action that must take place to right the situation. There must be a constant monitoring of those that espouse the action in the environmental arena. This is true of all levels of government. As we can see the "Land Use Plan" for the state that was wanted by so many has not been monitored to the point that many legislators thought that the "meaker" plan might be slipped through. It was a non-plan for land use.

Who then is this group who will be capable of new forms of analysis and action. At this point in time the group is in its forming stages. Before the end of this semester there will emerge a group that will be the most important environmental and ecologic group yet to be formed in the State of Vermont. For now, it is in the wind.

Return The Frats To The Greeks

By C.W. Harwood

Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity

How many times this year have you rushed down to a fraternity beer blast after a game only to find that three or four hundred other people had the same idea? But you probably paid your buck or whatever anyway, warmed your way through the crowd for a few quick beers, checked out the band if there was one, tried a little hustling, squeezed in another quick beer before it was all gone, and left feeling you got your money's worth.

You bet your ass you got your money's worth — even if you got only two beers and there was no band — you still didn't get screwed too bad. And what of all those who got totally blitzed, or ended up with a nice dolly for the night, or just enjoyed the band, dancing, bullshit, etc. — what a return they got on their money!

But did you ever wonder what the fraternities get out of it? But don't be stupid, right, they make four or five hundred bucks, right? Wrong: not after you pay $200 for a band, $200 for kegs, $18 for broken windows, $30 or $45 for policemen — maybe you'll have a few bucks left over, if you are lucky — not to mention the time spent to clean up the mess 400 people can and do make. And what of the wear and tear on the house? — the sagging floors, the loosened tiles, the stolen fire extinguishers, etc. All for the independents to have a $1.00 social.

I think I speak for all Greeks when I say that we must stop this practice. We must return the Greek system to the Greeks! A fraternity is a privilege, not a service — and it must remain so if it is to survive. Whatever happened to getting dates, and couples — only parties, and invitations to fraternity parties? We must regain our identity, and to do that we must have Greek functions for GREEKS! We have been dealt many severe blows in recent years what with the demise of homecoming, Kake Walk, and winter weekend. Now is the time to start working together again and make our fraternities the great institutions they have always been.

Victim Tastes Advantages Of Saga Food

by Joan Westcott

Is it possible that there are advantages to eating Saga food? Of course!

For example, the common myth of Green Death could be a plausible excuse for anything from not showing up at a class to not showing up for a date.

And how about if you are underweight? That rich-in-carbohydrate food will put on pounds like no other. And what's best is that you can have all you want (except on Saturday nights, of course, and then you don't care because you'll get so drunk afterward that it won't make any difference what you did or didn't have beforehand).

We must, of course, consider the elaborately decorated dining rooms in which all Saga students consume their individual feasts. This writer sincerely hopes that all the financial troubles the University is now having were not caused by the elegant decorating job which enables the students to enjoy each delicious bite all the more.

To prove how Saga and the University are always thinking of the students' health, the students who live on the main campus (i.e. Converse, Jeanne Mance, Chittenden, Buckham, and Willis) are permitted to walk before each meal in the brisk Vermont weather, thereby heightening their appetites so they will not be cheated by not being able to consume their fair share. Saga must really employ geniuses whose only purpose is to figure out, explain, and keep straight in the minds of all, the many different Saga meal plans. These geniuses always make sure that students (especially incoming freshmen) have a full understanding of the situation.

On taking Saga food from those lush dining halls — if you want to eat that stuff more than three times a day — fine, but don't let that nice young man at the door catch you!

Out-Of-Staters Receive Nothing But Lower Quality For Higher Costs

by Severin

When I saw on the front page of the Cynic "Out of State tuition hike approved; room and board fee increased for all," I thought it might have been more appropriate to have said "higher costs for lower education at UVM."

As a freshman "out-of-stater" this gives me one more reason why not to come back here next year. It also made me feel quite sorry for the rest of the student body and their parents (if they are going to be paying for it). Being an "out-of-stater" to consider staying home unless there is some overpowering reason for continuing here i.e. ski fanatics; lovers; those on financial aid, etc. I am sure most "out-of-staters" have wondered what they were getting at such a high cost? My answer is nothing you could not probably get some where else for considerably less.

As for Vermonters I feel sorry for you. Most of you cannot or do not want to go somewhere else. I would suggest that you use your vote and try to keep money coming from the state legislature so your tuition does not go up also. One might consider moving off-campus which by and large is cheaper. You might try to abolish the rule that freshmen must live on campus (so costs might be lower for them too) in the way try to pressure the administration into a readjustment of thought. Remember, what I have heard so many times in the last year, "VERMONT FOR VERMONTERS" — make it that way.

Letters To The Editor:

SA Films Shown At Unfair Time

Dear Cynic:

I have been wondering why the S.A. Film Committee or in particular Terry Demas has seen fit to show the Mao West and W.C. Fields films at noon on Tuesday rather than in the evening when most students seem to be free for such activities. The Marx-Brothers Series last semester appeared to me at least, to be a rousing success, due to its evening scheduling. Most students that I know are busiest at noon time being in class or hurriedly eating. It would be in the interest of these students to have the films shown at a more convenient hour. I have called what is listed as the number to call (ext. 2029) and was told the reason for this scheduling was that if the films were shown at night students would "slip on the ice in the dark and hurt themselves." I asked that if this was the case why were S.A. Films regularly scheduled on Friday evenings. I was told that students are "usually so drunk that they don't get hurt falling." Somehow this did not seem answer enough for me and I called Student Activities (ext. 2060). The girl that answered didn't know why the films were scheduled at noon and told me that Terry Demas scheduled all the films and that I should ask him. I was told to call ext. 2029 again. I did so. Mr. Demas was not in. Rather than spend the rest of the day hunting for the obscure person of Mr. Demas I am writing this letter to you in the hopes that you will be able to track him down and ask him his reasoning. Surely it could not be Mr. Demas as S.A. stands for Student Association and the organization was set up to provide the student body with services. I have heard Mr. Demas' name mentioned quite often in respect to many fine student activities on campus and I am confident that he will do his best to rectify the situation. Yours, Edward Morrow '74

Hockey Admission Fee Too Steep

To the Editor:

This isn't going to be a report of the UVM vs. Anselm's game, but the feeling of one UVM student who felt put out at the end of what seemed to be a well earned victory. I am stuck in the proverbial too much work-too little funds. I decided to skip the quarter finals, after seeing every other home game this season and many of my first two years here as well. If we won, well, I'll manage the semi's and the finals. If we had lost, I wouldn't have wanted to see our 16-0 streak end anyway. The lure of the ice was too much for me so at the beginning of the third period, off I went to the fieldhouse. Admissions were still being taken at the door. "Out unless you want to pay." It's hard-putting into words the tone he used.

To start with, why is the third period still costing the $1.50 it costs to see all three periods? More important, who was this guy at the door who made me feel like I just didn't belong there at any time? Janitor? No. Student? Not unless all the door checkers at UVM are 40 year old students. So who asked me to leave?

Let me remind all those reading this piece that the hockey team is the UVM Catamounts, not the Burlington Catamounts. They play at Gutterson Fieldhouse. The University of Vermont not at the Burlington Municipal Hockey Rink. I'm sure those friendly faces at the door would have preferred the latter. The true fans of UVM hockey are not only those who can afford $3 for every home game. Those of us at the university who have loyally stood on lines for hours in the cold only to stand at the poorer seats available, are also the friends of UVM hockey. We pay our yearly dues in rising tuition rates. This is not a forum for me to cry poverty. But why should I feel put out?

Concert Bureau Chairman Claims Discrepancy

To the Editor:

In last week's issue of the Cynic there was an article reporting the minutes of that week's S.A. Senate meeting. The writer, Bruce Maddern, erroneously reported the content of the Concert Bureau report, and I would like to take this opportunity to straighten out the results of that misquote.

The article stated, "The Concert Bureau announced two concerts, Robert Flack for March 15, and Loggins and Messina for April 11." That statement is an error. The announcement actually made stated the possibility of these concerts because offers had been made to the artists. It went on to say that these dates were not firm and in the event they fell through, alternate concerts would be booked.

Since the date of that Cynic, Robert Flack has refused our offer for the Midway Fest concert. She is only one of a long line of possibilities who have been offered money for that concert and for one reason or another turned it down. Others on the list include the Grateful Dead, Stevie Wonder, and Buddy Rich.

Because of the late date of the Flack refusal, the Concert Bureau, as a group, has determined that it is infeasible to hold a concert during this year's Midway Fest. We regret this decision, but much of our job is concerned with the responsibility of dealing with the students' money, and we feel that this financial risk would be too great. We are happy to report, however, that the Loggins and Messina concert looks probable and other possibilities for this semester are being examined.

Thank you for the opportunity to clear up this confusion.

Volunteer Agencies Recruit Students For Meaningful Service

by Mary Gering

Last week, from February 26 through March 2, students were able to get first hand information about the ACTION program from ex-Peace Corps and VISTA volunteers here at UVM.

ACTION is a Federal Agency formed by the affiliation of several federal volunteer programs. Established July 1, 1971, the Peace Corps, VISTA, and University Year for Action (UYA) were just three of the different volunteer programs which were represented here on campus.

Alternatively managing the Peace Corps/VISTA table were Sam Nyambi, associate Peace Corps director, from Cameroon, West Africa; Calvin Sparks, Area Manager for recruitment in the Northeast; Todd Baumgardt, campus representative; Kathy Rich, who taught English in Kenya, East Africa; and Ken French, who served in India and is the Agriculture recruiter out of Rochester, New York.

The Peace Corps volunteers are placed in any one of fifty-seven countries for two years to help developing countries meet their need for man power as well as develop better understanding between Americans and other peoples. Countries who need Peace Corps help submit a request for volunteers. From the time of the request and actual volunteer placement, it usually takes a year of negotiations.

VISTA, however, is a national Corps of Volunteers who work for one year to alleviate poverty in the U.S. They work with forty-nine states (Mississippi has not asked for them) the Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico.

"Of all the Northeastern schools," Todd Baumgardt stated, "UVM is one of the most enthusiastic schools we've been to. There have been many interested and qualified people."

This is due in part to UVM's large agriculture department. Another factor is that there are many qualified people with a good background in languages. Language ability such as French would be particularly helpful for work in West Africa.

Baumgardt went on, "We're always looking for community people with experience, as well as those in retirement. There is no maximum age. The only requirement is that they be in good health."

Besides agriculture and language needs, there is a need for lawyers, nurses, engineers, and teachers. Teaching is concentrated on the secondary level. Their emphasis is on the teaching of indigenous people so that these people can take over for themselves.

Legal aid plays an integral part in VISTA projects. Volunteers with training or experience in law are needed to help solve problems such as housing, tenants' rights, and intra-family, as opposed to inter-family, problems, explained Baumgardt.

Twenty percent of the volunteers are couples. Volunteers may indicate their area preference, though often the skills of the volunteer are matched with the need of the area.

The recruiters recommend that students finish school. The average age is twenty-six of which fifty percent of the workers have their B.A. In VISTA, one-fourth to one-third are liberal arts graduates.

What do the volunteers do after their one or two-year time is up? A high percentage stay in the same field. Baumgardt, for example, plans on going back into health administration and the Peace Corps, now with three and a half years of psychiatric experience behind him.

Others stay, find jobs, or marry in the area they have been working in. As the recruiters agreed, the Peace Corps and VISTA have made a strong impact on their lives.

The maximum time one may spend in VISTA or Peace Corps are three and five years respectively. Sometimes requests to stay longer are turned down—the reason being that the communities may become dependent on the volunteer.

April 1 is the deadline for the application and eight recommendations to be turned in. Most of the training will be during the summer. Those who are asked to attend the pre-invitational training session will go through a one or two-day briefing.

"This gives the trainee a chance to see what he is getting into and what to expect," said Calvin Sparks. "The drop-out rate of volunteers varies by the country. It is higher during the training session. This is one of the purposes of the training."

Peace Corps volunteers go through three months of training involving intensive language, cultural orientation, and other technical instruction. VISTA volunteers go through five weeks of training.

All volunteers receive food, lodging, living expenses, transportation, monthly allowances, and medical care. VISTA gives one week vacation. Peace Corps gives four weeks. An additional monthly stipend is not aside which is paid on completion of service.

Those who would like more information should go to the Placement office in Waterman. They may also write to Todd Baumgardt at: John W. McCormack Building, P.O. Bldg. Room 1405; Boston, Mass. 02109.

Experimental Program: A Review Of Its Goals And Achievements

students. EP students have many of their classes in the places where they live. The dorms become something more than just a place to sleep. They know the other students in their classes, and they know them in a non-academic context, too.

An opportunity is given professors to try out new courses. And with other professors trying out new ideas or methods close at hand, the individual professor has the opportunity to discuss his or her ideas with people who are both sympathetic and aware of the problems. Some courses have been taught by teams of faculty members.

Another experimental aspect, continued Fackler, has been to see whether students could learn effectively in the traditional sense without having any required courses for the first two years, with pass/fail and written comments grading, and without the pressures of frequent examinations. Since EP students have no required courses for the first two years, when they go on to major in a particular field or construct an individually designed major, the normal distribution requirements are waived. Instead former EP students must fill only the requirements of the department in which they are majoring.

The EP has tried new living arrangements, too. It had the first co-ed dorm, back in 1969. The EP uses no Dean of Students dormitory personnel, like housemothers or resident advisors. Instead, there are a few professors and graduate students living in dormitory apartments.

The EP was started in 1969 after recommendation of a College of Arts and Sciences committee. At that time, colleges all over the country were exploding as students demonstrated and occupied buildings, accusing the universities of being accomplices to the war in Vietnam, of institutional racism, of irrelevancy. Thousands of students who could not see where a college education could take them decided continuing was meaningless and dropped out. Others looked at their parents, their government leaders, their professors, and thought they saw exactly where a college education was going to take them, and they too dropped out. Many of the ones who stayed in school did so only grudgingly, to avoid the draft or a menial job.

Magazines like Time and Newsweek splashed their covers with headlines like:

"Universities in Trouble!" Thoughtful people in the universities knew that much of the criticism was justified. As free universities and alternative schools blossomed outside, the irrelevancy issue was dealt with by faculty and administrators on campus with the introduction of new courses, with revamped required-course rules, and in some cases with experimental programs.

The UVM EP had these goals: (1) To offset problems of impersonality and inflexibility. (2) To develop and test new approaches to instruction. (3) To bring students and teachers closer together. (4) To allow for more independent study, designed to increase student interest. (5) To put faculty and students into a position where faculty members would be more effective advisors. (6) To improve relations between academic disciplines by involving them in a co-operative program.

Writing on the Experimental Program's aims in 1972, Fackler said: "Activities like these have several general aims. One is to attempt to close the distance that often exists between people's intellectual work and their social existence, so that each reinforces and enriches the other. Another is to try to maximize people's individual freedom, while at the same time giving them a chance to comprehend the fullness of intellectual tradition. Still another is to try to make people whole, rather than forcing them to accommodate to conceptual wholes. The overall aim of the Experimental Program is not the design of a careful educational experiment aimed at producing several easily measurable, quantifiable changes in individual or group behavior. The "experiment" is aimed instead at creating, with reasonable numbers of people, a humane environment in which educational efforts of many kinds can occur, efforts reinforced by understanding and support."

The EP has been relatively successful in meeting these goals. The major achievement is satisfaction reported by EP students relative to Arts and Sciences students. Here are some figures. (see table A)

Other interesting comparative data comes from a question asked of EP students and a matched sample of A&S students in 1970. "As you see it now, in what ways do you think you have changed in the course of the year?" (see table B)

EP students showed clearly higher levels of satisfaction on these personal development and self-satisfaction questions. On the only one in which they showed a lower level of satisfaction, "Effectiveness in intellectual activities," the results of the Educational Testing Service's Survey of College Achievement exams on levels of basic knowledge in humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences, showed no difference between that attained by EP students and regular A&S students. One of the major criticisms of the EP program has always been that the students may be happier, but they aren't learning as much. The ETS results show otherwise.

Another frequent criticism of the program is that it is too expensive. But it was found to compare favorably with normal A&S departments in respect to cost. Thus, Fackler points out, the EP is maintaining academic quality while providing a different program, which is relatively satisfying to many students in some important ways, and is doing these things without causing "undue financial hardship."

The program originally included only students in the College of Arts and Sciences. Fackler considers his innovation of adding 110 non-A&S students to the program in 1972 to be his greatest achievement as head of the program. The idea was to acquaint vocationally-oriented students with a broader knowledge of the liberal arts and liberal arts students with the professional courses, in hopes of narrowing the distance which exists between students who follow the two.

The EP is not to be confused with the new Living/Learning Center. When the Living/Learning Center is completed, the Experimental Program will not cease to exist, as some have assumed. One of the EP's problems is that it has not been funded with its own budget as the new Living/Learning Center has. For that reason it cannot buy the services of professors it wants, or hire its own staff, but must rely on "borrowing" professors from the various departments, which have to agree to release them. The result has been to open the door to the use by certain reluctant departments of the EP as a hostage in dealing with the administration for their own demands, saying in effect, "If you don't give us what we want, we won't support the EP."

The EP has been funded attended to a two-thirds majority of those senators present at the meeting. The veto represents a natural system of checks and balances.

King supports a petition being circulated by S.A. Treasurer Tom Grant which asks for the recall of certain town senators on the grounds that they do not represent their constituency. King commented on this, "The town senators do not really represent their constituencies although a lot are doing a good job in the Senate. They use dirty politics though and that's not the way it should be done. An example of this is the time limit they put on the Mac Mai check."

Heller disagreed. "These town senators have served their constituencies. They shouldn't be recalled because they have a right to represent an opinion. You can't be divorced from your conscience because your constituency doesn't agree with you." Desautels stated his opinion, "If you recall the Senators right now, there will be vacancies which couldn't be filled immediately. Under the new constitution if there are recalls the Senate holds its seat until an election is held and he is defeated. If they're going to recall these Senators they will recall the whole Senate. The attendance recorded of the town Senators speaks for itself."

Heller, if elected Student Association President, favors setting up a Supreme Court, "not as a disciplinary measure, but to deal with current issues, which would be much easier than all the hassles of referendums." He also supports an expanded Concert Bureau.

with more people working on concerts. As present President of IRA, Heller commented, "In the S.A. I would tend to favor residence halls. I live in a residence hall and have a feeling for what is needed there."

King, as a member of a fraternity, claimed that he would offer no pro-Greek bias if elected. He added, "I wouldn't want to represent just the fraternities, but everybody." He supports establishing Winter and Spring Weekends, "traditions that we can prepare for in advance and that everybody can get fired up for." King suggested building a weekend around the Winooski River Raft Race. "The Winter Weekend", he stated, "must move on campus to get more people involved." Additionally, he favors "better, if fewer" concerts, perhaps centered around these weekends.

Desautels strongly advocates acceptance of the new constitution because "it's a distinctive change. It gets students more involved through, for example, direct elections of the Board of Trustees by the whole student body." He further commented, "We are working towards opening things up to everybody."

Voting machines will again be used in this election. They will be located in Waterman lobby, Billings Center lobby, the Den, Lafayette Hall, Marsh Life Science Building, the Bookstore, Bailey Library and at designated times in the Waterman Dining Hall. Elections results will be announced by Paul Cillo, Secretary of Elections on March 22 at 10:00 A.M. The new President will be installed by the Chairperson of the Senate on April 3.

'Tenure And Its Alternatives'

taxes for education something back in return", he said, and spoke of rekindling the joy of learning.

Prof. Mark Stoler of the History department pointed out that the notion that there are too many Ph.D.'s around, claimed in the face of situations like the surplus of teachers, is really a myth. "Just look at the size of classes," he said. "We need more teachers, not less, he continues. But what we lack are the resources for more jobs, or, more accurately, the resources being turned in the direction of paying for more teachers."

During the meeting following the panel discussion, the UCF adopted a position drawn up by a member on the issue of changing course requirements here at UVM from five courses a semester to four a semester, an issue recently brought up for discussion by the UVM administration and the faculty Curriculum Committee. The UCF takes the position, presented in a short paper, that the four course proposal must be examined as an economic as well as an academic one. This statement was mimeographed and handed out by the UCF to everyone who attended the Arts College meeting of Feb. 27.

What the change would mean, the UCF points out, is that with students taking only four courses instead of five, enrollments would drop an average of 20% per class. A hypothetical class which had ten students under the five course load would have only eight under the four course system. The university, could then take on a 25% increase in the student body, bringing the class sizes back to their previous level. Thus, the revenues from tuition would be increased 25% without any increase in class size, or in the size of the staff.

The UCF pointed out that what this would mean is either:

- (1) An increase in the faculty work load without an increase in pay, as the courses being taught would be more intensive, requiring more time given to students and more preparation.
- (2) If the courses did not become more intensive, then it would represent a decrease in the education a student receives for his or her tuition dollar; or
- (3) Both of the above.

The following is quoted from the UCF statement:

"The principle involved as far as faculty are concerned, is one familiar to those cognizant of management practices: SPEED-UP. Speed up is the process of increasing productivity by demanding that workers produce more good (or, in our case, teach students more intensively) in the same time period as previously. Speed-up, in industry, is usually traded off for minor economic gains. Thus, management turns out more products, worth more money, and placates the workers who are doing the work which results in the extra production by giving them a small slice of that extra money HERE AT U.V.M. WE ARE NOT EVEN BEING OFFERED SUCH A TRADE-OFF; we are being asked to generate more revenue, but we are offered none of that revenue. We suggest that the question of speed-up should be confronted directly by the faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences."

There are two major issues for the faculty to deal with, continues the UCF. (1) Whether they want more money enough to trade it off for the greater work load. (2) If they decide they do, then they must decide how much of the 25% tuition revenue increase, should be returned to the faculty members.

Besides increased faculty salaries, it was suggested that the extra tuition revenues could allow for a reduction in tuition being charged students.

Prof. Morris Simon, who is on the Academic Policy Committee, reported that the faculty generally has been looking at the proposal as an academic one, and that there is growing sentiment among faculty members against a revision of the present five course system. He called it a "dead issue". Gutman said, "Before it's buried, we want to inject this interpretation of it."

In other business, the UCF named Steve Nagy, Will Miller, and Gordon Lewis as a committee on the tenure question. They are empowered to narrow down the choices and come up with the Union position on the matter, and to communicate directly to the Academic Policy Committee and to the Administration that if a quota system is recommended, it is not to apply retroactively to people who are either tenured now, or who came here under other possibilities, with other expectations.

The Union also arranged to start gathering signatures for a petition expressing opposition to the imposition of any tenure system on the faculty by the administration.

Lane Series:

'Churchill' Fails On The Screen

by Ming Carson

There are very few historical movies, in my knowledge, which have ever succeeded. One reason is simply the odds: how many movies really ever succeed at all? There are other reasons, though, more attendant on common nature of their subject matter. History is an incredibly multi-dimensional phenomenon, and one of these dimensions, which I am sure has been the base of every director ever assigned to one of these ill-fated efforts, is the unalterable fact that it has already happened. An audience comes to a movie which touts itself as "historical" with a whole array of expectations which it leaves at home for just any old movie. The movie must be reasonably faithful to fact and it must be entertaining. It must not sensationally shatter any illusions, yet it must be careful not to create any which will be scoffed at by any reasonably literate viewer. (And this is only from a box office point of view; a set of ethical and/or aesthetic demands would be infinitely more complex and unattainable. Luckily America stopped going in for that sort of thing long ago.)

And now, almost as if by magic, up pops Columbia's Young Winston to help give my shadow-boxing a bit more clout. For it is technically, at least, a fairly bad movie. It is based on Churchill's own account of his younger years, and, for good measure, pins itself together with voice-overs of excerpts from that book, read in sonorous imitation of Churchill himself. The movie opens with a newsworthy clipping of V-E day, then blinks into color with young Winston (the actor, Simon Ward) on horseback as a military correspondent on duty in India. From here it is all over the lot, skipping from incident to incident in the life of the child and young man, from some morbidly amusing sketches of his early life at school, to scenes of his father's tragic decline and death, to some great action shots of Churchill's combat and capture in the Boer war.

I say that the movie is bad; certainly it is, to be fair about it on an absolute scale of film quality. But there is nothing offensive in its badness, and much about it that is rather sweet and redeeming. There is plenty of color, plenty of action, it seldom drags. It is not a cerebral experience, but it wasn't meant to be. The script is all too heavy-handed in the laying on of psychological intimidation: this reaches a peak with two anomalous interviews of Winston's mother, Lady Randolph, and himself, in which the interviewer asks offensive and provocative questions and is never seen. It is the gratuitous and rather silly use of a technique which has its origin, I believe, in Truffaut's 400 Blows, and is far too subtle for effective interjection in this anything-but-subtle movie.

The costumes are meticulously done, as is the usual case in this sort of extravaganza, and the settings, one intimates from the string of acknowledgements at the end of the movie, are original wherever possible. Armies were also hired, and make impressive showings in cavalry battles and that sort of thing. There was also obviously much care taken in the casting, but unfortunately the care shows at the seams, for nothing, as I have said, is let to lie in the realm of subtlety. Thus the child Winston grows quite accurately into the adolescent Winston and very believably into young man Winston, and those sonorous edges deep into the speech of the young Parliamentarian even so noticeably. (There is quite an achievement for Ward in having done the elderly Churchill's narration in a voice quite different from his natural one; unfortunately, the effect of this voice is not always felicitous, and at first somewhat disconcerting.)

I really liked this movie, in spite of - sometimes because of - its several shortcomings. It is a pleasantly gratifying film and certainly an entertaining one. If you need a break and want a "fun" evening at the movies, I sincerely suggest Young Winston as the one to town to hit.

The internationally famous New York Woodwind Quintet performs on Wednesday, March 14, at the second concert in the current Lane Chamber Arts Series.

The Woodwind ensemble will be presented in its Allen Chapel at 8:30 p.m. Tickets, $3, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door. For reservations, tel. 656-3418.

The members of the Woodwind Quintet include Paul Dunkel, flute; Ralph Froelich, horn; David Glazer, clarinet; Ronald Roseman, oboe; and Arthur Wesberg, bassoon.

Scheduled on Wednesday night's program are the Quintet in E-minor (op. 67, no. 2) by Franz Danzi, and Kleine Kammermusik (op. 24, no. 2) by Paul Hindemith. Following the intermission the group will play Fantasia in F-minor (KV 608) by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart and Quintet (op. 43) by Carl Nielsen.

For the past fifteen years, the New York Woodwind Quintet has maintained its position of pre-eminence in chamber music through numerous concerts in the United States, Canada and many countries in Europe. It has appeared frequently for television and radio and is highly praised for recordings.

The five instruments of the Quintet, each with its individual colour, have been blended into a unique combination of sound. The members of the Quintet, each in his own right a virtuoso, have won the acclaim of critics everywhere.

The U.S. State Department honored the New York Woodwind Quintet on three occasions with invitations for overseas tours. In 1956 the Quintet traveled for ten weeks through South America, and in 1958 it was one of the few groups invited to appear at the American Pavilion of the Brussels World's Fair. During the summer and fall of 1962 the group embarked on a highly praised tour of eleven countries in the Orient.

At home the Quintet continues to tour from coast to coast, appearing year after year on the most important concert series in the United States, Canada, and far-off Alaska. Numerous return engagements attest to the ensemble's ready acceptance by both chamber music audiences of celebrity series alike. The Quintet has often been requested to combine with string ensembles for the presentation of masterworks and one of the most important of these events is a University of Wisconsin series entitled, "Summer Evenings of Music" where since 1954 the members of the New York Woodwind Quintet have been Artists-in-Residence for the summer seasons.

The Quintet is under contract to Everest Records for the recording of the entire woodwind quintet repertoire, and among compositions already on record are works of Samuel Barber, Alvin Elter, Ingolf Dahl, Jean Françaix, Jacques Ibert, Franz Danzi, Paul Hindemith, Alex. Wilder and Hector Villa Lobos.

Many works have been written especially for the New York Woodwind Quintet by American composers. Its list of first performances is impressive, with the most distinguished a concert series at the Library of Congress where the Quintet has presented many world premieres.

The next concert on the Chamber Arts Series is the Jacques Loussier Trio (piano, bass and drums) in "Play Bach," the contemporary interpretation of the music of Bach. The concert will be held April 6.

'Timeless' Spheris Sings And Writes

"People are timeless and that's the truth. The body, this hunk of meat that I carry around with me has been around for 22 years, but I have been around forever and will be around forever, just like you will be. So, we may as well have a good time."

Sitting cross-legged in the middle of a pitch-black room in the "wilds" of the East Village, Jimmie Spheris is whispering, laughing softly and speaking very wisely. A Columbia recording artist, his first album is ISLE OF VIEW. He lives in New York, in California and lots of places in between. He sees the music business from the inside-free side, free from the distortion of type. Jimmie Spheris is completely free from any distortions; smiling he says: "I'm a really happy person, because I stay here. So many people are constantly worrying themselves about what has happened and what will happen instead of what is happening."

The music is crystal clear. It's heavily dependent on melody and played on piano and guitar (by Jimmie) with his closest friend Lee Calvin Nicoli accompanying him on flute, bass guitar, acoustic guitar and occasionally vocals (a veritable one-man band). Both Jimmie and Lee have magical, lovely voices, which harmonize beautifully. "When Lee and I communicate musically," Jimmie explains, "there is no space between us at all, it's a complete communication and I don't care if he's not Eric Clapton or Hubert Laws on the flute, he's Lee on the flute and he understands what I'm doing and enhances it."

Ask Mr. Spheris about his past and he'll spin you a tale so strange it almost sounds untrue: "I was born in Greece; I didn't stay there very long; moved to the southern United States, with my parents and two sisters. My father bought a carnival called The Magical Empire and took this carnival all over the south and midwest. At one point, in Alabama, he was murdered... I moved with my mother to Arkansas after that; stayed there for a while; she bought a house and sold the carnival; then moved to California; lived in southern California. I split, left home, when I was 16; went to San Francisco, to Haight-Ashbury; boogied my brains out, got real strung out on drugs and stuff; moved to Los Angeles, then back to San Francisco..."

"Did you hear my song 'Mercury'?" Jimmie asks; "it talks about the marshes down here (indicates floor) and it talks about the mountains up there. Today someone kept asking me what it means, but it's right here. Good and evil. Down here in the abyss, unfortunately that's the viewpoint that most people take but me; I'm not in my body; Right now, at this moment, I'm on the ceiling and I stay here; it's a lot easier to communicate..."

Remembering candle-glow and a dimming fire when Lee sang (at Jimmie's insistence) and Jimmie harmonized swaying to the music's flow, he explained his inner peace: "I love people, that's really the only thing that is great in this whole universe and the secret of greatness, any kind of greatness is just to continue to love... I could never desire revenge for anybody, no matter what he does to me."

The six-foot-four musician gently lopes when he walks, he's got an inner grace. Onstage, he's soft-spoken, understated and highly personal.

Jimmie's masterpiece is a song called "The Nest" sitting at the piano he tells us: "I'm going to sing you a song about a man from Mars, his parents were from Earth. They went to Mars on an expedition and got killed while they were there. His name was Michael Valentine Smith, on Mars there's this religion that they have and circles; the first of these circles is called The Nest, and the nest is a room padded with feathers. You take off your clothes to get into the nest and once you're in the nest you share water with someone and once you share water you have their total trust and complete love, and then you make love, and that's just the first circle..."

"Come to me now dove on your shoulder White flame of live burns on your breath I am ready for flight My wings are so ripe Come wake me Take me from the nest..."

"The Nest" Jimmie Spheris has emerged from the nest drunk with the power of love and a full-blown talent. He writes about marshes and mountains, faraway planets and earth-love. He writes about himself and he writes about me... he writes about you.

Witness 'The Trial': Next In Series

Orson Welles' movie, "The Trial," based upon the novel of the same name by author Franz Kafka, will be shown on Friday, March 9, under the auspices of the Lane Film Society Series "Great Trial Movies."

There will be two showings, at 7:30 p.m. and 10:00 p.m., in Marsh Life Sciences Building Auditorium. Starring in the film, which was directed, produced and written by Orson Welles, are Anthony Perkins, Orson Welles, Jeanne Moreau, Ronny Schneider and Akim Tamiroff.

Tickets, $1.00 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door. For reservations, tel. 656-3418.

Peter Cowie, in his book "The Cinema of Orson Welles," hails "The Trial" as "Welles' finest film since 'Citizen Kane'... No other film of Welles' bears so clearly the stamp of his personality. One senses his presence in every shadow, in every angled shot. Anthony Perkins gives the best performance of his career."

In "The Trial" Anthony Perkins plays Joseph K., a commonplace young man, who is awakened and questioned by police about an unidentified offense. Placed under "open arrest," K. attempts to find out what he is supposed to have done. He is thrust into a surrealistic world, in which it becomes increasingly difficult to determine reality. Encounters with his landlady, neighbor, law magistrates, his advocate and others do not help K. out of his predicament; he becomes totally confused and begins to feel guilty without knowing why. Finally, he is led by two executioners to a deserted field, where he is killed by dynamite.

If, as some critics have suggested, Welles has not faithfully adapted Kafka's book, he has certainly been faithful to the author's intentions. Kafka describes extraordinary events in a matter-of-fact style; Welles depicts many ordinary occurrences in an elaborate, expressionistic style. The result, however, is the same: a terrifying vision of the modern world, conveyed with the logic of a nightmare.

As in many Welles films, one remembers powerful individual sequences: the long opening take, in which K. is questioned in a bedroom which has a distorted, claustrophobic perspective; the scenes in K.'s office, a vast hall filled with typists seated at hundreds of desks in all directions; another long take in which K. follows and carries on a Pinterish conversation with a crippled woman, as she drags a trunk across a stretch of waste land; the courtroom scene, in which K. makes an impassioned speech to a group of ridiculous people; the scenes in the advocate's apartment-office, illuminated by hundreds of candles; the sequence in which K. talks to a painter in a large cage, as dozens of children scream and peek in from outside; the final scene, in which the dynamite explodes into a mushroom-shaped cloud (recalling the cloud of smoke at the end of "CITIZEN KANE").

The film runs for 118 minutes, with English dialogue. The next movie in the Great Trial Movie series is "To Kill a Mockingbird," March 16, starring Gregory Peck and Brock Peters.

"The P

by Margo Howard

The great Alfred Hitchcock has a knack for taking average trial story and turning it into a creepy, suspenseful, fascinating film.

The Paradine Case (1946) such a movie, third in the Lane Film Society Series of "Great Trial Movies." It has no gun, no murders in show, no bodies to dispose of, skeletons in closets. It certainly nowhere Hitchcock's classic thrill Psycho, Rebecca, or Front. Yet there is something that rivets the attention of viewer throughout, perhaps the dark aura of mystery surrounding the beautiful Maddelena Paradine. Or perhaps it is the eerie hold she has on people - for Maddelena Paradine is on trial for her husband's murder.

Who administered the dose of poison in the Paradine's glass of burgundy was Andre Latour, wild-eyed French-Canadian, a man who had suffered greatly. We indeed Lady Paradine? people don't go at murdering other nice people. Anthony Keane, a brilliant young member of the Bar, must find out.

There is not only the mystery of seeing that justice is done, but there is another reason why his client from the gallows - he has hopelessly in love. His wife sees it - and yet she does hope for Maddelena's death.

SHOOT OUT AT THE FANTASY FACTORY Traffic Island SW 9323

The last three Traffic albums are the band's most coherent and mature works, comprising a serial-sound that not only documents the group's growth, but records the music and reactions resulting in the touring experience. Welcome to the Canteen, the English summer road (1971), was a temporary record of the Traffic - now (Winwood, Capaldi, and Wainwright) with Dave Mason. It is the LP recorded with augmented lineup including Rick Grech, Jim Gordon, Rebop. The Low Spark High-Heeled Boots is the band's extension of the Barleycorn music. It is a full of magical flowing and roll. Shoot out at the Fantasy Factory is just as magical, a little less rock roll, and deeper shades of sadness throughout.

This new album is a companion piece to predecessor right down to the fascinating cover art. Low Spark represents a general sense of optimism, contentment, a general sense of well-being. Shoot out at the Fantasy Factory is a more predominant by uncertainty and despair and an air of being out of touch with oneself. The resolution of these elements conflicts that can be hoped for is the cathartic process of creating music out of chaos. That Traffic can albums of equal excellence complementarity from dichotomies is testimony to their stature as artists and human beings.

Hitchcock Does Justice To "The Paradine Case"

by Margo Howland

The great Alfred Hitchcock has a knack for taking an average trial story and turning it into a creepy, suspenseful and fascinating film.

The Paradine Case (1948) is such a movie, third in the Lane Film Society Series of "Great Trial Movies." It has no ghosts, no murders in showers, no dead bodies to dispose of, no skeletons in closets. It is certainly nowhere near Hitchcock's classic thrillers, Psycho, Rebecca, or Frenzy. Yet there is something there that rivets the attention of the viewer throughout, perhaps it is the dark aura of mystery surrounding the beautiful Maddalena Paradine. Or perhaps it is the eerie hold she has upon people: for Maddalena Paradine is on trial for her husband's murder.

Who administered the fatal dose of poison in Lord Paradine's glass of burgundy? Was it Andre Latour, the wild-eyed French-Canadian valet? Was it perhaps, a suicide? Lord Paradine was blind and had suffered greatly. Was it indeed Lady Paradine? Nice people don't go about murdering other nice people. Anthony Keane, a brilliant young member of the British Bar, must find out.

There is not only the matter of seeing that justice is done. Keane has another reason for loving his client from the gallows—he has fallen hopelessly in love. His wife Gay sees it and yet she does not hope for Maddalena's death, for her Tony will then forever love, ghost, an image. The judge, a ghostly person who has driven his gentle, sensitive wife off the deep end with his cruelty, is aroused to prurience by Mrs. Paradine. Judy, the daughter of the solicitor, hopes she will hang. Latour, the valet hates and fears her, yet she goes to great lengths to divert suspicion from him. No one remains unaffected by her. And the trial scenes in the courtroom of Old Bailey are exciting to see. Gregory Peck stars as Attorney Keane, in a fine performance. Gay Keane is played well by Ann Todd; Italian actress Abba Valli is the hypnotic Mrs. Paradine; Ethel Barrymore was nominated for an Academy Award for her performance as Lady Horfield, Betty wife of the judge. Charles Laughton is properly disgusting as the sadistic judge ("strange how the convolutions of a walnut resemble those of the human brain...") and Louis Jordan is excellent as the tormented Latour. Fine acting performances and a sneaking feeling of uneasiness, coupled with Hitchcock's usual suspense and creepy music are the best assets of this typical 1940's film.

Coming next is Franz Kafka's The Trial, directed by Orson Wells, to be shown Friday, March 9 at 7:30 and 10:00 pm in Marsh Life Sciences Building Auditorium. Tickets are $1.00, on sale at the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door. Telephone 656-3418 for reservations.

Newest Album Evidences Traffic's Maturity

SHOOT OUT AT THE FANTASY FACTORY Traffic
Island SW 9233

The last three Traffic albums are the band's most cohesive and mature works, comprising a serial-in-sound that not only documents the group in concert, but records the moods and reactions resulting from the touring experience. Welcome to the Canteen, from the English summer tour of 1971, was a temporary reunion of the Traffic nucleus (Winwood, Capaldi and Wood) with Dave Mason. It is the first LP recorded with an augmented lineup including Rik Grech, Jim Gordon and Rebop. The Low Spark of High-Heeled Boys is that band's extension of the John Barleycorn Must Die directions, a gorgeous album full of magical, flowing rock and roll. Shoot out at the Fantasy Factory is just as much magic, a little less rock and roll, and deeper shades of sadness throughout.

This new album is a perfect companion piece to its predecessor right down to the fascinating cover art. If The Low Spark represents moods of optimism, contentment and a general sense of well-being, Shoot out is the other side of the coin, a record predominated by uncertainty, despair and an air of being out of touch with oneself, the only resolution of these emotional conflicts that can be hoped for is the cathartic process of creating music out of the clashes. That Traffic can make albums of equal excellence and complementarity from such dichotomies is testimony to their stature as artists and human beings.

Traffic needs an uncomplicated rhythm section to sustain the pulse of a beat over which Steve Winwood and Chris Wood elaborate. In a sense Roger Hawkins and David Hood are virtually indispensable from Gordon and Grech though each pair has distinctive stylistic patterns. The rhythm section's Muscle Shoals companions Jimmy Johnson and Berry Beckett assist on keyboards and guitar, on many, if not all, the selections, the basic tracks of which were probably cut live in the studio. These additional musicians allow Winwood to forego the extensive overdubbing which in the past has produced a sterility that's been the single defect in Traffic's studio music. The presence of these Southern musicians probably also accounts for the subtly funky feel of much of this LP. "Shoot out at the fantasy factory" is a rock and roll number, opening the album with raw, hard-edged guitars that set the tone for the unsettling images of the words, while Chris Wood's flute, sounding far off in the distance, increases the paranoia.

"Roll Right, Stones" is a sequence of progressions, each of which has very likely been floating in the air since the beginning of time until Traffic captured and blended them into nearly fourteen minutes of ethereal hypnotism. Side two contains the most overtly disconsolate pieces. "Evening Blue", with its acoustic guitar and weary Winwood vocal, so well describes the ultimate loneliness it's unearthly: "If I had a lover whose heart was true/I wouldn't be alone in this evening blue." Wood's this/evening composition "Tragic Magic" glides much like Winwood's "Glad" but is dominated, logically enough and superbly so, by supernatural woodwinds; it's here also that Rebop's exotic percussion is at its most effective. The desperate plea of "Rainmaker" at the conclusion of The Low Spark can now be seen in perspective as a bridge to this album. "Sometimes I Feel So Uninspired" is the patch of blue in the otherwise gloomy sky of Shoot out at the Fantasy Factory. The resignation of the music, proceeding at a pace deliberate enough to focus attention on the lyrics, is tempered by the hopefulness of Jim Capaldi's message. This ten minutes of magnificence, the whole of this record in fact, should raise your spirits and leave you ready to face the world with at least a little smile.

But don't let it get you down. There's every reason for not failing. You've got to smile and turn the other cheek. So today you might be down. By tomorrow you'll be sailing. And you won't even hear these words I speak.

A gift of diamonds is a beautiful tribute to the woman you love.

QUESTION: Please answer this question as soon as possible as I am getting married in a couple of months. I have hair around the nipples on my breast and I would like to get rid of them. What is the best method of doing this to insure smoothness and safety? Also, does shaving around this area cause cancer?

ANSWER: Hair around the nipples on a woman's breasts is very common. In no way is it a sign of a lack of femininity nor need it be of particular significance. The easiest way to get rid of them if they do bother you is simply cut them off. Under no circumstances would I suggest pulling them out. The area around the nipples is rather sensitive and you would be inducing needless pain and irritation. I would also avoid the use of depilatories on this part of your body.

Permanent removal of the hair is possible through electrolysis, and may be worth the fuss if this hair really bothers you. I once had an idle conversation with a woman electrologist who told me that a fair number of women she sees consult her for just the problem that you mentioned. If you decide to see an electrologist you should get a referral from your physician, a plastic surgeon or a dermatologist to make sure you see a reputable person. It is important that the electrologist autoclaves (steam sterilizes) the needle used to remove the hairs, so that there is no risk of the spread of hepatitis. Electrolysis works by destroying the cells at the base of the hair follicle which produce a new hair shaft. Under no circumstances could I imagine that shaving around this area could cause breast cancer, though it would seem to me that shaving might be a little tricky.

I gather from your initial comment that you are worried about the impression you might make on your fiancé. If ever there was a powerful argument for nudity, it is the one that states that if we were exposed to nudity on a regular basis, we would get quite accustomed to the way other people's bodies look and wouldn't be so up-tight about our own body. It takes quite a while to get used to appearing undressed in front of another person. Some couples manage to avoid this for their whole life. Most tend to adapt to the new situation with the increasing realization that their partner is as human as they are and hope they both are forgiving for the trivial ways in which they do not meet each other's idealized versions of what a man or woman should look like. If they do not, they are in plenty of trouble when they hit the saggy-baggies of middle age and late life.

QUESTION: I have recently been told that pregnancy could be prevented by getting the sperm drunk before intercourse. The drunk sperm supposedly are unable to find their way to the egg. Is the alcohol level in the blood stream being high sufficient to cause sperm intoxication, or must some other method be used?

ANSWER: From time to time, people have accused me of making up the questions that appear in this column. Let me reassure you all, in my wildest dreams I could not think up questions like this one. Sometimes it's even hard to think up answers. Sperm are single-celled hemi-organisms who have no brains and whose function is strictly governed by the biologic environment surrounding them and the place where they are deposited. To the best of my knowledge, these guided missiles are only indirectly affected by the alcohol intake of the person who launches them.

While a small amount of alcohol tends to decrease inhibitions, large amounts of alcohol resulting in intoxication often decreases the ability to perform sexually. More cases of impotence are related to alcohol intoxication than any other single cause.

QUESTION: I have been told that infectious mononucleosis is communicable by oral saliva, but I was wondering if it could also be transmitted by intercourse.

ANSWER: The means of communicability of infectious mononucleosis has not been proved. Saliva has often been accused of transmitting the infection, but there is no evidence to back up the claim. At least with regard to acquiring infectious mono, intercourse should be no more dangerous than kissing.

street, K attempts to find out what he is supposed to have done. He is thrust into a surrealistic world, in which it becomes increasingly difficult to determine reality. Encounters with his landlady, neighbor, law magistrates, his advocate and others do not help him out of his predicament, he becomes totally confused and begins to feel guilty without knowing why. Finally, he is led by two executioners to a deserted field, where he is killed by dynamite.

If, as some critics have suggested, Welles has not faithfully adapted Kafka's book, he has certainly been faithful to the author's intentions. Kafka describes extraordinary events in a matter-of-fact style. Welles depicts many ordinary occurrences in an elaborate, expressionistic style. The result, however, is the same: a terrifying vision of the modern world, conveyed with the logic of a nightmare.

As in many Welles films, one remembers powerful individual sequences: the long opening take, in which K is questioned in a bedroom which has a distorted, claustrophobic perspective; the scenes in K's office, a vast hall filled with typists seated at hundreds of desks in all directions; another long take in which K follows and carries on a Pinterish conversation with a crippled woman, as she drags a trunk across a stretch of waste land; the courtroom scene, in which K makes an impassioned speech to a group of ridiculous people; the scenes in the advocate's apartment-office, illuminated by hundreds of candles; the sequence in which K talks to a painter in a large cage, as dozens of children scream and peek in from outside; the final scene, in which the dynamite explodes into a mushroom-shaped cloud (receding the cloud of smoke at the end of CITIZEN KANE).

The film runs for 118 minutes, with English dialogue. The next movie in the Great Trial Movie series is "To Kill a Mockingbird," March 16, starring Gregory Peck and Brock Peters.

O'Connell Paces Cats To 6-2 Win Over St. Anselms

by Rick Steinberg

Saturday night the UVM ice hockey team set out in quest of the 1973 ECAC Division II Championship. Having attained the first of their pre-season goals, an undefeated division II record, the Cats still had to prove they were the top team in the division and erase memories of the 4-0 playoff loss to Buffalo a year ago.

Through two periods of play an upset was a distinct possibility as the Hawks of St. Anselms, backed by the superb goaltending of Tom Gavin held the Cats even. But in the final period, the Cats' superiority prevailed as they exploded for four goals to gain a 6-2 victory. Freshman sensation Tim O'Connell paced the Cats scoring three goals. This was the fourth straight game in which a UVM player has achieved the feat. Previous hat-tricks went to Chris Miller, John Murphy and Chris Hurley.

Goaltending oftentimes determines the outcome of a hockey game and in playoff competition it is all the more significant. Saturday was no exception, as both Ackerson and Gavin provided Guttererson fans with one of the finest displays of netminding this season. Eckerson kept the Cats in the game in the early going thwarting numerous St. Anselms breakaways while Gavin almost sparked the Hawks to an upset.

As surprising as it may seem the Cats appeared a bit sluggish at the outset and did not retain their winning form until the closing minutes. This may have been a result of the constant pressure the Cats have been exposed to the past few weeks. With their undefeated Division II record, all teams came in hoping to be the team to knock off UVM and the Cats had to get up for every game if they were to remain undefeated. After accomplishing such a feat many times a team experiences a natural letdown and the Cats may have been victims of such a letdown.

The Cats opened up the scoring early with O'Connell converting on the first of his three goals. After picking up a loose puck in the St. Anselms' zone O'Connell beat Gavin with a quick, well placed wrist shot into the lower right hand corner. But the Cats seemed unable to get untracked and their play seemed a bit lackluster. Many of the Cats' difficulties may be attributed to an aggressive Hawk attack. St. Anselms appeared to be trying to keep the Cats off balance with a mixture of stick and body checks, as well as aggressive forechecking.

At 13:52, St. Anselms got a breakaway as Steve Daigle picked up the puck right in front of the UVM goal after it had bounced off the boards. He spotted Jim Morris all alone in front and flipped him the puck. Morris lifted the puck into the

THE INSIDER

Last Wednesday night we completed the most successful hockey campaign in UVM history. The 11-4 victory over Williams at Williamstown was one of the most satisfying we had all year. At first glance, it was obvious that these frustrated preps were up for us. They were a chippy bunch and the game was penalty filled. In the first period the Cats were sluggish and if it had not been for some superb netminding by Steve Eckerson, the Ephs might have been on top.

The second and third periods were all ours. Steady Chris Miller exploded for the hat trick while the entire team followed up with exceptional play—almost the entire team. Apparently, one of the players on our roster arrived in scenic Williamstown without his equipment, the classic yet tragic mistake a hockey player cannot afford to make. He was able to round up a conglomeration of gear, but skating on someone else's skates is unbearable. As a result, the Black Aces were bloody but unbowed (however Watts and Clifford played well). All in all the game was a fitting conclusion to regular season play.

I don't think there is much to say about the St. Anselm's game. It was not one of our better performances with the exception of Tim O'Connell and his linemates.

Women's Varsity Downs Johnson

by Sally Rouse

The Women's basketball team has been wearily riding the roads this past week. UVM took Johnson by a score of 50-40. Lucy Dale was high scorer with 12 points and Chris Morgan had 10. For Johnson Cheryl Dudley had 18 points.

The next day the Cats took off for the University of Massachusetts. The Cats dropped that one by a score of 52-37. The Cats took off to a slow start but the enthusiasm of the team broke loose and gave them a good run. There was good rebounding in the second half and excellent defense. There were more spectators to cheer on the UVM team than there were for UMass.

The Cats will be on the road all this week. The team has been accepted to the Eastern Tournament held in Boston, Mass. Many upsets are expected and hopefully the UVM underdogs will become the upsets.

UVM Ends Season With Victory

by Mike Schwartz

The University of Vermont Basketball Cats ended the 1972-1973 season on an encouraging note. They earned an exciting victory over the Brandeis Judges by a score of 82-78. Once again Patrick Gym had echoed as 362 fans made up the crowd, but their cheers at the end made the season's finale worth watching. It was an interesting and exciting game in which UVM played some of the best basketball I have seen this year.

Brandeis started off with the first five points before the Cats hit a basket. Then UVM hit nine in a row to take a 9-5 lead. When Greg Ashford hit a free throw to give UVM a 10-9 lead, the Cats were able to stay in front for the rest of the half. The lead was as many as nine at 34-25 but a bit of sloppy passing in the last two minutes cut the Vermont margin to 48-34 at the half.

The first half was basically up-and-down basketball, as both teams had poor shooting percentages. Rich Rush was 1-8 and John Perry 3-11 for Brandeis from the field. George Peredy was the only Cat above 500 from the field on a 4-7 performance. The UVM lead was gained on sound fundamentals. Dan Ostler, a small forward, boxed out effectively for 5 rebounds and the Cats made only 8 turnovers. Despite an overall rebounding advantage for Brandeis, the Cats led. The key was free throw shooting where the Cats made 14-17 as compared to the Judges' 8-11 shooting.

In the second half the Cats were able to withstand the pressure and pull out the victory. They started off fast with a 48-39 bulge with 16:26 left to play. Mario Macias hit two jumpers from the top of the key and added two free throws to give the Cats the lead. The lead was eight points when Brandeis began to penetrate more on offense.

In the last ten minutes of the game the lead switched hands eight times and the contest was tied on four occasions. The Cats were still leading by two when Kaplan hit a jumper for Brandeis and 40 seconds later a 1 and 1 free throw try. A technical foul was called on UVM and Perry hit it to stretch the Brandeis lead to 72-19 with 4:13 to go. Kaplan again hit a jumper with 1:50 to go to offset a Bernie Palmer drive and Barry Cohen field goal. Brandeis led by 76-75 with time running out.

But the Cats were determined to win. Macias hit from 20 feet, Cohen hit a foul shot, and Peredy a layup for an 80-76 UVM lead. A Macias foul shot with 9 seconds left made the score 81-78, but Brandeis was not out yet. Brian McAllister drove down the lane and made the basket but was called for an offensive charge before the shot and the basket was disallowed. Brandeis' coach, Robert Brannum nearly punched the referee, arguing that the basket should have counted to cut the lead to one. The call could have easily gone the other way. Instead Brannum got a technical which Peredy converted. The final score was 82-78 with Brannum still arguing as the buzzer ended the game.

In the second half the Cats played under pressure and did not throw away a last second victory as they had done against St. Michaels and New Hampshire. The baskets down the stretch were clutch jump shots from outside as the Cats were not afraid to take the open shot. In the second half they shot 51.4% compared to 40.5% for Brandeis.

Overall, the two stars for the Cats were George Peredy and Barry Cohen. Peredy in his last game connected for 19 points from 7-12 from the field and 5-5 from the foul line. He also collected seven rebounds. The Cats worked the ball in to him and he made his moves without hesitation against the smaller Brandeis center. When Coach Salzburg took him out of the game after the opening nine points streak I was quite surprised. Peredy had hit six of these nine points.

Cohen came off the bench and sparked the second half offense. He hit 13 of his 18 points in the second half. Cohen also added four assists. Mario Macias was also in double figures with 11. Captain Greg Ashford also had 11 in his last game. Nate Reeves hit a basket and had 5 rebounds in a short playing stint in his last varsity game. Jim Ducey failed to score in one minute of playing time in his final outing.

The Judges were led by Kaplan, a freshman forward with 18 points all in the second half. Two other Brandeis subs played down the stretch. McAllister had 12 points and 13 rebounds while Bob Kelley had six points all in the second half. If it weren't for the Judges' bench, they would have had a long afternoon. Perry, their best player, shot but 5-21 in scoring 14 points and Wes Cotter was only 4-14 while scoring 13 points. Rush wound up shooting 1-11. If these men were hitting, the final score could have been different. UVM played good defense, varying their backcourt press and playing strong man-to-man defense.

The Cats were passing the ball well and in an unselfish manner. They finished with fifteen assists to the Judges' nine. UVM's shooting was 43.1% while Brandeis connected with but 36.1% of their shots.

Vermont concluded the season with 2 out of 3 victories after a discouraging eight game losing streak. They had nothing to lose in the final game and played for the marbles. It was an encouraging thing to see. Next week I will look back in retrospect over the entire season and especially the second half of the year when I began to cover the home games. Perhaps there are enough strong points to make next year a winning season after this season's up and down performance.

UVM Hosts Blood Drive

by Barbara Frankel

Monday, March 12 through Wednesday, March 14, the Ethan Allen Rifle Club and the National Society of Pershing Rifles in conjunction with the Women of UVM sponsored a blood drive in Billings Center. These organizations host such a drive each semester under the auspices of the New Hampshire-Vermont Red Cross which supplies nurses and equipment.

At least two hundred students are estimated to have given blood in the drive and approximately seven or eight hundred pints of blood have been collected. The blood will now go to the Red Cross which will test type, and process it before it is shipped to hospitals.

Volunteer help was solicited by the Ethan Allen Rifle Club and National Society of Pershing Rifles through letters to fraternities, sororities, residence halls, etc. Assistance came from all students, especially the UVM Rescue Squad.

According to Lawrence Dotson, one of the volunteer co-ordinators of the blood drive, "It's a worthwhile project for students. Although the blood drive is sponsored each semester by the Ethan Allen and Pershing Rifle Clubs, everyone can and should participate."

Many of the students giving blood seemed slightly nervous, especially if it was their first time. As one student commented, however, "It really doesn't hurt and it's something we can all get together on and help with."

S.A. Presidential Candidates Express Views On Role Of Student Government

Below are the responses to three questions submitted by the Cynic to the recognized candidates for Student Association President, Rob Desautels, Sig Heller and Alan King. The election will be held on Monday, March 19 - Wednesday, March 21.

Cynic: What, precisely, do you feel the role of the student government is on today's college campus? Is it an outdated relic of the past or can it serve a meaningful function in 1973? In what direction would you like to see student government go in the future?

Desautels: On college campuses all over, there are a great many issues that are being put into the students-tuition increase, faculty, tenure, use of University land, room and board increases for "on campus" students and corresponding rent and food increase for "off-campus" students. These issues have a direct bearing on the student's life. The student government can no longer pass these issues off and simply concentrate on the cultural aspects of the university. The government has to deal with these issues or it is not a government but is a cultural board and should be labeled as such.

Heller: Student government has an important role on today's campus. It should function as the students' voice to the administration and faculty. Student government has the job of providing social, cultural and intellectual activities. It should voice the concerns and act upon student problems and opinions. I would like to see student government at UVM be much more receptive to what students want. Student government should be concerned primarily with the students at the University of Vermont and provide them with the best goods and services.

King: Student government, ideally, is responsible for the communication between the university administration and the students. It is established to represent student interests in policy decisions and investigate any injustices to those students. Through the government, in our case, the students make their decisions known not only to the administration but also to the city and state. Ideally, this would help resolve the differences between the students and these others. In our case it has not. The students of UVM definitely do not have the respect of the state or of Burlington. This has arisen due to irresponsibility on the part of the student government. I would like to try to bring respect back to the student community.

The S.A. isn't outdated, it is merely bogged down in its own rhetoric. Our S.A. really needs streamlining. One of the main reasons why so many S.A. senators don't come to meetings is because of the length (often three to four hours) and content of the meeting. Much of this time is spent debating issues that either 1) don't belong in the senate or 2) are so trivial or commonplace that they should have been decided in committee.

The new S.A. constitution calls for student voting members of the seven Trustee committees. It is unlikely that the trustees will approve such a move, but it is a good objective to shoot for. This would really be a shot in the arm for student-faculty-administration communication. This would bring the S.A. senate more in line with its ideals.

Communication is the name of the game. It's so bad now that I ran into several students during this campaign that didn't know what the initials S.A. stood for or where their $21.50 goes. This is really sad. I think there is a lot that can be done in this area.

Cynic: How do you view the office of President of the Student Association? What should his duties and functions be? How much power should he be able to have?

Desautels: The President is the head of the executive body of the S.A. Since the executive body is designed to work as an integral part of the S.A. along with the Senate, it should be considered in this manner. The president under the new constitution, is given the freedom to work behind the lines to coordinate information taken from various inputs. Less pressure is put on this position in order to free the President.

The president is ex-officio in all committees so that he has his input. To analyze how much power the president should have we must consider also how much power the senate should have. The senate is the legislative body of the S.A. All information should be coordinated and fed into the senate. The senate should then have the power to make the decisions. The president should not be the policeman of the senate. The referendum is the only student check which is needed on the senate. More power in the hands of the executive would tend to take the deliberative power out of the hands of the deliberative body.

Heller: The president of the

Vermont's Project CRASH Attempts To Solve Problem Of Drunk Drivers

by Dan Haslam

Last year at Homecoming a large, official-looking van wheeled into the WDOT studios on College Street, and to the surprise of the curious frat brothers who had gathered around, the troopers aboard the van offered post-game breath tests for over 200 of the onlookers to determine the alcoholic content in the participant's bloodstream.

The van, one small part of the Vermont's CRASH program, travels through four counties in the state as a source of surveying drivers of their alcoholic level. When needed the vehicle is, as Tom Riley of the CRASH program suggested, "a travelling billboard" which tends to remind drivers to be prudent when they integrate drinking and driving.

The CRASH program grew out of a 1968 report to Congress which showed that 27,000 (50%) of all automobile-involved deaths a year are caused by drinking drivers. The report also stated that two-thirds of these deaths are directly attributable to the problem drinker and alcoholic. Project CRASH, a federally funded program, is administered out of the Department of Transportation in Washington as one of 35 alcohol safety programs in 9 areas in the country. The State of Vermont, in conjunction with the Departments of Mental Health, Motor Vehicles, Public Safety, Corrections, and Education oversees CRASH's operation. CRASH might best be described as an effort to alert the citizen to the overwhelming problems of the drinking driver. In a paper published through Mr. Riley's office, "Vermont Doesn't Tolerate Drunk Drivers," five purposes of CRASH are outlined as being: educative to the public and the convicted DWI (driving while intoxicated), profiling new drivers in an effort to help those with a tendency toward

Fourth S.A. Candidate Wages Write-In Campaign

by Barbara Frankel

Steven C. Rice, who in the past has served as both President of IRA and Assistant Editor of the Cynic, is waging an active write-in campaign for Student Association President. Rice claimed to have been unaware of the filing procedures for regular candidacy, which is why his name will not appear on the ballot as a regular candidate along with Sig Heller, Alan King and Rob Desautels during the election on March 19-21.

In his campaign, Rice, a junior from Bennington, Vermont, is stressing the present impersonality of student government. He stated, "Students at UVM have pretty much lost faith with the S.A."

The S.A. is out of touch with the eight thousand students who attend this university.

This includes the executive branch of the S.A. I don't think this is because the students are apathetic but because the representatives are apathetic."

Rice further emphasized the need for responsive S.A. representatives who must "reach out to the public." He suggested newsletters and meetings with their constituencies in order to have the representatives respond to student's questions in a more direct manner.

Rice supports the proposed new S.A. Constitution, including the provision which gives students the right to request a refund of their S.A. Fee. He commented that, "this makes the S.A. more responsible to the students. Perhaps this will make them (the S.A.) work a little harder." He also favors giving organizations, such as the Committee Against the War, "small amounts to get them started on their own fund raising, but not enough to fund their activities."

Steven Rice feels that the role of the S.A. President is to make himself known to the students. He stressed the point that the President "is accountable for everything that happens and must, above all else, be sincere in his actions."

Academic Council Discusses Potential 1974 Budget Deficit

by Bruce Madden

The University of Vermont budget and salary guidelines were discussed at the March 1st meeting of the Academic Council. Among the issues mentioned was the potential deficit for fiscal year 1974, revenue producing mechanisms and salary projections and fringe benefits for fiscal year 1974.

According to the present data the university could incur a total potential deficit of $1.7 million. The deficit is made up of three parts. The first and major part concerns the state appropriation to the university. In the budget UVM submitted to the governor, the university asked for an appropriation of $11.35 million. The governor then cut this to $10.14 million. This represents a general cut in appropriations, not a cut in specific programs or uses the governor saw as unwarranted. The difference here is $1.21 million. The remainder of the deficit comes from roll-back from FY 1973 (deficit of FY-1973) and federal cutbacks in UVM's FY 1973.

The University has several mechanisms to reduce the potential deficit. Among them are: a) an appropriation of $5 million by the state legislature in excess of the governor's request b) a rise in in-state tuition (out-state tuition increase was included in the budget request) c) income from proposed credit hour charge for hours over 18 d) admission of more out-of-state freshmen and transfer students. The $1.5 million restoration in the state appropriation has been recommended by the Legislature contingent upon no rise in in-state tuition for 1974. With all these possibilities the University faces a potential deficit of $6 million.

"Additional means of reducing this are being studied on a priority basis. This is most important," President Andrews commented, "because a recent five-year projection shows a

Poorly Attended Senate Meeting Accomplishes Very Little

by Bruce Madden

Tuesday night's meeting of the Senate brought to light once again the many problems confronting the Senate over the present constitution and the proposed constitution. Major discussions for the evening centered around the amended version of the present constitution, written by the Senate Workshop last month.

Attendance was taken and a very low percentage of senators answered the roll. At one point during the meeting, quorum was called and was reached by less than five percentage points. Bill Sisco, S.A. President, spoke for the Coordinating Committee. He announced that eight voting machines had been received from Montpellier for use in next week's presidential election. Also, a schedule was given to senators of polling places and times for poll work. Machines will be at Billings, Waterman, Marsh, Lafayette, the Bookstore and the Library on March 19, 20 and 21.

The Concert Bureau announced two definite concerts for April, Logans and Messiaen, on April 11th, at the price of $3 with a UVM I.D. and James Taylor on April 21 for $5, with a UVM I.D. Tickets will go on sale after vacation.

Tom Grant, S.A. Treasurer, announced that Budget hearings have been taking place and will continue for some time. Anyone interested may attend. They are held Monday and Wednesday afternoons at Billings Center.

The Central Committee report centered on two meetings held last week. The Academic Affairs Committee

VPIRG Fights For Dental Care For Children

by Deborah Cadwell

VPIRG works and the people of Vermont alike are anxiously awaiting decision on the Comprehensive Dental Care Bill H321, before the House Appropriations Committee this month. The bill was introduced to the House by Representative Brian Burns of Burlington and referred to the House Appropriations Committee on the same day.

There are 47 co-sponsors of this bill which provides for education, screening, diagnosis and treatment of Vermont children under 18 years of age. Jeff Ewen, alternate trustee of VPIRG at UVM, voiced his disappointment with several of the sponsors of this bill, among them Esther Cohen, Democrat from Burlington. Ms. Cohen, who is commonly referred to as a liberal withdrawal her approval when Governor

Ewen added that "If the bill comes up she'll vote for it, but she didn't want to stick her neck out to sponsor it."

VPIRG, under the leadership of Health Specialist Jay Breines, has produced some health statistics, published in a major report titled, "Nothing to Smile About: A Report on the Dental Health of Vermont's Children." The most revealing statistics are stated in the headlines, such as the fact that 50,000 Vermonters have no teeth, 50% of Vermont school children have some form of pyorrhea, a gum disease, and 50% of Vt. schoolchildren also have not seen a dentist by the time they reach the age of 15.

Two conclusions of the report were that the majority of Vermont families can not afford proper dental care for their children, and there just are not enough dentists to take care of people's teeth, with or without money.

H321 proposes to provide funds for families who have children but cannot provide proper dental care for them. More affluent families will be expected to pay what they can afford, depending on income and the number of children. For those families who go for periodic checkups there will be overall reduced rates as an incentive for regular attendance.

Another provision is for an educational program in dental health for children in schools all over the state, instead of in the populated areas only. Jeff

Ewen noted that, "As you correct existing problems, more and more money each year could be shifted to dental hygiene education. Eventually a greater emphasis will be placed on this."

The Secretary of the Agency of Human Services will decide which areas need more extensive work, should the bill pass. He will be able to design a comprehensive program for the education of children concerning dental habits and care. Ewen was optimistic about this person's part in the program and said, "Hopefully VPIRG will be able to work with the Secretary of Human Services Agency in this area."

There is also a problem involving the distribution of dentists throughout Vermont. Right now one third of all dentists in the state are located in the Burlington area. Through the use of mobile units and subsidized dental care, the proposed bill provides adequate funds, ($11,500/yr.)

for those dentists who were reluctant to participate for financial reasons.

H321, in the first year, will cost Vermont $822,000. For this reason Representatives

Hebert and Kennedy predict it's death in the House Appropriations Committee. According to Ewen, they place the blame on Governor Salmon, because of his property relief tax, which lessens the amount of available funds. Ewen was also pessimistic about Salmon's endorsement of the Dental Care Bill. He added, "The amount of money spent on dental care has been tripled. This doesn't have much to do with Governor Salmon. It is a built-in, automatic increase."

As far as the effects this bill would have on Burlington was concerned, Ewen said, "Burlington, on a per capita basis, will be affected less than

Forensic Union Of UVM Offers Discussion & Debate Programs

The Lawrence Forensic Union at the University of Vermont is offering programs of discussion and debate available to any organization or group in the state.

The programs, which can be presented in any format preferred by the host organization, with or without audience participation, are based on such topics as the property tax burden and how to relieve it; control of large real estate developments; management of the Vermont deer herd; and a government health care program.

Pros and cons of the topic are presented in the programs, which are offered free to the public and are available until May 1. The topics are fully researched by the UVM students participating, to enable them to offer a full and balanced presentation.

The Lawrence Forensic Union is part of the department of communication and theatre at UVM, and includes discussion, debate, and individual events such as extemporaneous speaking and oral interpretation of literature.

The Union was started during the 1940's by Dr. Robert Huber, former chairman and member of the department faculty, in order to enable Vermonters to be aware of the issues confronting them.

For further information, or to arrange for a presentation of discussion or debate, contact Dr. Huber, department of communication and theatre, The University of Vermont, Burlington.

High School Debate Tournament Trophies Captured By Burlington

On Friday, March 9 the UVM Department of Communications and Theater hosted their annual Debate tournament for High School novice and varsity divisions in Vermont. Events culminated in Memorial Lounge, Waterman-Saturday, March 10, at 3:15 where Burlington captured all three trophies for novice and varsity sections. In the varsity division, first and second speaker awards were claimed by Chris Dyck and Bill

Summer Program Offers Varied Learning Environments

A highly flexible schedule and a variety of alternative learning environments are promised the student by the University of Vermont's Summer Session, and those promises can be met in innumerable ways.

"Our stress is on options for the student," says Summer Session Director John Bushey, and he illustrates those options very well.

The flexible schedule includes courses running from one to six weeks in duration with six different starting dates. Day-to-day schedules are flexible too, with both traditional courses, independent study, and courses meeting at many points around the state.

The student who wishes to do so can earn nearly a semester's credit during the Summer Session. "Many students want to take a semester off," he says, "and this way they can do it and still graduate with their class."

Three programs are offered. These include the traditional program, with some 250 courses available, and the extended campus and experiential program, which will take advantage of things unique to Vermont—from the Shelburne Museum to a landscape near Corinth. The third program, "the future of mankind," is an interdisciplinary program structured to bring students together on a regular basis with students in other disciplines. In addition, the students in these nine courses plus their instructors, will gather weekly for a forum with a noted speaker on the general subject of the future of mankind.

"In attempting to respond to expressed student needs," says Mr. Bushey, "we find we're following some of the general recommendations made by the Task Force on Reorganization last December. The recommendations he refers to emphasize the need for greater flexibility and more interdisciplinary cooperation."

Each school was allowed affirmative (arguing for) and negative (arguing against) teams of two in both divisions. The national topic debated for 1973, concerns the provision of federal aid to education. The events were structured into 4 rounds with additional semi-finalist and finalist rounds for the varsity sections. These were held in both Waterman and Billings. Team members were each allowed an eight minute constructive speech, a four minute rebuttal, then finally a three minute cross-examination period.

David Waite, faculty sponsor from the Dept. Com. & Theater, and Nancy Rounds, secretary of the Vermont Debate League, carried out the events and organization of the tournament. Time keepers were UVM students who voluntarily donated spare time over the weekend. As Dave Waite commented briefly, the judges were composed of a "fair collection of former champions." There were 26 judges. Amongst these were Sam Fren, state champion 1972; Dan Mulhany, state champion in 1971; Woody Stalter, winner in 1967-68, and Jim Sanderson from the Republican state committee. The bulk of the judges was composed of other UVM debaters.

Of the three trophies presented two are rotational. The Edwin W. Lawrence trophy—dated to 1932—is the varsity award. This one was decided upon in the semi-finalist round when both Burlington teams made the finals. At this point it became an inter-urban competition. The victor was the team of Rothwell and McKegney. The Wilmond Parker novice trophy was obtained for Burlington by Nina Coit, while her varsity counterpart, Bill Power received the Burlington Free Press trophy for first speaker which he will keep. The finalists in the events were assured of scholarships should they decide to attend the University in the fall.

The novice contenders for speaker and team awards included the schools of Brattleboro, Burlington, Chelsea, Essex Junction and Otter Valley. Awards for the first affirmative team went to Call and Coit of Burlington and second affirmative team was taken by Kautzman and Thurston of Otter Valley.

Dave Waite concluded the events by thanking all those who in any way helped in the execution or organization of the debates. Saying he understood why one always mentions these people, "It very simply couldn't have happened without them."

UVM Choral Union Sings Of Vermont

A rich and little-known store of music written by Vermonters comes to light with the recent release of the record album "Vermont Harmony," sung by the University of Vermont Choral Union and featuring music by composers who lived in Vermont shortly after the American Revolution.

Under the direction of Prof. James Chapman of the UVM music faculty, the record features a sampling of music by eight "psalmists"—composers of church music—who were active on the Vermont frontier from 1790 to about 1810.

Easily the best known of these members of the first distinctively American school of musical composition was Justin Morgan of Randolph, all of whose music has come down to us is presented on one side of the record.

Morgan, already famed for his breeding and training of Figure, the great progenitor of the Morgan breed of horses, is winning increasing attention in musical circles for his compositions, among which are the folk-like tune "Amanda" and the stark "Judgment Anthem," said to have been the most popular anthem in New England Protestant churches during the last decade of the 18th Century.

Other Vermont composers represented on the record are Eliakim Doolittle, Uri K. Hill, Eliasa West, Ebenezer Child, Hezekiah Moors, Joel Harmon, Jr., and Jeremiah Ingalls.

All except Morgan compiled and published "tunebooks," yet they were at the same time tradesmen such as coopers and housewrights, and farmer-pioneers who were clearing fields and building log cabins even while they were writing music.

The lively "fuguing tunes" which make up a large part of this type of music remained popular, especially at revivals and camp meetings, or in country churches, long after the city churches had turned to a more staid type of music.

The musical and historical significance of the Vermonters' compositions have been recognized by the Vermont Council on the Arts, which awarded a grant to the Choral Union to help defray the cost of production. Any profit from the record will be used by the Choral Union to begin work on a second record.

"Vermont Harmony" is a technical production of Earth Audio Techniques, Inc., on the Philo label. It is available from the University Choral Union; P.O. Box 3043, North Burlington Station, Burlington, Vt. 05401.

Enroll in the new Human Engineering Fields of Civil Engineering!

More and more people are becoming involved in the decision making processes that shape our environment. The faculty of the Civil Engineering Department is deeply involved in teaching, research and outside activities that have profound effects on the people of Vermont. A sample of these projects are as follows:

Sewage treatment systems for ski areas and other recreational areas
Effect of interstate highway systems on environment
Eutrophication Control - new methods of removing plant nutrients from waste-waters using nitrification, denitrification and phosphorus precipitation Alternatives to the flush toilet for rural areas
Effect of natural decay processes on water quality
Feasibility of water reuse in industry and domestic areas
Transportation alternatives to the automobile Evaluation of the environmental resources of the Burlington waterfront Prediction of floods and flood control areas
Structural collapse of wood, steel, and concrete under varying snow loads Optimum home construction and insulation techniques for Vermont

Many courses in the Civil Engineering Department are now open to anyone desiring further knowledge in these human engineering fields of Civil Engineering. Become involved in these exciting projects by enrolling in one or more of the courses listed below. Selected courses available this fall semester in the Civil Engineering Department are as follows:

Title	Description	Course No.	Code
Community Design	Principles and methods of community for an "optimum quality" environment.	CE 232	6299

Reorganization Of Several Offices To Improve Service

In an effort to improve services to faculty and other members of the UVM community who are applying to external sources for funds to support research and instructional programs, the Office of Federal Programs and the Office of Sponsored Projects Administration are being reorganized as of March 1, 1973. The Office of Academic Program Support will replace the Office of Sponsored Projects Administration. Under the direction of Mr. Steve Stoddard, this office will be responsible for the accounting, financial reporting, and auditing functions regarding restricted fund accounts. The staff will work closely with the Office of Academic Program Support in an effort to assist faculty to effectively manage their grant and contract funds and to successfully carry on their sponsored academic projects.

Faculty, staff, and students who are interested in developing proposals to be submitted to governmental agencies, foundations, and corporations are requested to pursue their interests through the Office of Academic Program Support. The staff will assist in processing all grant and contract applications to the external funding agency on behalf of the University.

For S.A. President—Sig Heller

There are three recognized candidates running for President of the Student Association this year. Rob Desautels, Alan King and Sig Heller, and one known write-in candidate, Steven Rice. We feel, for a number of reasons, that Sig Heller is the best possible choice for this office.

Some of his opponents and their supporters have cited the fact that Mr. Heller has had little practical experience in the Student Association. This is unjust. As President of the Inter-Residence Association, an office he has filled with distinction, Mr. Heller has been a member of the Coordinating Committee of the S.A. and has worked closely with the president on several occasions. Additionally, Sig Heller has taken an active interest in the S.A. Senate, which can be shown by his constant attendance at Senate meetings this semester.

We can only judge a candidate for office on two criteria — his past performance and his public statements. Sig Heller, during the past year, transformed IRA from an ineffectual "do-nothing" organization into one of the most organized, efficient groups on campus. IRA, under his leadership, can certainly boast an impressive array of accomplishments. Hopefully, Sig Heller would perform a similar miracle for the Student Association, which is sadly in need of able leadership.

Mr. Heller's recent public statements have certainly shown much forethought and integrity. While we do not agree with him on some of the major issues of this campaign, we can only respect and admire his honesty, sincerity and frankness in expressing his opinions.

Of all the candidates for Student Association President, Sig Heller has, by far, during his time at this university, accomplished the most towards bettering student life. He is the only one who has constantly, in the past, stood up for student rights by decisive, direct actions. Mr. Heller has not remained comfortably sitting on his rear; only standing up to declare his candidacy. He has, instead, been a strong and able student leader in the past. We can only hope that your votes will enable him to continue in the future.

Letter:

Beer Blasts Are Fine, But Frats Can Do More

To the Editor:

As a graduating senior and a member of a Greek-letter organization, I was rather distressed to read (W) Harwood's letter in the March 8 issue. Apparently his concept of a good Greek system and mine are quite far apart. Whereas he would like to limit Greek functions, such as beer blasts, solely to Greeks, I should not. And although I can appreciate his desire to regain a Greek identity, I think we are at odds over how to do it.

For 4 years now the fraternities on this campus have been content to sit by and allow in self-pity over the loss of Kake Walk and foregoer. But since that time I have been frankly perplexed by the decline which has set in. Were the Greeks offering friendship and brotherhood, or were they selling two tickets to the best winter carnival in America and all of its accompanying frivolities? THESE are the questions which we, as Greeks, must address ourselves to if we are to remain an integral part of campus life.

Since the demise of Kake Walk many houses have gone the route of the beer blast. In wallow in self-pity over the loss of Kake Walk and foregoer. But since that time I have been frankly perplexed by the decline which has set in. Were the Greeks offering friendship and brotherhood, or were they selling two tickets to the best winter carnival in America and all of its accompanying frivolities? THESE are the questions which we, as Greeks, must address ourselves to if we are to remain an integral part of campus life.

Horrors Of Witchcraft Oppose Christianity

Dear Editor:

I write out of concern for the special topic course on witchcraft. I do not wish to make any kind of a protest for I feel strongly that we should be aware of the realities of witchcraft and all that it has done and does to people in our world.

However, my experiences have shown me, as well as the testimony of the Bible which regard as God's word, that profound things can happen to people in the realm of the spiritual, some good and some bad. I have given my life to Jesus Christ and I can testify to the beauty of what happens when a person experiences the reality of having Jesus as Lord and savior, but I can also testify to the horror of what can happen to a person experiencing the reality of the occult.

In Deuteronomy chapter 18 verses 10-11 God makes it very clear about how He regards the activities of the occult.

"Let no one be found among you who makes his son or daughter pass through fire, or augur or soothsayer, or diviner or sorcerer, or one who casts spells or traffics with ghosts and spirits, and no necromancer. Those who do these things are abominable to the Lord."

I write therefore to express a word of caution: special projects or other preoccupations in the area of the occult can do things to people. People getting into this are usually curious, but have no idea of what can happen. Real and powerful forces are operating in the occult, all of which are opposed to the power of God as seen in Jesus Christ, all of which can cause great harm. Please be careful!

offering 15 kegs/blast for $100. then its members should also tolerate the inconvenience which Mr. Harwood so well described. However, if only some houses would stop, take a look at themselves, and realize that they have so much more to offer than that, they might find themselves in a much better and happier position.

Yours very truly,
Jeffrey Yacker, '73

Grant Amnesty:

We Must Heal All Wounds Of War

by S. Keith Rice

The longest war in American history is over. After eleven years of bloody fighting, after 46,000 American lives lost, after years of traumatic social upheaval at home, our military involvement in Vietnam has ended and the POW's are coming home. Now the wounds created by this tragedy can begin to heal. We will continue to aid our veterans and help them find jobs; we will absorb the returning POW's and help them to adjust to the many changes that have taken place since they last saw home; and we will hopefully, re-direct some of the billions spent on funding a foreign war towards solving some of our internal problems.

But there is one wound that will not heal, and it continues to fester and become more acute with every passing day. For when the last POW is home, and the last troops step down on U.S. soil, some 10,000 to 15,000 draft evaders will still be in foreign lands, many waiting and wondering when they too can come home. Unfortunately for them, it is anybody's guess as to how this question will finally be resolved. President Nixon has said that he will not grant amnesty, for these men have evaded the law and must pay a price to return home. Pressure is mounting, however, in public circles and in Congress, to declare a general amnesty for all draft evaders. When all the POW's are home, this question will again emerge as a top issue.

As we look back, many people today believe we were wrong to become involved in the Vietnam conflict to begin with. Our troops were sent to intervene in a civil war; a war that should have been fought and resolved by the Vietnamese people alone. In the eyes of many young Americans, this was an immoral war (if indeed, any war are moral) and participating in it in any way would be a crime against himself as well as his country. Consequently, when confronted with a draft notice, many chose to leave the United States because of personal moral convictions that made it impossible for him to stay. Personally, I was lucky enough to draw a high draft number, and thus was never faced with that portentous decision; if I had been, however, I would have considered Canada as a possible solution also.

At any rate, these decisions are tough ones to make. And

What we need is windmills, out in the ocean, producing hydrogen gas. This can be used directly for heating and power or converted to electricity. When used, it produces only water and energy which are just what it was produced from. What more perfect cycling do we ask for?

The basic concepts for a hydrogen system are well understood. It has been calculated that the cost of installing a hydrogen delivery system would be comparative with that of high voltage electrical transmission. I believe the problems would be peanuts compared to those related to nuclear plants, strip mining, pollutants, exhaustion of natural resources or damage to the fragile arctic biota from a pipeline there.

In the past the variability of the wind made it impractical as a source of electricity which can not be stored in quantity. But the ability to store hydrogen under pressure now removes this difficulty, and it avoids the need for the pump stations now being planned for nuclear plants.

Why do we provide the Atomic Energy Commission with billions of dollars and disregard this simple environmentally good method of obtaining power?

Because we have been led into making the wrong investments? Who gives a hoot about how long our environment and our civilization hold out when we have so much invested in degrading them? I think, at heart, we all do.

There are also other environmentally superior sources of energy for near-future use if we made the effort to utilize them and stopped pouring our time and money into the dangerous fast-breeder nuclear reactor and other systems accelerating our demise.

Letters To The Editor

OVP, Unlike Bac Mai, Deserves S.A. Funds

To the Editor:

In the last issue of the Cynic, you quoted Rob Desautels candidate for SA President, as saying, "If the financial committee supported OVP, there is no reason not to support Bac Mai." I feel there are important differences between OVP and Bac Mai which render this comparison invalid.

The Office of Volunteer Programs is a student/administration run service to find volunteer work for students. The money that SA appropriates goes toward defraying expenses that the volunteer would incur (such as travel and materials). I feel that it is unjust to say that OVP is the same as Bac Mai simply because both would serve the community outside UVM.

If a student organization is automatically cut off from funding simply because it serves the community, there is something grossly in error. Such logic would lead to the demise of not only OVP, but such organizations as the radio station, the theatre, the Speaker Bureau, the Concert Bureau, SA Films, the UVM Band, and in fact the Cynic itself. If we accept the logic that the University is preparing people for the future of the community, then the University also would have to be dismantled.

Sincerely,
Michael Weinberg

S.A. President Evaluates Successors

Editor's Note: The opinions stated below belong solely to Mr. Sisco. They do not, in any way whatsoever, reflect the views of the Cynic Editorial Board.

by D. Wm. Sisco
S.A. President

The S.A. Presidency is about to go through the yearly ritual of installing a new Executive Officer of the Student Association. On next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday the students will go to the polls for the largest voter turnout in a S.A. Presidential Election and select their choice for President. There are three earnest candidates and the usual scattered rumors of various write-in candidates, and a review of the Presidential potential of three major candidates ought to be outlined.

Bob Desautels, a sophomore from Barre, is filling campaign shoes worn by John Franco in last year's election. The correlation is even more evident when one is reminded that Mr. Desautels and Mr. Franco are roommates. Nevertheless, Mr. Desautels is carrying the banner of the group that keeps insisting S.A. fees be sent to North Vietnam. The students have already said "no" to Mr. Desautels and his crew once, but they weren't impressed. It seems they know what is best for the students even if the students don't agree. Well, if they lose at the polls again, this time with Mr. Desautels as figure head, they might realize the student body isn't buying their "messiah routine."

Alan King, a junior, and the Senator from Fidi is running and representing the side of the Senate that has opposed Mr. Desautels' coalition every step of the way. While Mr. King has done a good job of voicing the objections of the conservative wing, he has not been able to stand above the coat tails of some of the more vocal members of the right. This is not the best of positions for a person seeking an office where one must meet the test of standing away from the partisan bickering and make objective observations on behalf of the student body. Mr. King probably won't win the Presidential election; however, the loss of the executive seat should not discourage him from returning to the Senate and asserting himself into the position of leadership his wing of the Senate is so desperately lacking.

Mr. Sig Heller, a sophomore, and the President of the Inter-Residence Association, has demonstrated his executive capability with an extremely successful year as the leader of IRA. While Mr. Heller has been able to deal quite effectively within his own organization, it does not necessarily follow he will enjoy the same success with the Senate. Yet, he should be able to work with the University in furthering the overall student interest in a manner that will continue to earn the credibility of good representative government for the S.A. which some members of the Senate have seemingly been bent on destroying. If Mr. Heller is able to enlist the support of the common students into forging a new and really productive Senate he should be one of the best S.A. Presidents ever elected.

All of the candidates are earnest in their campaigns, and for this the students can be thankful. The student body will undoubtedly turn out in great numbers for this election and the next President will carry the students' support for his candidacy, the Office of President, and the future of the Student Association.

Life Of Joan Of Arc Will Be Presented In French

In an effort to expand theatrical experiences and events on the University of Vermont campus, the Departments of Communication and Theatre and Romance Languages have combined their skills and talents to stage Jean Anouilh's play L'Alouette (The Lark) entirely in French.

The production, directed by Professor Thomas Gero of the Department of Romance Languages, represents a cooperative effort by the two departments to emphasize the fact that foreign theatre pieces should be presented in their original forms in order that audiences might appreciate the thought of the work as the playwright conceived it. Translations are, at best, only close approximations and therefore do not always generate faithfully the same excitement and intensity that the playwright had intended. That knowledge of language is helpful cannot be denied, but much of the charm of any production comes from its spectacle and music. This production of L'Alouette abounds in both. The costumes, designed by Miss Nancy Haynes, reflect both the opulence of the French court and the poverty of the peasants during the historical period in which the play is set. The music and choreography have also been chosen by Miss Haynes who has had much professional experience in ballet.

A series of platforms rimmed by Gothic arches, simply and unobtrusively constructed, are the setting designed by Gerard Boursier, a junior theatre major at the university.

Finally, the story of Joan herself, a simple peasant girl raised to the position of heroine of her country and tried for heresy, is one that has inspired not only Anouilh, but also George Bernard Shaw, to write a play about the events in the life of Joan of Arc. The two works are as different as any can be while still dealing with the same subject, but it is the events, the person, and what she represented that excites people and audiences.

The role of Joan (Jeanne) will be played by Teresa Elwert, a senior theatre major who spent her junior year in France with the VSOP program sponsored by the university. There has appeared most recently in the Arena's production of Prandello's Right You Are If You Think You Are as Signora Froia.

The two producing departments feel strongly that the opportunity to see this interesting production of L'Alouette at the University of Vermont Arena Theatre should not be missed. It will run from Friday, March 16 through Sunday, March 18 at 8:00 p.m. with a special matinee performance on Saturday, March 17 at 2:00 p.m. Reservations and ticket information are available at the Box Office in Fleming Museum or by calling 656-2094 anytime during the hours from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. The Box Office will open for sales and reservations on Friday, March 9 at 10 a.m.

"The Trial:" Logical Nightmare Questions The Basis Of Society

by Helen Stephenson and Beverly LaPlante

Friday night's presentation of Franz Kafka's The Trial revealed itself as the logic of a nightmare that the author would have intended. Produced, written, and directed by Orson Welles, the film is a brilliant portrayal of perhaps the most horrifying work of the early, but most radical of existential thinkers. The unfolding of the plot coincides with the development of the main character, Joseph K. (Anthony Perkins), through his hellish and nebulous trial for a crime which remains undeclared—a trial which neither begins nor ends in the courtroom. It becomes apparent immediately that Joseph K.'s case is no ordinary one; it is not "a trial" but "the trial." Why must K. just an ordinary K. no more than a conforming cog in the wheel of society, merely an innocent man of mediocrity who "neither denies nor affirms" anything, suffer the inferno of such seemingly undeserved torture?

As the film progresses the arbitrariness of any anchoring framework for living becomes vividly manifest. The comforts of time, of justice, of law and order, of the logic of power, and of human love are shattered one by one and collect in the abyssal despair of Joseph K.'s tortured awakening. It is only now, when he is unfairly accused, when he needs the solidness of the institutions he has always believed to be the steadfast foundation of existence, that Joseph K. discovers their randomness. Shocked, he realizes, slowly and incredulously, that arbitrary justice is merely no justice at all—that only arbitrariness itself remains a constant.

Skillfully juxtaposed against this frightening theme is that of the stark coldness of technology. Indeed, implicit in the film is the suggestion that, surely if technology has not created this nightmare, it certainly has accelerated the destruction of any internalized order or ultimate significance in the life motion of society. Consequently the "necessary," whether in the name of "progress" or in the pacification of societal disruption, becomes an overriding goal. What is necessary is not necessarily just and what is just is not necessarily necessary.

Therefore, the moment that K. the accused, decides he can not act out "the necessary" he has made an irrevocable choice. He is condemned and catapulted like a crazed animal into a living hell. There can be no comfort in his previous faith in the order of existence; there is no solace to be found in the game of the anonymous masses whose rules he rejects. Even the counsel of his advocate, the second important character of the film who is played by Orson Welles, is to no avail. Only the advocate comprehends K.'s position, for he understands all K. has stumbled upon blindly. But unlike K. who madly and desperately blunders forward, the lawyer is resigned.

K.'s choice, as developed throughout the film, is illuminated by the still shots and Welles' narration at the beginning and end. Indeed, these portions of the film superimpose an order on Kafka's work which Kafka himself might have scorned. However, this is probably most "necessary" to render the events intelligible to an audience that may be unfamiliar with Kafka's works. The technique used in rendering The Trial a visual experience was both brilliant and frightening. In a film which is probably better for its lack of color, the use of black and white contrast is artistically employed to evoke a sense of desolation in the viewer. Definitely form and content are most carefully interwoven and reinforce each other throughout the entire film. The long shot that merges into eternity, endless tunnels, passages, labyrinths, and vast empty space emphasize the pervading feeling of futility and nothingness. The background of "modern" construction, which is indistinguishable from destruction, effectively reinforces the theme of the insidiousness of technology. In K.'s enormous office at a bank, mile upon mile of simultaneous type writing, converging into a single monstrous, deafening machine, is more than a mere representation of the anonymity of the "new mass" of technology. The multitude of "close-up" shots of utterly empty, blank faces is equally startling.

Further, the many scenes of cage-like enclosures is one of the most impressive results of the use of line perspective and black/white contrast. Unmistakably this technique forces the abstract dimension of the concept of imprisonment into a concrete reality. This is further intensified by the eerie presence of concentration camp-like figures to represent those who are condemned in mediocrity. Although this is a dimension added by Orson Welles, it is not altogether an unjust one as Kafka himself seems to have foreshadowed the coming of fascism.

Indeed, if the film appears totally illogical, it is out of the greatest necessity. This technique of utter confusion is no more than the essence of Kafka and Orson Welles' intention. For if the viewer is bewildered and frustrated, he must realize that Joseph K. is more so. Clearly the acting of Orson Welles and Anthony Perkins is more than convincing—in the case of the latter it goes deeper than the realm of the necessary. The viewer becomes Joseph K. Joseph K. was late for his trial. The Trial has gone on before him, it will continue after he dies.

British Mystery Hits Burlington

David Haviland in "Sleuth," appearing March 20 at Memorial Auditorium.

"Sleuth," the popular British mystery play, will be performed on Tuesday, March 20, at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium, under the auspices of the Lane Series.

Tickets, $3.75, $5.25, and $6 are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For reservations, phone 656-3418. Still playing on the Broadway stage, where it opened on Nov. 12, 1970, and at London's West End (where it opened on Feb. 12, 1970), "Sleuth" won the Tony Award as the best play of the 1970-71 New York season.

Starring in the hit play, which Clive Barnes of the New York Times called "the best thriller I have ever seen," are two veterans of the stage and screen: George Rose and David Haviland.

George Rose has been a star of a score of Broadway dramas and musicals since his first appearance as a common man in "A Man for All Seasons" in 1961. Born in England, he has appeared on the New York stage in "Much Ado About Nothing" with Sir John Gielgud, in the longrun "Hamlet" of Richard Burton, in "Slow Dance on the Killing Ground," in "The Royal Hunt of the Sun," in "Loot," and, last season, in "Wise Child." His musical appearances were in "Walking Happy," "Canterbury Tales," "The Lady" (Doolittle), and a Tony-nomination performance as Katharine Hepburn's lawyer friend in "Coco." His London performances include eight years with the famed companies of The Old Vic and The Royal Shakespeare Co.

David Haviland, born in Wales, has appeared in the Broadway presentation of "Philadelphia, Here I Come," and on TV and in film in "Barefoot in Athens" with Peter Ustinov and Geraldine Ferrar, "King Lear," "Donovan's Reef" and "Fair Exchange."

The author of "Sleuth," Anthony Shaffer, won the "Best Play" Tony Award for this play in 1971. And the Mystery Writers of America gave him a special Edgar award. He also wrote the film script for "Black Comedy" and also for Alfred Hitchcock's "Frenzy." "Sleuth" is the Londoner's first play. "Sleuth" contains all the elements of a British mystery: including intellectual and delicious humor, and a surprising counter-counter plot, the setting (a rustic, elaborate interior of a country mansion) and the characters. These persons are chiefly a wealthy and urbane mystery writer named Andrew Wyke, who owns the mansion; and an English-Italian semi-playboy named Tilo Tindle, who recently bought a cottage in the neighborhood. The basis for the plot is also classic—a love triangle. It seems that Wyke who has invited Tindle to his house for a get-together, is anxious to get to know the man who is trying to marry his wife! The current coast-to-coast tour of "Sleuth" includes performances in over 114 cities in Canada and the United States. The notable anthologist Stanley Richards picked "Sleuth" as one of the ten all-time best plays of its type for inclusion in his collection "Best Mystery and Suspense Plays of the Modern Theatre," covering 45 years. The other nine are "Dracula," "The Letter," "Dangerous Corner," "Arsenic and Old Lace," "Witness for the Prosecution," "Bad Seed," "Dial M for Murder," "Angel Street" and "Child's Play."

Even if you haven't seen a movie in a long time, don't let this one go by.

"The Man Who Came To Dinner"

Airtight Cast Produces Admirable Play

by Mike Carson

I feel rather badly for our actors that not only may they not have their motions after opening night, but they must actually wait until two days after the play closes to see their names in print other than on the program.

I suppose I am particularly struck by this fact because of the nature of this last dramatic endeavor, The Man Who Came to Dinner. It is a play which by its origin and content transports us directly back to the Broadway of forty years past, a time which for many of us seems magical, as for most of us here it is out of reach—but just barely. Kaufman was, as the program notes point out, a playwright who had no illusions concerning the longevity of his light creations. Moss Hart, a younger man, tells us in his musing but nice autobiography how as a stagestruck boy he dreamed only of growing up to move in circles like the Algonquin Round Table crowd, of which of course through Kaufman he often did not sustain a mood eventually became a member. At any rate, I asked for this assignment because I too am a stagestruck—or, more accurately, 30's-struck—and there is nothing I like better than wallowing in every bit of memorabilia of this period I can dig up.

To make a long tale somewhat longer, I was not also disappointed in my eternal Jennifer Allen as the poor quest last night. The Man Who Came to Dinner was one of the tightest and altogether pleasant productions I've seen at UVM. It remained from beginning to end at a level of only occasionally wavering quality, with numerous spots which would be deemed excellent on anybody's scale of relativity. Thanks, I am sure, for a great part of this go to the student director, Charlie Towers. It is a play which blocks itself, to a great extent, but the actual mechanics of successful comedy are intricate and were almost without exception engineered beautifully.

Terry Demas as Sheridan Whiteside was brilliantly cast. Whiteside, an undisciplined Alexander Woolcott, breaks his hip on the doorstep of a poor unsuspecting midwestern family as a preface to a comic plot I won't try to describe. Mr. Demas was so good that I was sad he did not take the time to fill every last crevice in a difficult performance; he often did not sustain a mood between speeches; he was a bit careless with his face in delivering lines which should thing from becoming one private joke, as blatantly and purposely derivative as it is. The three actors who played these important roles were more than up to the Hollywood entrances demanded of them. Susan Kovarik as Lorraine Sheldon was flawless, and I was totally enraptured with her bitchy pettiness. John Falcomi's British Carlton, also expert (I would have omitted the piano bit, as it marred the shine.) I have reservations about what I assume to have been Mr. Tower's decision to play hell out of Banjo's obvious ancestry. There was an uncomfortable feel about it, as if it were a luxury of uncontrolled impulse. Harpo, yes, was nuts, and unpredictable, and David Pangaro did a noble and funny job on such an inimitable model, but it was a bit too much.

It is damn hard, being an inexperienced critic faced with an admirably executed piece of work, to resist flinging credit broadcast over the bulk of the cast which I haven't even mentioned. I have no qualms about being unprofessional about this, but I do feel limitations of space pressing hard about me. I must end without citing several small but sterling performances: Richard Gutman's Professor Metz, Mary Job as Harriet Stanley, Set Francis Poulenc's SONATA FOR FLUTE AND PIANO, Ralph Vaughn-Williams's SUITE DE BALLET, and Johann Sebastian Bach's SONATA NUMBER ONE IN B MINOR.

The recital is open and free to all. For further information please call 656-2029.

Present Flute, Piano Recital

SASpeakers in cooperation with the Billings Center Governing Board will present a special flute and piano recital in the North Lounge of Billings Center on Thursday, March 15, 1973 at 12:15 pm.

Performing will be Mrs. Anne Dorsam and Mr. Edward V. Powell. Professor Dorsam is a member of the faculty of the UVM Department of Music. She has also in the past been member of the faculties of the New England Conservatory of Music, the Goddard College, and Lyndon College. She has performed extensively in solo and chamber works in the Eastern and midwestern states.

Professor Powell is also a member of the faculty at UVM. He has performed for many years in New York, working with such conductors as Alfred Wallenstein, Andre Kostelanetz, and Donald Voorhes where he was member of the Bell telephone orchestra. Mr. Powell has worked with such artists as Jascha Heifetz, Isaac Stern, Artur Schnabel, and Renata Tebaldi.

The program on Thursday will consist of three pieces: Francis Poulenc's SONATA FOR FLUTE AND PIANO, Ralph Vaughn-Williams's SUITE DE BALLET, and Johann Sebastian Bach's SONATA NUMBER ONE IN B MINOR.

A scene from "To Kill a Mockingbird"

Gregory Peck Stars In "To Kill A Mockingbird:" Next Trial Movie

The Academy Award-winning movie "To Kill a Mockingbird" will be shown on Friday, March 16, in the Great Trial Movie Series under the auspices of the Lane Film Society.

There will be two showings, 7:30 and 10:00 p.m., in March Life Sciences Building Auditorium.

Tickets, $1.00 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door. For reservations, telephone 656-3418.

"To Kill a Mockingbird" received two Academy Awards—Gregory Peck for Best Actor, and Horton Foote for Best Screenplay—and seven Academy Award nominations, as well as innumerable other prizes.

Starring in the movie are Gregory Peck, Brock Peters, Mary Bradham, Philip Alford, and John Megaw.

During the first half of the film, the audience sees a sleepy little Alabama town through the eyes of children. The watchers float on a warm cloud of sweet nostalgia as the camera lazily picks up odds and ends of spoons, buckles, nails, marbles and other bits of paraphernalia dear to the hearts of small children. A childish hand scrawls the figure of a mockingbird on a scrap of paper: "To kill a mockingbird is wrong...he hurts no one, just sings and enjoys the bright sunshine."

Then during the second half we become the active participants and the children the watchers as the terrible drama unfolds. An innocent black is unjustly accused, brought to trial, convicted and then lynched as he tries to escape. Gregory Peck is superb as the respected lawyer who defends the man in the face of a prejudiced town.

Variety hailed the movie as "a significant, captivating and memorable picture with alternating tones of Faulkner, Twain, Steinbeck, Hitchcock and Our Gang comedy." And arresting...gives growing insight into man's inhumanity to man."

The film has been praised as a faithful portrayal of the best-selling novel by Harper Lee, with screenplay by Horton Foote. The director is Robert Mulligan, and the music is by Elmer Bernstein. Running time is 129 minutes.

The final film in the Great Trial Movie Series is "The Caine Mutiny," April 13.

"In Concert" Shows Derek and The Dominos To Be Great Band

by Doug Collette

IN CONCERT
Derek & The Dominos
RSO Records SO 2-8800

However, much I love Layla—and I think it's one of the finest studio rock and roll albums I've ever heard—I never would've gone so far as to say that Derek and The Dominos were one of the greatest bands in the world. Layla is for the most part Eric Clapton's show. Duane Allman inspired him to some of the greatest playing the English legend had done to that time and the interaction between those two men provided most of the fireworks and thus most of the excitement.

In In Concert is something else again. This double set is not a showcase for a star and three sidemen even though Clapton, by virtue of his renowned genius naturally rivets most of the attention. Carl Radle has always been a steady bassist, but the fluidity with which he plays here rivals that of Casady, Leach or Oakley. "Got To Get Better In A Little While" is probably the best example of Radle's inventiveness as he carries the internal rhythm of the song, allowing the other three to elaborate on the basic pattern while he himself adds the kind of subtle flourishes that prevent any sort of predictability on his part.

Jim Gordon has likewise distinguished himself as a precise, logical drummer, but he carries on here with a ferociousness I've never heard from him. His solo on "Let It Rain" is a non-stop drumming bombardment. Bobby Whitlock is an integral and indispensable part of the group, co-composer with Clapton of most of the material, second vocalist and keyboard man; he's the unsung hero of this band but he knew his role and he filled it with perfection.

With the exception of "Got To Get Better," a minor piece of didacticism, all the material here has appeared on record before, but with the cuts ranging from six-and-one-half to seventeen and one-half minutes. There's plenty of new material in the form of lengthy improvisations. Derek and The Dominos churn through these four sides often approaching the vicious energy level of the Allmans in full flight but, also like that band, making delicate use of dynamics. They can play very gently and then launch into a fusillade of rock and roll like "Blues Power" without the least bit of incongruity.

With the keyboards, mostly organ, higher in the mix, the pop element in songs like "Why Does Love Got To Be So Sad?" is more pronounced. Whitlock's wailing helped Eric gain much confidence in his not-so-exceptional voice. Clapton's never sounded more relaxed than on the version of his greatest song, "Presence of the Lord" nor has he sounded less self-conscious than on the ultra-funky "Roll It Over."

Clapton never over-extends his vocal abilities and his trade-offs, with Whitlock on "Let It Rain" utilize the contrast in their voices especially well.

But as Eric has said, he does most of his singing through his guitar. Clapton has never been much for special effects and/or electronic devices, preferring instead to say what he wants to say in the most straightforward way possible (which, paradoxically, is no doubt the most difficult way to communicate through any instrument). When he does use a gimmick though—the wicked wah-wah solo in "Presence of the Lord" for instance—he's easily on par with the master of the electric guitar, Jeff Beck, and at the same time towers over people like Page, Lee and Hendrix, making their spastic phallic forays sound both ludicrous and pointless.

Yet Clapton's fierce playing on "Have You Ever Loved A Woman," done with nothing more than the bare necessities of a guitar and amplifiers does even more for me than a Beck fuzzwahwah, an Allman slide, explosion or a pristine lyricism from Dicky Betts: this blues is

Choir To Perform Passion

The University of Vermont choir will be performing the magnificent St. Matthew's Passion by Bach on Sunday afternoon, March 18, at 4 p.m., in the Ira Allen Chapel. The group will be under the direction of Professor Francis Weinrich.

This work is about the passion of Christ before, during, and after his crucifixion according to the words of St. Matthew.

The part of the narrator will be performed by tenor, Maurice Villemain, director of music at Rice Memorial High School. The St. Joseph's Children's Choir, under Father Paulin will supply little soprano rippling line of the first chorus. The part of Jesus will be performed by Andrew Crispell, bass. The part of Judas will be performed by Stuart Duke, bass. Other soloists will include Stephanie Mahan who will perform the beautiful soprano aria "Bleed and Break." Patti Akley will perform a soprano recitative and Alan King, tenor, will perform in a solo and chorus work. A soprano and alto duet will be performed by Allyson Davis and Lorraine Routhier. An alto aria, "Have Mercy Lord," will be sung by Mina Carson. "Ahi Golgotha" will be sung by alto, Jane Morris. Other soloists will include Gary Moreau, bass, as Pontius Pilate, Grace Salmon, soprano as Pilate's wife, Robert Young as the priest, and Rosemary Groul and Karen Richardson as soloists within the choir.

St. Matthew's Passion consists of single and double choruses, chorales, recitatives, arias and duets. The choir will be accompanied by Mrs. Sylvia Moyer, organist, and Rita Coltan, harpsichordist. The concert is free, and the public is invited to attend—what should be a most interesting and delightful performance.

At last! A part-time job that provides more than part-time spending money.

Many New England Life campus representatives find themselves earning respectable incomes while still in college.

But what's more important than extra money is the chance to get a running start on your post-graduate career. Our internship program involves only a limited amount of your time.

Yet when college is over you'll be fully prepared for a full-time career. In fact you may have up to a year's experience. And how many careers can offer you that?

Call us, 658-4978. We'll find out right away if you qualify. And if you do, when you're ready for the business world, you'll already be in business.

New Arena Theatre To Be In Old Military Building

by Jeanne Cook
The most recent construction work occurring on campus is part of a $1.1 million total renovation project for the Military Science Building as a home for UVM's Arena Theatre.

Louis Pugh, Jr., president of the L. Pugh Contractors, Inc., and Wayne C. Patterson signed a $819,150 contract for the project which was started the first of January and is expected to be completed by the fall semester.

The renovation will provide a 297 seat pit-shaped theatre with all the supportive services needed by the department of communications and theatre for student drama activities, as well as the Champaign-Shakespeare Festival Summer repertory theatre.

The basement level of the renovated building will include working areas for set construction, a costume shop, rehearsal areas, offices, and mechanical and maintenance space.

The ground floor will encompass dressing rooms, a green room, storage, and more rehearsal and office space related to the operation of the theatre.

The building will also be completely adapted for use by the handicapped, with an outside ramp and elevators.

According to Mr. Schenk, professor in communications and theatre, the department "is very pleased about the project as it will be far better than where we are now. We intend to be in there late summer, or at least by early September."

The renovation to be carried out by the L. Pugh Contractors, Inc. will involve the interior work only. The landscaping plan for the building is being developed by UVM students on a voluntary basis.

Two seniors in the college of agriculture and home economics, Wallace Thrall and Mrs. Ellen Sivert, have submitted out-lays of possible landscaping plans.

The lay-outs are to be evaluated in the near future and monetary awards offered. Although it is not definite that one will be used at least part of each will be employed.

Dorm Seeks Ecologically Minded Students

by Bob Haynes

During the past two years Robinson Hall on the Redstone Campus has been UVM's "environmental dormitory," a nucleus around which students who are actively interested in questions and problems relating to environmental quality are able to interact. Recently, Robinson is an ecological microcosm in which residents, sensitive to environmental problems on both practical and aesthetic levels, live according to the physical and spiritual precepts inherent in the principle of ecology. At the same time, however, the realization of such an ideal would not transform Robinson into a closed system, oblivious of the external world; indeed, a central purpose behind the "environmental dormitory" concept is to work actively, either on an individual or group basis, to improve environmental quality in general. In the past, Robinson residents have undertaken numerous projects, such as working with teachers in local schools in environmental education, analyzing samples of polluted water which they took from Lake Champlain and Colchester Bay, helping with local municipal officials for the establishment of bicycle paths in the Burlington area, and lobbying in Montpelier for the promotion of environmental legislation. Though such undertakings presuppose a grasp of the basic problem, it is felt that much learning is acquired through the experience of confronting a given problem directly; as a result, commitment and motivation regarding ecological issues are more important to the success of Robinson Hall than is factual expertise alone. As part of their efforts to augment the effectiveness of their dormitory as an environmental residence hall, Robinson residents are presently in the process of reorganizing its administrative structure. Starting in the Fall of 1973, each of Robinson's 45 residents will undertake a 3-credit environmental project under the auspices of a faculty member of their choice. The project will be undertaken as part of the student's regular course work, subject to basically the same academic regulations as other courses. Because all disciplines are interrelated, definition of what constitutes an environmental project will be reasonably broad, allowing the individual to work in that area which is of greatest interest and significance to him. A limited number of vacancies in Robinson for both men and women are anticipated for the fall semester; any student interested in living in the environmental residence hall should contact Bob Haynes, extension 3085, or visit the dormitory personally, in the near future.

Room Rent Increase Officially Explained

by Harriet Gluck

The Board of Trustees has approved an increase for room rents, beginning with the fall semester 1973. For a double room (per year) the rent will rise from $460 to $585, while a single room (per year) will increase from $520 to $645. Dr. Wayne C. Patterson, executive vice-president, and Mr. Proctor Lovell, administrative support service director, have given many reasons as to why the room rates have been increased. Neither the University nor the state puts any money into the dormitories. The federal government helps to pay the interest on the principle of the necessary bonds. The 3,000 students living in the University's dormitories are the ones who support the living units. Money from the room rents goes into different areas for spending. The largest amount of money is used to pay off the bonds, which are considered as the dormitories' mortgages. Maintenance of the dorms, which includes such things as custodians' salaries and resident advisors' salaries and the upkeep of boilers, is also paid for from the room rents. A third area of spending is used for damages. Any money that is not used goes into a reserve fund which is to upgrade the dormitories.

The expenses of the dormitories are rather costly. Last year's electricity bill was about $69,000, which is approximately $23 per student. About $94,000 was spent on fuel, which is $32 per student. Mr. Lovell pointed out that fuel oil has just about doubled over the last three years. The approximate $25,000 water and sewage bill cost each student $8. Insurance for the dormitories cost approximately $20,000 which is $6.66 per student. Telephone rates will be rising about 25% next year. In general, utility rates have gone up during the past school year. All of these factors contribute to the necessary increase in next fall's room rents.

Students, however, are also paying for abuse in the dormitories, which Dr. Patterson feels is an "unnecessary increase." Dormitory damage came to a $18,000 total last year. Dr. Patterson has encouraged a drive for reduction of damage to the dormitories. There was about $5,000 worth of damage done to the dormitories during the past semester. Redstone had a low of $15 while the $820 worth of student damage done in Davis was the most expensive.

Dormitory roofs should not need repair for about 20 years, yet early deterioration has occurred because of students sunning, walking, or playing on the roofs. Only ten years old, MAT's roof has had about $29,000 worth of repair done on it. Recently a beer can was stomped down on Christie's roof. The can punctured the roof and water seeped through into the insulation. Repair costs came to $4,000 which averages $1.33 per student. Coolidge's roof has been cited for its deterioration due to student abuse.

Student damage occurs in other forms. Last semester the fire alarm wire were cut in Harris-Millis. The fire detection system cost about $33,000 and fortunately, it was not necessary for the purchase of a new system. However, repairs were necessary because it took a good deal of time to locate exactly where the wires were cut. Broken windows, doors, thermostats, ceilings, glass, and furniture also contribute to the damage expenses.

Stolen furniture is also a problem in the dormitories. Dr. Patterson feels that the flexible type of furniture is much better suited for comfortable living than heavy, massive, institutional furniture. Yet, it is the flexible furniture that is stolen. Stolen furniture is also a problem in the dormitories. Dr. Patterson feels that the flexible type of furniture is much better suited for comfortable living than heavy, massive, institutional furniture. Yet, it is the flexible furniture that is

SA Presidential Candidates Disagree On Veto Issue

Candidates Alan King, Sig Heller, and Robert Desautels held a joint press conference on Monday, March 12, at which time they responded to questions by the press. Questions centered around constitutional changes and the feelings of the candidates about the adoption of a new S.A. constitution. All three candidates support the proposed seven-person delegation to the Board of Trustees. Heller said that he believed trustee representation would "ease tensions on the campus" about the lack of student involvement in major school issues. Alan King commented that "there are trustees who are members of the Vermont Legislature," and that it might "improve communications through the Legislature by having students on the Board." Desautels cited a need for "an input" and singled out the rise in out-of-state tuition and room and board costs as one area in which this input would have been useful.

Discussion of the impending presidential veto was characterized by a marked difference of opinion. Desautels argued that he was "definitely against" it and called the referendum system an adequate check to the activities of the Senate. King supports a revised veto; 2/3 of the assembled senate overriding a presidential veto would kill the motion. Heller agrees with the presidential veto and called on the formation of a supreme court to decide the constitutionality of Senate issues. King feels a supreme court would be unworkable; he proposed a parliamentary system.

Candidates were asked their position on the BAC MAF Hospital fund allocated by the Senate which will appear on the March 19-21 referendum. Both Heller and King opposed the issue, while Desautels supported it. Heller pointed to the loss of respect by the students for Senate actions, and King stated he didn't think "it is the S.A.'s place to give money away on outside issues. Desautels, reacting to remarks by the other candidates concerning the December poll question on Medical Aide to Indochina, noted that many developments in the war have made him think student opinion might have changed during this time.

The hour-long press conference was arranged by Paul Cillo, Secretary of elections, and was the last speaking engagement of the candidates before they met with the Fraternity Forum.

Candidates Voice Opinions...

S.A. is the voice of the students to the community, the administration and the faculty. His office should be open to all student questions and complaints. He should be knowledgeable of goings on in and around the campus and relate these events to how they affect the students.

He should initiate proposals for better student life and call upon the wishes of a representative senate. It is his job to publicize the goings on of the senate and to inform the student body when they are not being represented.

Finally, he should have the power to represent student interests through the use of a veto.

King: The office of S.A. President is a very influential position and by this token a very powerful one. The president has access to a lot of information concerning the actual running of the university. He is often called upon by the administration to represent the student views of a particular policy. He is also an ex-officio member of all S.A. committees and can interpret his ideas into them. For this reason, he must have a knowledge of the structure of the S.A. and its functions. As an S.A. senator, I believe I meet these criteria the best of any candidate. The S.A. President must be ready to initiate action when he thinks it is needed and be able to justify his positions. I would be a full-time non-partisan president. I would represent the town people and Greeks and residence halls, not just the latter.

The president should have the power of veto on senate actions. This would be in line with the natural system of checks and balances we all learned about in high school. He should not, however, require that a 2/3 majority be needed to override his veto. The system used in almost all legislative bodies might have a 2/3 majority necessary to override his veto.

Cynic: What relationship do you think the student government should have to the university administration?

Desevile: Under the new constitution, the S.A. senate and executive become a working body by which information can be coordinated and decisions made. The seven members on the Board of Trustees give the students representatives in the university administration. Using this workable framework, the student government becomes a part of the university administration. The student government should work towards a university senate comprise of students, faculty and non-academic employees. This governing body would represent the interests that the university must represent in the future.

Heller: Student government should have a close relationship with the university administration. With a close relationship, tensions are likely to be eased. The student government should have respect for the university administration and demand the same respect in return. The more respect there is by these two groups, the quicker things will be accomplished and the more input students will have towards changing matters to their liking.

King: The S.A. should be on the same level as the trustees and the administration. This should be a parallel structure, with each branch being equal. This would really give the S.A. the power it has been seeking all these years. There should be direct communication with each. Not only should the students have members on the Board of Trustees, but trustees should be invited to attend S.A. meetings and air their views.

Remember too, that the trustees also contain the Governor and several state legislators. This could prove valuable to the students in terms of tuition and state funding if the S.A. President could keep good relations with these people (which would be in addition to the elected trustee representatives). The president really has a helluva responsibility to the students for these matters.

Another link with the administration would be the establishment of an ombudsman to answer student grievances and take suggestions. This, of course, would have to be a person familiar with the university and might even be a member of the administration. The Dean of Student's office is simply to inaccessible.

naked emotion transmuted into scorching electric lead licks.

Though Derek and The Dominos was a very short-lived entity, it was good for us, producing two superb double albums (and possibly a single studio LP in the future). But more important than that, it was good for Eric Clapton: it gave him tremendous self-assurance as a band leader and an all-around artist and it brought out a facet of his musical persona he'd theretofore kept hidden. "Blues Power" says it all.

Beats didn't think I knew how to rock and roll. Lord, I got the boogie-woogie right down in my very soul. Rock on, Eric.

Personnel Statistics Are In Error

by Bruce Madden

The university public relations publication This Week recently presented (February 5) an article concerning the rapid expansion of university administrative personnel. The article gave a gross misrepresentation of the actual facts concerning university employment in the last four-year period. The correct facts and figures were presented in the March 1 minutes for the Academic Council. The President stated that the figures had been checked and were found to be both misleading and in error. The actual facts, according to the administration, are: the chart in question was intended to show only full-time faculty and non-faculty Class P employees.

Class P employees, as stated by Henry Tymecski, personnel director for the university, are those employees that can be classified as professional people, that is, all faculty and management administration.

Another contention in the article published in This Week was the dramatic shift of 83 Extension Service personnel from the 1969-70 "Administration" figures to the 1972-73 figures. Actually in the 1969-70 figures the 83

Extension Service personnel were omitted from the figures. It was an error in which the 83 were listed elsewhere in the 1969-70 figures. The mistake, however, was later corrected and included in the 1972-73 figures.

The actual rise of Class P employees in the four-year period was 37. Of these, 36 had been employees of Class L and T whose positions had been upgraded. Class L and T, as Mr. Tymecski stated, are clerical, technical, or supervisory personnel. Most of the 36 positions which were upgraded involved a shift from the semi-professional type to professional. The jobs involved had actually grown in responsibility and leadership along with the personnel in question to the point where the position of employee no longer had semi-professional but professional positions. As an example, Mr. Tymecski cited a position in his personnel office in which the job became more technical and responsible until the job is now an assistantship in personnel.

The 37th position was a new one: that of Assistant to the President for Human Resources.

The chart used—the term

"Administration" as a catch-all term—to apply to all non-faculty Class P positions but did not make this point clear. In fact, the non-faculty Class P category includes not only administrators but also Extension Service (rural agronomy and home economics advisors and stations), intercollegiate athletics, University Health Services, ETU, library, and student service personnel, as well as non-faculty academic positions (e.g., Research Associates), stated administration sources.

The figures stated in This Week showed a 71.8% increase in personnel compared to a 7.9% increase in faculty. With the actual figures there is a 12.4% increase in Class P administrative personnel.

Other contentions included the statement that allowance should be made for dual appointments which were not included in computer printouts. The administration concluded, "Statistics will be researched for Class L and T and part-time personnel for the same period and these will be duly reported. Only then will there emerge a reasonably accurate picture of total University employment in the past few years."

VPIRG Seeks State Dental Plan

other areas in this state. This will give Burlington children a chance to get major work done on their teeth.

The Dental Health Clinic on Main Street in Burlington is an example of an attempt to provide children in the city with proper dental care. Dentists volunteer their services at a low-wage rate for one year. During this time they rotate, remaining several months at each station, between Brandon, Brattleboro, White River, Mary Fletcher Hospital, and the Burlington Dental Clinic.

Equipment has been provided by federal funds, but most of it is twenty years old and in fairly good condition. Two and a half days a week hygienists from the UVM School of Dentistry visit the clinic to clean teeth. These days the eight chairs are all full. Otherwise it is quieter and the only dentists working are practicing professionals.

There is a hygienist in the schools teaching children proper dental habits and eating habits, according to Ms. Jane Allen, a nurse who has been with the Clinic for a number of years. This teaching hygienist, however, will possibly take a week cut from a full week of teaching to five 1/2 days. The reason for the city's chop in services is once again due to shortage of funds.

Mr. Allen also mentioned the lack of interest on the part of uneducated parents as far as proper dental care for their children is concerned. Occasionally services are made known, or the school lets parents know that their children need immediate care, and the parents do not bring their children to the clinic.

When asked if student volunteers could provide baby sitting or anything else, Jeff Ewen indicated that transportation is a definite problem. "Cost is a determining factor. Hopefully the Human Services Agency will be able to get in contact with people. With the bill these people would have a follow-up after a note is sent home from school, concerning a child's need for dental care."

For this problem the mobile units are important. "These units would be a great opportunity for UVM's dental hygiene people to participate in," Ewen noted. The benefit of the units is that they can go to the people in rural areas who can not afford to travel to dentists in the city.

Filmmaker Kagan To Visit UVM

Jeremy Kagan, a founding member of New York University's Institute of Film and TV, will speak at Carpenter Auditorium on Monday, March 19. Under the auspices of the UVM chapter and united chapters of Phi Beta Kappa, the presentation will begin at 8:00 Monday evening.

At age 26 Jeremy is Phi Beta Kappa's youngest. Visiting Scholar. He is a graduate of Harvard University where he studied Russian and Soviet history and literature. After graduation his interest turned to filmmaking, and he helped found New York University's Institute of Film and TV. While in New York he made a number of films including: Once Upon a Line, an animated cartoon which was awarded Best Animated Student Film by the Animators Association; Mate Game, a 30-minute live action science fiction comedy which played on NBC and won awards from NSA and the Chicago Festival; and How Do You Seduce a Man? a twenty-minute pseudo-documentary comedy which played at the 1969 New York Film Festival and London, and with others has "late night" theatrical distribution.

A fellow of the American Film Institute's Center for Advanced Film Studies for the past three years, Mr. Kagan has just completed a 90-minute tragic/comedy entitled The Love Song of Charles Faberman. His most "spectacular" undertaking was a half-hour multi-media show, No More Mondays, created especially for the 1970 White House Conference on Youth and Education. Dealing with the issue of what learning could be like for children in the 21st century, it utilized color films and slides projected onto nine screens, 16-track stereo sound, electronic music, live commentary, laser beams and three-dimensional holographic images. Also while at the Center Mr. Kagan completed a short comic pseudo-documentary entitled The "What Did You Think of the Movie?" Movie. It opened the 1970 New York Film Festival and has won prizes in the Chicago Film Festival and played theatrically in Los Angeles, New York, Chicago and Washington. Recently accepted as a member of the Director's Guild of America, Mr. Kagan has directed a number of television movie series.

Veteran Hopes To Return To Viet Nam

As the last of American fighting men return from Viet Nam, hoping they will never go there again, a University of Vermont student who is a veteran of that war says, "Some day I'd like to go back there."

But not to fight again, quickly adds Thomas A. Willard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley N. Willard of Williston. The former Seabee says, "I'd like to see some of those roads I worked on, to see how they were completed. I'd also like to see some of the friends I made there."

Friends? "I particularly remember a plantation owner I was on a highway survey team and we surveyed a section that was going to cut into his banana trees. Of course he was mad about it. So we went back, worked some more, and found another route so we wouldn't have to cut those valuable trees. He was so happy he had all our crew in for wine and dinner."

Willard was in the Seabee Mobile Construction Battalion 7 for about four years, and went overseas twice with the unit for nine-month stints, as a petty officer second class.

"During my first time there, the Navy was turning over river patrol boats to the Vietnamese, and it was necessary for someone on each crew of those boats to know English. So for the last five months I was there I taught English to them, and became friendly with many of them during that time."

Willard was graduated from Burlington High School in 1964 and entered the College of Technology that fall as a civil engineering major. He flunked out at the end of his sophomore year.

"I was a little too young then," he says now. "My high school guidance teacher said that with my math score I couldn't be anything but an engineer. He was right—I just wasn't ready then."

Willard's experience in the service "turned me on to construction." So he has close work with members of the Civil Engineering Department.

Result: Willard is a dean's list student and recently was named one of the outstanding seniors in his department.

Willard hopes eventually to work in "hydrology in the public" sector and water resources, and says he's personally interested in cleaner lakes and streams in Vermont "because I've seen my favorite trout stream go bad."

Last summer he'll continue his studies on a graduate level. He has been accepted at Colorado State University and will go there June 11, to begin work on an advanced degree. And after that, "I hope to work in Vermont."

Applications For Slade Hall

The French Residence Hall, La Maison Francaise, will be open during the academic year, 1973-74 to Sophomore, Junior and Senior Men and Women who can and want to use the French Language as their prime means of communication.

Those students desiring to live in La Maison Francaise next year should fill out and sign a special form which can be obtained in the Romance Language Department in the Secretary's Office, Room 520 Waterman, between 9:00 am and 12:00 noon, and 1:00 pm and 4:30 pm, Thursday, March 15th through Friday, March 16th. Every applicant should sign a list posted in the Romance Language Department in the Secretary's Office for an interview with Mademoiselle Lendelinger or call her at Ext. 3389.

SA Concert Bureau presents Kenny Loggins and Jim Messina with guest star Casey Kelley April 11th, at 8:00 p.m. in Patrick Gymnasium. Tickets will be sold beginning on the first day after Spring vacation at the bookstore and Bailey's. $3.00 with student ID, $4.00 general admission.

Somewhere on this campus there walks someone who is alone. Whether by choice, or by chance no matter, they are truly alone. They'd love so much to see a smile returned, to feel happy like all of us who are laughing and who are loved. But no one seems to want to take the time to laugh with them, to love them. No one, almost no one at all will touch their hand and just...listen.

Why God? Why must these people be so unloved?

"As a freshman at UVM I had to learn that the world is cold...an adjustment, that meant more than getting used to winter and wind it was the darkness of Spring and Fall, when the seasons were warm, and the sun shining, yet—people were not. It was the cold I felt in those dark lecture rooms, where I was told what to learn and how much to give back, where students and professor were unknown to each other, where I wanted to speak, to feel, to agree or disagree, to be alive in some way—but I could not...I could not interrupt this well-meaning, yet overpowering Ph.D.

It was imperative that he first read his notes on the American Tragedy, then we could disagree...only then it was too late."

Why were people passing each other so coldly? They said, "we're a community, yeah, but man, like we all gotta do our own thing. And that's life, man. That's life."

Is it really?

I wonder. Is there not some way that we can be individuals who do our own thing, yet be individuals who are not afraid to stop and share that "thing" with others, to listen, and maybe even, learn from someone who's not considered cool? Can't we be individuals and yet still care about somebody else besides ourselves. Or as Paul Simon and Art Garfunkel have said, are we like rocks and islands which feel no pain, which never die, but which are also never born. Yet on this campus a light shines. A place on Redstone on the way to your dorm. Signs outside say—"Free coffee inside!" But there is really much more, so much more. There is love. There are people, people

QUESTION: How long should a donor wait to donate blood after experiencing asthma or hayfever in order to insure that nothing in his blood would cause harm or discomfort to the eventual recipients?

ANSWER: Blood is accepted from people with asthma or allergies. But, such people should not give blood on a day when they have had an asthmatic attack or if their allergies cause difficulties. If they have received a desensitization shot, they should wait one week before donating. The use of antihistamines and most other medications that prevent an attack of asthma, do not prevent a person from being accepted as a blood donor. The guiding principle behind accepting blood donors is that they should not have anything in their blood which could cause a reaction or infection in a recipient. It is believed that there may be substances in the blood of people with certain types of active allergic reactions that could produce similar reactions in recipients.

QUESTION: Does sexual stimulation affect the growth of breasts? My breasts were small until seven months ago when I began my first sexual encounter. About three months ago my boyfriend and I noticed the increase of my breast size. Actually I have grown to a C cup from the A cup I have worn several years. I am almost 20 years old.

ANSWER: Fortunately or unfortunately, depending on your point of view, sexual stimulation does not affect the growth of breasts. Nor does it affect the growth of penises, incidentally. Increasing from an A cup to a C cup in three months is an interesting observation which prompts me to make several inferences. I assume you would have been kind enough to let me know if you gained 20 to 30 lbs during this period of time, so I will eliminate simple obesity as a possibility.

Since you have been having sexual intercourse I hope you and your boyfriend have been sensible enough to use contraception. If you began to take birth control pills about the time your breasts started to increase in size, it would explain much of what you describe. Some women experience more breast enlargement with the pill than others. On the other hand, if you have not been using birth control, it just might be that you are three months pregnant as breasts enlarge during pregnancy. In any case, the dramatic increase you describe is most unusual and if it continues, I would suggest a visit to a physician.

QUESTION: My boyfriend has warts on his fingers and lately I have been developing small ones in the vaginal area. Even more recently he has developed a wart on the shaft of his penis. Is it possible that we are passing this condition back and forth? He has been to a dermatologist about his warts, but nothing seems to get rid of them. Any advice?

ANSWER: Warts are an infectious disease. They are caused by a virus and the best guess is that all warts are probably caused by the same virus but look different depending upon the part of the body that is infected. With the exception of warts in the genital area and the soles of the feet, they usually occur on uncovered parts of the body. The wart grows in the superficial layers of the skin and does not invade the deeper tissues. The very helpful expert on warts that I queried, told me that warts are encouraged by skin irritation and he assured me that they could be spread from one part of the body to another. Therefore, it is possible that your venereal wart did come from your boyfriend. However, it would be hard to tell whether the wart on his penis came from you or from himself, unless he is so inventive that he gets through each day without touching his own penis.

While uncomfortable and ugly, warts are not dangerous, therefore, in the words of a printed source I consulted, "Heretic treatment is not indicated." Non venereal warts are usually removed by cutting them off the surface of the skin if they do not disappear spontaneously. Another method is to freeze them with liquid nitrogen or other such means. Warts on the surface of the foot (planter warts) require more vigorous cutting since they are pressed inward by the weight upon them. The venereal wart is treated by the application of a topical poison which is usually successful in one or two tries. If not, they can often be taken off with a special instrument.

From your letter I would suggest that your boyfriend definitely make another attempt to get rid of the warts on his fingers and on his penis. Until you both get rid of them, I am sad to say, he should keep his fingers away from your genital area unless he wears surgical gloves. In addition, use of a condom during this time would also be wise.

QUESTION: What are the chances of becoming pregnant 15 months after menstrual cycles cease? In other words, when is it safe to discontinue contraceptive?

ANSWER: When a woman enters menopause (time when the periods cease) which is usually when she is in her 40's, she faces an especially tricky time with regard to contraception. Ovulation during this time can still occur but can be very irregular. This can result in an unwanted pregnancy much later in life than is acceptable to the couple and cause a fair amount of distress. These pregnancies are also attended by much higher risk of abnormalities in the baby, especially Mongolism. By the time you reach 15 months after the menstrual periods have stopped, the risk of pregnancy occurring is quite low, but not unheard of. Many doctors recommend use of contraception several years after signs of the beginning of menopause. Some physicians prefer the use of oral contraceptives for this purpose as these drugs also supply estrogen which diminishes naturally during menopause.

UVM RESCUE Squad Responds To Complaints

by Jack Schmidt

This article was written by the Director of UVM RESCUE in an attempt to explain our existence and to give our reasons for any action we have taken that the average student might not understand. What we have done is taken the most obvious complaints that have been brought to our attention via the grapevine and made our response to these questions public. We feel the questions are legitimate and deserve dignified answers. So, here we go.

1) Why do we need an ambulance anyway?
The University has always used Campus Security vehicles for transporting ill patients. However, the more seriously injured students had usually found their own way to the hospital. In many instances well meaning but untrained friends had worsened their injuries by "stuffing them into Volkswagens" etc. By the volume of calls we're getting (approximately 240 last semester with 40% of these emergencies) there is a definite need on a growing campus.

2) Where did you get the money to waste on those show-off uniforms?
The members of UVM RESCUE are required to purchase their own uniforms (approximately $30 per person). We wear them so as to identify ourselves as ambulance people and not policemen, firemen, or bystanders. The uniforms were designed for visibility, practicality, and to avoid appearing like police, etc.

3) Why the big fancy truck instead of just a station wagon?
We had originally thought of buying a van and converting it ourselves, but in order to install the basic equipment required by the State Licensing Board, it was estimated to cost us the same as a commercially built ambulance. So we started shopping. The modular, as the truck is called, has the unique feature of a detachable "box" or aluminum patient compartment. When the engine and chassis wear out, you remove the box and slide in a new chassis. You then have a brand new ambulance for $4,000 instead of $12,000. The box is built to last 10-12 Vermont winters or 3-4 chassis. A long term savings of around $11,000 to $17,000. After all the students are footing the bill and since we're students too, we don't like paying out unless we can see some benefit out of it. An added bonus is that the new modular design is one of the only types of ambulances that meet the new Federal Ambulance Design Criteria. The money for the ambulance came from a $1 surcharge placed on the Health Service fee last June by an act of the Board of Trustees at the request of the Student Association. The Student Association provides us with our annual operating budget. In this way, we can offer our services to UVM students free of any charges. Anyone who pays a Health Service fee whether he lives on campus, in a fraternity or a sorority, or an apartment can utilize our services.

4) How come I always see 5 or 6 people in the ambulance?
This is a strange question. We roll with a standard crew of 3 because we don't have enough bulky, bulldozer types that can lift people with little effort, so we resort to a 3 man crew of driver, crew chief, and medic. Occasionally we have a trainee or an observer who becomes a fourth. Unless you are counting the patient you should never see more than four in the ambulance.

5) How come the ambulance is always parked in front of Harris Hall?
We have to eat too, but we must be able to maintain our emergency response time of 45 seconds at all times so we had to pick our eating place carefully, and since Saga wouldn't come to us, we had to go to Saga. Waterman is closest, but the dining hall is down in the basement and finding a place to park the ambulance is always difficult during the week. At Harris-Mills it is easy to park and the dining hall is on the same level as the ambulance. Drills have shown a response time of 27 seconds from there. We could have used MAT but again we couldn't park the ambulance without blocking traffic. From Simpson and Wright our response time is much greater than 45 seconds. If you notice, the crew at meals picks seats as close to the door as possible and always sit so they can hear the radio. A radio check is made as soon as they are seated to make sure that our dispatcher can contact them.

6) How come you use the lights and siren going to dinner?
I'm afraid you're wrong on this one. According to law the lights and siren (Code 3 in our terminology) can only be used if it will save a life. Each crew must log when they are used and must be prepared to explain their reasons for using them. We have used the lights and siren on less than 25% of our emergency calls and never without good reason.

7) How come you guys can take a $15,000 ambulance and bang 360's in the gym parking lot?
What you saw last October was one segment of our periodic drivers test, which consisted of panic control stops at various speeds and slalom swerve control at various speeds (NO 360's). Our drivers run through periodic reexamination and testing to make sure they can handle the ambulance under all conditions. It's not anything like driving a car and it takes considerable practice to get used to. In the future we hope to do most of tests in more out of the way places.

8) Who finds out when I call the ambulance?
Our records like the Health Services are strictly confidential. Even codes are used to prevent radio monitors from learning about our patients. Our members are forbidden from mentioning names when discussing calls and only Health Service or Hospital personnel are allowed access to your records without your permission.

9) How come you always act so pompous and conceited?
That's an interesting point, and we apologize and promise to work on it. We hope we're never conceited because being that sure of your self may lead to mistakes and our mistakes may cause somebody to lose a life. Instead we drill and train continually (2 hours/night), are given periodic examinations of all our skills, maintain our equipment in the best possible condition, and try to maintain totally professional attitudes. We have taken all of the State Health Department suggestions, made them our minimum standards and instituted even more rigid standards for ourselves. Our back-up service for the city of Burlington gives us an opportunity to expand our training and experience as well as the ability to compare our all volunteer service to a totally professional one. As a result we have developed what we feel to be a very effective, efficient, capable emergency care ambulance service. Our members give considerable amounts of time (averaging between 7 and 40 hours/week per member) and justifiably are proud of the job they are doing. We don't feel we have the right to be conceited - no ambulance service ever should - but we are proud.

10) How can I be sure you'll come if I call?
To put it simply, if you call, we'll come anytime, right away. We are not allowed to refuse any calls, emergencies of course take precedence, and if we are on a call, Burlington Fire Department Rescue will act as our back-up and take the call. We have a response time of 45 seconds even at night. So please don't hesitate to call us at Ext.

3350. We would much rather have our ambulance roll an extra time when it wasn't needed than to leave it in the barn when it is needed. Several times this year students have been injured, especially at night, and were not sure they should call us. Please, and we want to emphasize it, we are there to be called. We can guarantee you'll never hear one of our members complain of a couple of hours of lost sleep due to somebody's injury or illness. That's exactly what we train for.

These are the most often asked questions and I hope I have been able to clear up most of the misconception regarding UVM RESCUE. If you have any more questions I strongly urge you to contact me:

Jack Schmidt
Director of Operations, UVM Rescue Wasson Infirmary

and I will get an answer to you as soon as possible.

Budget Deficit For 1974...

potential for deficits in each year of this period and consequently a low capacity for absorbing rollover deficits from previous years.

"There was a discussion of the institutions' capacity for absorbing more students than originally planned for 1974, including possibilities for teaching load distribution, fewer smaller classes, reduction in low demand upper division courses, etc."

Also discussed were salary and fringe benefits guidelines for FY1974. According to present confusing indications from Washington that the average rise could be no more than 5.5% with an increase in fringe benefits of 7%.

This does not mean that everyone would automatically receive a 5.5% increase. Instead the salary raises would average out at 5.5%. Merit, cost of living and inequalities in the present system will play a part in determining salaries. Fringe benefits will increase equally for all.

Of the increase in the University Budget from 1973 to 1974 almost 75% is taken up in personnel services and fringe benefits.

Senate Meeting...

of the Faculty Senate discussed the problem that since academic departments were giving too many "A" and "B's", an investigation must begin. Student Activities Committee heard proposals to allow more student representation on its various committees. Discussion revolved around the lack of student concern in the past and the fact that the faculty are leary of such measures.

Also reported was the present status of the legality of student files in the hands of the administration. No progress has been reported by the Dean of Students' office, so the Senate will begin its own investigation. With committee reports finished, old business began.

$ 102 - recognition of Campus Crusade for Christ was passed. $ 88, the proposed constitution was the next item of discussion. Jim Gloman, chairperson, attempted to go through each revision with classifications until Dick Cassidy entered a motion to table this motion would set up a committee to hear administration, faculty and student responses to the new constitution and, then, with this new information, discussion would be resumed. Instead $ 88 was postponed until the end of the meetings, in order to let senators discuss it at more length. $ 95, a motion to enforce regulation about faculty parking in student lots was defeated. $ 96, a motion to open investigation about tenure in this university was passed. Don Wilson, officer for the President, said that tenure was going to be a major problem in the future. $ 98, appropriation of $200, to the proposed Student Need Assessment Poll was passed, despite the Financial Committee's suggestion to not allocate funds until next year.

$ 103, motion for procedure to select student representatives to the Board of Trustees was defeated because of the lopsided aspects of selecting these representatives.

Tom Grant opened new business with a financial committee recommendation to allocate $210, to Unicef. When Unicef was recognized on campus, they stated that they did not want any appropriations from the S.A. Steve Goodkind, town senator, offered a motion to ask the Dean of Students' Office to mail to students who have the University. Accident and Sickness Insurance a copy of this policy. It seems there were not mailed in the fall despite the fact that they would be especially helpful to students who live off-campus.

Next, William Pearson offered a motion with option to finance - the civil disobedience of Wounded Knee and to enlighten members of the administration, faculty, legislature, etc. by having a marijuana smoke-in on the green on April 14. It was not stipulated whether or not it was bringing your own grass or if it would be provided.

John Franco offered a motion for another means of selecting student representatives to the Board of Trustees, by plurality vote this fall.

In closing, a comment was asked to be added on to the attendance at adjournment. Only a handful of the fifty senators elected were present for adjournment. A list of those remaining is in the S.A. office.

alcohol, as well as to retrain those convicted on a DWI charge. In addition, CRASH attempts to intensify highway law enforcement to weed out drunk drivers, and to aid the courts in the larger number of alcohol-oriented cases.

One of the rehabilitation programs for convicted DWI's is an Alcohol Impaired Drivers School (AIDS) which is held over a five week period with one class a week. The "school" is a series of lectures and small group discussions held at UVM to make aware the relationship between drinking and driving.

Mr. Riley commented that "obviously we cannot cure a drinking problem in a five week session," but he explained that the rate of repeat convictions for participants who took the AIDS course is low.

Beyond educating the public about drinking/driving, the CRASH program is involved in state legislation which will change existing DWI laws. $ 60, a bill sponsored by Senator Thomas Crowley, a CRASH committee, seeks to change the penalties for drivers convicted of driving while intoxicated. Currently a DWI conviction carries a one year suspension of the driver's license, which CRASH personnel feel could seriously harm the employment prospects of the social drinker who happened to get caught on the road after one drink too many. CRASH would amend the penalty to carry a three month suspension, after which the non-problem drinker could be reinstated with the stipulation that he attend a similar AIDS program. Mr. Riley feels this modification of the current law is necessary. He commented that "social drinkers should not be penalized to that extent," adding that employment opportunities in much of the state require the use of a car.

A second offense of DWI would involve a one year suspension of license when the DWI is committed after five years of the first, where it now imposes a 6 year suspension. A third conviction would, under $ 60, be a five year suspension. A third offense at present constitutes revocation of the driver's license, and this corresponds to a fourth offense under the proposal.

CRASH also recommends elimination of the urine and saliva tests in determining the alcoholic content in the bloodstream. Riley indicated that the urine test can be inaccurate, and the saliva test is not able to be evaluated in the state.

few minutes later Ted Child put in the winning goal and it ended in a 4-3 score. But it wasn't all that easy. With about 45 seconds to go we were playing with a man in the penalty box and at the same time Merrimack pulled their goalie in a do or die attempt to knot the score. This gave the opponents a 6-4 man advantage. Ekto made some great saves and the defense played the onslaught perfectly.

The buzzer sounded and a frustrated Merrimack team had a long bus ride home to Massachusetts.

The fans at Gutterson were just as high as the players when the Cats came onto the rink to take on Bowdoin College for the Division II Championship. The Cats finally looked loose but were also extremely psyched. The team knew that if they had lost that game the whole season would have been down the drain as far as they were concerned. Bowdoin found that out when Willie MacKinnon put in the first Vermont goal in the first period. From then on it was all Vermont with Patty Wright getting the hat trick. Patty also got the game's MVP award to top off a spectacular career at UVM. If there could have been a second MVP it would have gone to Steve Eckerson who again had to turn away a tremendous Bowdoin attack in the first few minutes of play.

The locker room was utter bedlam as champagne flew through the crowded room. Many players were guzzling down champagne at a record pace (Ted Child was the winner!), while others were pouring it over anyone who walked by. Coach Cross received his shower from Patty Wright. The coach didn't seem to mind a bit. The seniors on the squad felt it was the greatest way to end a career. Eli Tubbs announced a practice for the following day and was immediately doused with some wine. Willie MacKinnon summed it up in one word, "Tasty!" Billy Koch asked me, "Do you think you'll have something to write about?" "Murph" kept saying "Incredible!" To put it mildly, the Cats were happy over that win. Some players even washed that there were ten games left on the schedule. So did I. See you next week.

Salzberg Voices Optimism For UVM Basketball

by Mike Schwartz
Pete Salzberg graduated from Columbia University in 1964 and later coached freshmen basketball at that New York City school. After Art Locke left UVM, Salzberg was given the task of rebuilding the Vermont basketball program. This reporter had the opportunity of chatting with coach Salzberg to see how much was accomplished in achieving this task. It was also a good opportunity to see what the prospects for the future might be.

Salzberg is a trendy and considerate person who has a real interest in the student body. The discussion was very impersonal and calm in tone. Salzberg's answers were clear and direct, he did not hesitate to be honest. His answers will put a clear perspective on UVM basketball.

The first subject related to the future. "Next season Vermont will make a trip South to play major college powers. North Carolina, Vanderbilt, and Georgia. The first question dealt with the significance of playing teams that are really above UVM's class of basketball. He replied that there are three main objectives to these games. First, the team cannot really lose. If they stay competitive throughout the game publicity would be positive. A win or even a close defeat would be a more significant achievement than the hockey team defeating a Division I team. On the other hand, when UVM plays Norwich you can't win the game because the team is expected to blow this inferior team off the court. His second reason was the benefit the games will be for the players. They will have the chance "to have a taste of the big time ball". Finally, it is a key part to recruiting. The coach feels that outside the Yankee Conference, the UVM schedule is weak. These remaining 14 games make up the bulk of the schedule. The coach commented "You can't get first class players with a second class schedule."

He then talked about the basketball attitude on campus and the caliber of basketball in Vermont. On the latter subject Salzberg mentions that basketball is a bigger sport in Vermont than hockey and that it is hurt by its small size. The good athlete in Vermont is forced to play more than one sport and cannot concentrate in basketball.

As for the campus, Salzberg says there is an "adverse internal publicity problem with faculty and administration." He mentioned the time a professor asked him if the trip to Dartmouth was to face the "A" team or the "B" team. Salzberg believes a major task of this first year was to change this attitude. He feels that essentially this season "cannot be measured on the basis of just wins and losses." A major objective was "to change a losing frame of mind." The Coach stated he was "fairly successful." Though in the final analysis winning is the key, at UVM, basketball is considered second-rate. Basketball in the Burlington area mentions "St. Michael's first, and Vermont second. This is what has to be changed. If the program is brought up to a level where the schedule is strong, recruiting is successful to meet the demands of the schedule, and the team starts to win, Patrick Gym can be packed for every game. The coach pointed out that attendance was high except for the final games against Norwich and Brandeis. Even during Christmas vacation when the student body was not on campus, a game against Boston University attracted 1200 fans. People were again starting to watch Vermont basketball. Relating to St. Mike's the coach mentioned that he would like nothing more than to blow the Knights off the court to make amends for the two close losses this year.

The next subject was the play of the team itself this past season. The first player discussed was Barry Cohen whom this reporter thought improved considerably. Salzberg commented that Barry has an excellent attitude and desire to play basketball. His intensity rubs off on the whole team. He thought this was evident in the New Hampshire game where UVM trailed by 23 with nine minutes remaining and went on to win in overtime. Barry is a spark that the team needs. He doesn't care what the score is. Evidently, his intensity improved his game.

Salzberg commented on the role of Joe Greco as the star of the team. He mentioned that after January 1, teams began to key on Greco. At times the other players would try to do it themselves but in the final analysis Greco had to shoot to help the Vermont offense. Salzberg glanced down the team statistics and found that Greco usually made 50% of his shots. When he took 20 shots in a game he would make about 10 and Vermont would win or play strong basketball in a losing cause. When he did not shoot such as against Northeastern the team performed poorly. Like other sophomores, who made up a majority of the team, Greco matured. He learned to use his strength and drive to the basket. His services were missed when Vermont lost six in a row while he nursed a stress fracture in his foot. Salzberg also commented on the improvement of Mario Macias from a low scoring and at times poor defensive performer to a good defense and strong offensive threat.

However, we both agreed that the team needs. He mentioned that Jimmy Foster of UConn was the best guard in the Yankee Conference.

Coach Salzberg knows how much he has achieved and how much remains to be done. The task is still large. But Pete Salzberg is the type of person who can succeed at this task. Basketball is a game that many people in the East grew up with. At Vermont Coach Salzberg hopes to make basketball grow to a first class status. The emphasis for rebuilding has started. Next season, all of UVM will find out if that emphasis will continue to grow.

Coach Salzberg concluded on an optimistic note. The sophomores realized that there is more to winning on a major schedule than they believed. These players had been winners during their freshmen year when the freshmen team existed. These players gained experience. He feels the team improved, administration and students started to take an interest in basketball, and that future recruiting will improve the basketball program. It is a winning enthusiasm that will fill Patrick Gym and what has made hockey an important part of UVM.

Swimmers Finish Up At New Englands

by Debby Hoxie

While our swimmers are hopefully resting, I have some final statistics on their weekend at the New England meet. The team headed down to Springfield, Mass. on March 1 and spent 3 days competing. Twenty-seven New England schools participated in what Cliff Johnson reported as the "strongest New England's meet ever." Times in every event were 2 to 3 seconds faster than last year, and at the end of the contest Springfield College, Bowdoin, and Williams came out the top three schools.

Although I heard a few hints of disappointment from a couple of swimmers, UVM did well considering the size of competition and the fact that our season was geared mainly for dual meets (obviously, since we won all 22 of them.)

We placed 10th as a team and came home with several medals. Scoring was set up so that in every event the first 12 places scored, the first 6 receiving medals.

Freshman Mike Jacobs, who has been on Cliff Johnson's tail all season in the individual medley and backstroke, pulled the surprise of the meet for Vermont. He placed 2nd in the 100 yd. backstroke and was the only UVM swimmer to make the finals. He'll be challenging everybody next season (Watch out, Cliff!)

Our two relay teams also placed in the top 12. Jacobs, Ackerson, Jones, and Willard placed 6th in the 400 yd. medley relay and won a medal. In the 400 yd. freestyle relay a dependable combination of Alexy, Kurt, Ackerson, and Jacobs won 10th place.

In the 100 yd. butterfly two familiar faces appeared to take places for Vermont. Buzz Jones came in 8th and Mike Goslar placed 12th.

Bob Nold picked up 11th place in the 3 meter diving event. Cliff Johnson placed 9th in the 200 yd. backstroke and his big ambitions will carry him even farther next year. And Vermont's swimming "giant" Bruce Willard took 8th in the 50 yd. freestyle.

Mike Kurt swam well in the 1650 yd. freestyle and missed scoring by only a place. It was the first time in competition that he had swum the 1650, an event not included in any of our dual meets. Undoubtedly he will be in the top six by next year if his domination of long distance events this season is any indication.

We missed Tim Hansen and Dave Phelan at the New England's. Both would have added a lot to Vermont's score, but unfortunately both are still out sick.

With the close of the New England's our swimming season officially ended. The only disappointment I see is that the excitement is over and we're losing SIX great seniors - John Ackerson, Fred Alexy, Tim Hansen, Roger Pelli, George Potekhen, and Bruce Willard. They really pulled through and came up with the surprises when we needed them - for instance, Willard's blow to UConn, and they played a major role in the team's undefeated dual meet season. We'll miss their talents next year, but I have a feeling that their fine attitudes will leave an impression on the team.

I understand that Coach Leggett has returned from a recruiting mission with 4 or 5 new swimmers for next season. And it is possible that Phelan, Delany, and Piche will be back?

The team is looking forward to good competition next season, especially from Keene State, University of New Hampshire, and University of Maine, whose teams are building fast. And of course, UConn, will present another challenge I'm sure we'll meet!

Women Cagers End Season At 6-3

Sally Rouse

The Women's Basketball team ended their season last week with a 6-3 record. The Cats were at the tournament in Boston last week and were seeded 13th out of 15 schools. The first game UVM had was against Springfield, Mass. who was seeded 3rd in the Eastern Division. UVM upset Springfield by a score of 42-36. This was almost the biggest upset of the whole tournament. UVM was then matched with Herbert-Leman College and lost by a score of 42-38. It was a close game the whole way. Leman is now going to the Nationals. UVM showed spirit and will to win. In the Springfield game the whole crowd was behind the team cheering them on. Everyone played a fine game. Last year should be a good year for the Cats at the tournament. The whole team will be returning except for senior Barbara Munnett who should be commended for her 3 years of fine basketball.

So goes this season; but next year is on its way.

THE MARINES ARE LOOKING FOR A FEW GOOD MEN TO FLY IT.

The U.S. Marine Corps Officer Selection Team will be at the University of Vermont on Monday and Tuesday the 19th and 20th on March 1973 to discuss Officer programs available to students.

The Platoon Leaders Class Program (PLC) is available to the undergraduate in both the ground and aviation fields. Successful completion of PLC training is culminated with commissioning as a Lieutenant of Marines upon graduation from college.

Eligible PLC members can earn $100 a month every month of the academic year - up to $2700 in a college career.

The PLC Program also offers a chance to learn to fly free while in college.

Seniors and graduates may enroll in the Officer Candidate Course and attend after graduation.

Law school deferments are available to qualified students.

The team visiting the campus will be located in the Waterman Administration Building from 10:00 to 2:00.

Yesterday's nuns led a cloistered life. When they ventured out, it was two-by-two. Their roles were traditional and within church institutions.

Things have changed. The world. The Church. The roles women play.

Yet for one order, these changes are hardly apparent. Ever since the Dominican Sisters of the Sick Poor were founded in 1876, they have been engaged in pastoral ministry. They have always been flexible. Always self-motivated. Always had freedom. Why? By the very nature of their work.

The Dominican Sisters of the Sick Poor give free nursing care to the needy in their own homes. They travel alone by bus or by subway. Or by car. Or on foot. And their day doesn't end at five o'clock.

Colorado Overtakes Vermont To Win National Title

by Rick Steinberg

This past weekend the University of Vermont ski team set out in quest of their first NCAA ski championship at the Middlebury College Snow Bowl. Having won the Eastern championships two weeks earlier on the strength of strong performances by the Catamount jumping team, a national crown was a strong possibility entering the final day. With only the jumping remaining the Cats held a slim 1-12 point lead over Wyoming, Colorado, in the eighth place. But despite a second place finish by UVM All-American Petter Kongli, the defending champions from Colorado staged an incredible comeback performance to retain their crown. They took three of the first four places including a first by Norwegian Vigar Nilsgard to overtake seven teams including the Catamounts.

As is true of most Eastern Ski Teams, the Catamounts were not taken as a serious threat by the western powerhouses. But following Vermont's surprising victory in the slalom on Thursday, western schools began to watch more closely as the upstarts from Vermont performed. Despite a spill by Bobby Cochran and the fact that the Cats had performed poorly at the Dartmouth Winter Carnival and the Middlebury Carnival a few weeks earlier UVM proved they had depth and ability in the slalom. Although not taking any of the top three spots, a fourth by Dave Dodge, accompanied by 13th and 16th place finishes by Chris Brown and Billy Rathbone respectively, gave the UVM skiers the NCAA slalom crown and vaulted them into second place only 1.53 points behind Wyoming.

Alpine coach Mickey Cochran was well aware of the talent the UVM skiers possessed and was not at all surprised of his skiers' performances. He knew that if the skiers utilized their potential to the utmost they were capable of defeating the highly favored western skiers. After Cochran had fallen on his second run the Cats knew they were going to have to go all out to win, and that they did. Brown received news of Cochran's mishap from Coach Chip LaCasse before his final run. Knowing the importance of his run, Brown attacked the hill aggressively to take a fourth and give UVM the slalom victory.

This left the Cats within striking distance going into the downhill on Friday. In this event Cochran was not to be denied as he went through time of 1:06.94 seconds in two runs. In repeating himself for his unfortunate spill a day earlier, Cochran led the Cats to their second straight strong performance and pushed them into first place setting the stage for the final days heroics of Colorado's jumpers. Along with Cochran's win, Dave Dodge placed fourth to give the Cats a second place finish in the downhill.

Entering the final day the question was whether or not jumpers Kongli, Grimes, and Lantz, of UVM could hold off the highly touted jumpers from Colorado — Vigar, Nilsgard, Arne Haugen, and Didrik Ellifson. As it turned out the Colorado leapers performed the impossible as they took three out of the top four spots with only Kongli preventing a sweep. Had Kongli not fallen on his final jump of 60 meters he would have overtaken Nilsgard for the individual championship. His distance and form points were good enough for the win but he hit a rut depriving him of the victory. A win by Kongli still would have left the Catamounts short in the overall standings.

The final standings showed

It would surely be impossible for anyone to comprehend what was going through the minds of the members of the Vermont jumping team as they stood atop of the 55 meter hill in Middlebury last Saturday. For openers, this was the most prestigious domestic ski meet of the year, and it was close to home.

By the end of the first day of competition, the cross country team had put them in fourth place. By the end of the second day, the alpine team had put them in third place and Bobby Cochran had fallen. By the end of the third day, Cochran had a victory and the alpine team had them in first place — ahead of Denver, ahead of Wyoming, ahead of Colorado, and even ahead of Dartmouth.

There they stood. They hadn't lost a jumping meet all season. Coach Chip LaCasse had given up eating food for Tums. In the practice jumps the day before they had beaten everyone. There were hundreds of fans surrounding the outrun, hanging from trees, and crowding close to the landing hill. The wind was blowing and rain threatening. One was a junior, the rest were younger. And just to give the butterflies one more flutter, the president of the university had just arrived.

Everyone knew what they had to do. Colorado was perhaps the smoothest jumping team in the world, and Vermont had to hold them off. The fans were aching for a Vermont win and the noise level told them so.

That wasn't the way it was to be though. When it was all over Colorado had its second national championship in as many years. Wyoming had held on by the skin of their teeth, and the University of Vermont Ski Team was third in the nation.

Third in the nation was no disappointment to the members of the team and their coaching staff. They had beaten Denver who had won 14 of the last 17 national titles.

All-American Chris Brown on his way to a fourth place finish in the downhill.

Nobody had even expected them to be in the NCAA's anyway. After all, they were dead last in the east last year. And now here they are — third in the nation. Surely they would have liked first but that will be saved for next year.

Even with the magnitude of this team victory and the size of the smile on President Andrews' face, the sweetness of the success was yet to be announced. By way of their individual performances over the entire four day meet, four members of the UVM Ski Team were named All-Americans: Petter Kongli and alpiners Bob Cochran, Dave Dodge, and Chris Brown. All of this gives UVM the distinction of having the most All-Americans of any team in the U.S. This star-studded team wasn't even taken seriously at the beginning of the season, and now the westerners are all wondering how they are going to hold off Vermont next year. UVM's coach, Chip LaCasse, has proven himself one of the winningest anywhere and he's still building the program.

And more bad news for the western schools word is out that Vermont has another jumper on the line, another Norwegian, another world class competitor.

Indeed, it is impossible for anyone to know what was on the minds of the Vermont skiers last weekend. One thing is for sure though. On the minds of the competitors next year will be the performance of Vermont in 1973. UVM is a major ski power — third in the nation.

Congratulations

The University of Vermont and the University of Vermont Department of Athletics wish to congratulate Middlebury College for their role in hosting an outstanding NCAA Ski Championships under such adverse conditions.

President Edward C. Andrews, on behalf of the entire university, wishes to thank Middlebury College President James Armstrong for his graciousness in allowing the UVM Ski Team to train at the Middlebury facilities for the entire season.

The Senate Committee has expenditures of over $200,000 in administrative and costs to be budgeted for FY 1974 report.

Meeting for the first time over a week ago for the budget hearings, the committee, unanimously approved a budget of $22.40 administrative and cost, $200,000 in earned and unused funds for 1973. The budget is expected to bring the total appropriation below $20,000 for 1973.

The largest portion, $20,000, expenditure remain in the S.A. office for salaries, $3,000 for the Student Association's secretary, and $2,000 used for part time. The second major proposed by the Committee, $10,000, is for a 3-day week for the S.A. Grant and duties of the "book" taking care of financial records and the term.

side S.A. cash Grant that the additional bookkeeper will be time available for programming for other financial matters. Student Association bookkeeper will be an hour.

A Presidential Disbursement Fund was proposed figure which was reduced on 1973 averages. The fund is not incidental expenses not covered by appropriations. The fund is used at the president's discretion for matters of limited money will be presented.

Supplies and Services expenditures of $5,000 includes office supplies, elections, operating and miscellaneous expenses to UVM. That a change management of the "long overdue" that S.A. winter all recognized put a drain on which skyrockets the account organizations' dues, unique letterhead and factor and universal S.A. for would be made.

Senate Finance Committee Approves Expenditures Of Over $20,000

by Dan Haslam

The Senate Finance Committee has approved expenditures of over $20,000 in administrative and service costs to be budgeted into the FY1974 report.

Meeting for the first time over a week ago for the annual budget hearings, the committee passed unanimously six different budget requests totalling $22,302 in administrative and support costs. $3989 in earned income and unused funds from the 1972 budget is expected to bring the total appropriation below $20,000 for 1974.

The largest portion of the $20,000 expenditure will remain in the S.A. office in the form of salaries. $5,821.75 is needed to pay the salary of the Student Association's full-time secretary, and $827.25 will be used for part-time workers. The second largest request, proposed by Finance Committee chairman Tom Grant, is $3,752.48 for a 3-days-a-week bookkeeper for the S.A. Grant suggested the duties of the bookkeeper as taking care of financial records, maintaining accounting records, and the reinvesting of idle S.A. cash. Grant expects that the addition of a bookkeeper will make more time available for the S.A. treasurer to see to better programming for activities and other financial matters of the Student Association. The bookkeeper will be paid $3.00 an hour.

A Presidential Discretionary Fund was proposed at $700, a figure which was reached based on 1973 averages. The purpose of the fund is to pay for incidental expenses which are not covered in Senate appropriations or within organizational budgets. Since the fund is used strictly at the president's discretion, the matter of limitations of the money will be presented to the Senate.

Supplies and Services covers expenditures of $5112, which includes office salaries, S.A. elections, operating expenses, and miscellaneous costs as well as debts to UVM Grant feels that a change in the management of this account is "long overdue." He indicated that S.A. senators and 1/4 of all recognized organizations put a drain on S.A. supplies which skyrocketed the cost of the account. He cited organizations' desire to have a unique letterhead as one high cost factor and proposed a universal S.A. letterhead which would be made available to organizations at far less of a cost. The S.A. could purchase paper in mass lots and have the printing uniformly done.

Executive Board Honorariums, overwhelmingly defeated in the Senate this year, have also been struck down by a 3-1 vote of the Finance Committee. A written statement from the committee reads "it was felt that an honorarium should not be given before a President or Chairman are known and have proven their capability and worthiness within the S.A." Billings Center Information Desk and Furniture Repair accounts include salary payments and repairs to Billings Center, totalling $4109.88 of which $425 is covered by income.

The last administrative cost approved by the Finance Committee was the Billings Center Governing Board. With expenditures of $2000, the board pays out half of this for entertainment in Billings. The remaining expenditure goes for salary, operating expenses, and UVM debts.

The approval of the Finance Committee is subject to the revision and vote by the Senate. This year, according to Grant, summaries of Finance Committee business are available to senators and anticipates housing medical studies in Chittenden, who will then be close to the Mary Fletcher unit of the MCHV and their classes. He indicated that as a second priority, "serious academic seniors" will be housed in Chittenden, and a waiting list will be taken. Each room will be renovated into a single, which Dr. Miser pointed out should provide for a more quiet atmosphere.

Buckham and Wills will be open to all undergraduates and will undergo similar physical changes. The biggest renovation to all three dormitories will be the addition of combination windows which include storm and screen panels in one unit. Dr. Miser quoted a cost of over $63,000 for the windows and speculated that a great deal of money can be saved on inflated heating costs. The heating units will also be overhauled, and painting will improve the appearance of the rooms. New light fixtures will replace bare bulbs; a trash disposal and new furniture will also be added.

In compliance with a Building ordinance on sanitary facilities, a lower density in the number of women to existing toilet facilities is required in CBW. This will result in more singles on the 2nd and 4th floors to meet the requirements, but Dr. Miser feels that this will work out better than installing additional plumbing as was done in Tupper hall last year to convert that dormitory for women at a cost exceeding $50,000.

Plans for room choosing are being finalized this week; however, a tentative schedule was announced on April 3 a packet of information will reach each student currently living in a residence hall. The packet will include a description of room options, choices, and prices which will reflect the $125 increase. April 9-10 has been set aside for in-hall room choosing. preferential treatment for the same room next year is given to the present occupant. Off Campus students wishing to move on campus this fall may pick up information at the Office of Residence Halls, Mansfield House at this time. April 12 at noon is the deadline for contracts to be in to the Housing Office. April 19-20 is the all-campus room choosing to be held in the lobby of the Patrick gymnasium to provide for more space than was available last year in Marsh Lounge. All day April 19 will be devoted to seniors and residents of Jeanne Mance and Burgess which will close at the end of this year. The displaced students will be treated as seniors in room choosing and sophomores will be taken care of in the afternoon.

Dr. Miser is anticipating better success in this year's procedure. There will be tables set up according to complexes of dormitories, and he expects the 9-10 lines to be short. He did not rule out the possibility of students sleeping out all night in front of the doors to be first in line and stated, "that's their choice." He feels there was no need for the long lines or some of the behavior which was experienced last year. The only alternative to the present method of selection would be by mail, and Dr. Miser feels this is an impersonal way of handling housing needs. He advised students to go on a waiting list if they request a certain hall and don't get it; he said that last year all such requests were met, and the students were notified during the summer.

In Landslide S.A. Election, Sig Heller Wins Presidency

by Barbara Frankel

In a landslide victory, IRA President Sig Heller won the S.A. presidential election by receiving over 50% of the votes cast. Although only 1286 students voted, Heller received 647 votes. His nearest competitor, Alan King had a total of 267 votes while 166 votes were cast for Rob Desautels. Of a total of 162 write-in votes, 150 were cast for Steven C. Rice.

Students also voted on two referendums, the first of which stated, "Shall R.O.T.C. remain on campus as it now stands?" 852 students voted yes, while 323 did not favor retaining R.O.T.C. in its present form. The second referendum asked the controversial question, "Shall the S.A. allocate $500 to the Bac Mai Hospital in North Viet Nam?" In keeping with the views expressed in the December referendum in which students stated that they did not want money sent to Medical Aid to Indochina or to non-university sources, the student body overwhelmingly voted down sending the funds to Bac Mai. The final vote was Yes: 334; No: 880 and Invalid: 72. Paul Cillo, S.A. Secretary of Elections, explained that a vote was considered invalid if the questions were left unanswered or with more than one response.

The presidential election, like the December Referendum, utilized voting machines, which were placed in strategic locations on campus. Heller, a sophomore from Brooklyn, N.Y. majoring in Political Science has served as President of IRA for the past year. He had stated that he was not running on any set platform. Heller supported the proposed presidential veto, although he repeatedly emphasized the need for the president to use discretion in using this veto. Heller did not feel the S.A. should send the funds to Bac Mai because "the S.A. is involved too much outside and not enough with specific student wants and needs." In response to a Cynic question on the role of student government today, Heller commented last week, "Student government has an important role on today's campus. It should function as the students' voice to the administration and faculty. Student government has the job of providing social, cultural and intellectual activities. It should voice concern and act upon student problems and opinions."

Election results were announced this morning, March 22 by Paul Cillo at 10:00 A.M. Heller will be installed by Jim Sioman, Chair person of the Senate on April 3.

UVM Applications Rise 19%

by Mary Gerwig

Dr. Richard Steele, Director of Admissions, announced recently that applications for admission to the University of Vermont are up 19% over last year.

"We're fortunate to have so many applications. Applications are up this year compared to other private and state universities, rather than down," He agreed that the tuition and room rate boosts will have their effect on the number of applicants. However, Steele is also concerned over the federal government's spending cuts to education. The Admissions Office is optimistic that UVM will get the funding through Congress, but Steele pointed out that if financial aid does not get funded, it is bound to affect the timing of loans.

Retrospectively, Steele can use last year's statistics to predict this year's freshman enrollment. For the year 1972-73 there were 1413 acceptance offers sent to Vermonters of which 998 accepted. Of the 2357 offers sent to out-of-staters, 887 high school seniors accepted admission. "Traditionally, there is a 60/40 ratio of Vermonters to out-of-staters, but it is not set by law or by the trustees," Steele commented. "Our policy is to accept all qualified Vermonters; there are no quotas for incoming Vermont freshmen."

As for the selection of Vermont students, Steele feels it is a good one, with applicants coming from any of Vermont's 65 high schools. Eighty per cent of Vermont applicants are accepted, while the competition for non-residents is much greater. For any evaluation in terms of numbers of applicants, Dr. Steele replied that "There is no set cut-off. It doesn't make good sense. We don't have to use a formula for admissions." The facts available to Dr. Steele show that 53% of the Vermont freshman last year were in the top 20% quintile of their graduating class, 31% of out-of-state students were in the top 2nd quintile of their class.

Besides the high school

transcript, SAT board scores were the next best source from which to reach a conclusion about a student's eligibility for admission. Steele stated, "The more information we have on a student, the fairer we can be. We try to look at the whole situation."

Considerations given to out-of-state students are different from those of a Vermonters. "We must consider what college the student is applying to, how many spaces are available, and who is qualified to fill these spaces," he explained. Trends are not able to be calculated as to which area will be most subscribed. "It varies from year to year; interests vary from year to year; it could be pre-vet one year and management the next."

Ambassador Cadieux Visits UVM; Honors Canadian Studies Program

by Deborah Cadwell

Marcel Cadieux, Canadian Ambassador to the United States, honored the University of Vermont with a 24 hour visit Tuesday and Wednesday in celebration of the tenth anniversary of the Canadian Studies Program. His host at the university was Dr. E. J. Miles, director of the Area and International Studies Program.

Travelling with the ambassador was the honorable Heath Macquarrie, a member of the Canadian Parliament and Mr. Rufin Smith, the Deputy Secretary of State for Canadian affairs in Washington. After a reception given by President Andrews and an anniversary banquet at the Shelburne Inn, M. Cadieux spoke in the auditorium of Cook Physical Sciences Building on "Modern Dimensions of Diplomacy" to an audience of students, faculty, administration officials and representatives of various other universities. Wednesday morning he met Gov. Salmon and state officials at a reception in Montpelier at the governor's residence.

The Canadian Studies Program, begun 10 years ago, includes 13 faculty history, political science, economics, geography, English, French and communications, and theatre. Dr. Miles, director of the Program, stated that the program at UVM was "the largest and oldest currently functioning Canadian Studies Program in the United States." When the program was still young he said its purpose was "the study of Canada, its geography, history, government, economic development, culture, languages, literature and institutions."

In his speech on diplomacy M. Cadieux emphasized the evolution and changes diplomats have undergone in reaction to the expanding network of international institutions and interdependence between countries. He stated that "Diplomacy is expanding in the areas of and keeping with the needs of the world community."

He added that "As diplomacy affects broader external policy decisions, areas of national life, its scope tends to expand and there is a growing need to avoid dispersal, lack of coordination, and consequent weakness. Nowadays, not only defense, but trade, travel and even science, labor and culture among the other fields are recognized areas of international endeavor; they need to be related to the major diplomatic objectives, welded to the whole projection of national activity abroad."

"What we are witnessing is not a reduction but a drastic expansion of the diplomatic machine and a recognition that problems involving other countries are part of any country's basic interests and, as in the domestic field, require more and more integrated and fully coordinated management."

The ambassador underlined the need for better management and conscious coordinated effort within the machine to achieve unity and speed in its operations. He added that he "had in mind a series of measures which he calculated to improve the effectiveness of diplomatic activity in the field of international relations."

In summing up his thoughts, M. Cadieux said: "My impression is that diplomatic business is expanding, and that foreign service officers are trying, on the whole, to obtain greater political support for the policies they have to carry out." This is being achieved through such measures as integration, program budgeting and crisis management.

A question and answer period followed the speech. The first of these questions concerned Canada's continuing role in Vietnam.

M. Cadieux mentioned the 10 years Canada had spent in supplying Egypt with money and support only to be asked to leave quite abruptly, and added, "We've had 18 years of doing nothing at great expense in Indochina. You can see why we would not want to be involved in an exercise that would continue indefinitely and would be likely to involve frustration."

Another question involved the role France will play in the future of Canada. In response, M. Cadieux stated that there has been a strong Canadian effort on the part of the

Women In Politics

The careers and activities of four Vermont women legislators will be the topic Thursday (March 22) at 10 p.m. on Vermont LTV's live broadcast "Vermont Cracker Barrel."

Representatives Esther Cohen of Burlington, Louise Swainbank of St. Johnsbury and Susan Webb of Plymouth and Sen. Dorothy Shea of Montpelier will report on the current session of the Legislature.

They will also devote part of discussion to the changing attitudes toward women in business and politics, and will describe their careers, how they got started, the rewards and difficulties involved.

Campus Bible Fellowship

Campus Bible Fellowship will be held on Thursday, March 22 in Conference Room C, Billings Center. All interested students invited.

Submit Your Original Works

April 7th is the deadline for the submission of material for the 7th Annual Intercollegiate Symposium to be held at Windham College on Saturday, April 28th, sponsored by the Vermont Academy of Arts and Sciences.

As announced previously, the Symposium affords an opportunity for students to present papers on any subject in the field of humanities or science, short stories, poetry, or original works of art, performing or graphic.

Students from all Vermont institutions of Higher Learning have been invited to participate, and past experience indicates that both the speakers and the audience have come away with a feeling of accomplishment, there being ample opportunity for discussion from the floor after each paper.

Department Heads and other faculty members have full details on the Symposium if of "The Silent Majority."

You have not already seen the prospectus sent out by the Academy. There are special instructions for the submission of Original Poetry and Fiction, for the presentation of Essays of Research, Papers in the Humanities, Natural and Social Sciences, for the presentation of Original Motion Pictures and Performances in Music, Drama or Dance; and for entries of Sculpture, Painting, Graphics, Photographs, and other Art Works.

All offerings will be studied by the Selection Committee, and those whose submissions have been accepted will be notified in ample time to prepare for the delivery of their works.

Students not interested in delivering papers or other material for the Symposium are cordially invited to attend, to enter the discussions, or just to be there as representatives of "The Silent Majority."

Bicycle Instructors Needed

For those students wandering through Billings Center last week, a bicycle raffle was underway to publicize a desperately needed program in Burlington. With the increasing number of bicycle riders on the road, the necessity for increased knowledge and practice of bicycle safety is urgent. A UVM professor with several years experience in bicycling has offered to teach students enough to become safe instructors in proper safety riding and maintenance. At least fifty instructors are needed for the program to be a success. Training sessions will be conducted Wednesday nights in Billings at 7 p.m. Instruction clinics are planned for late April and early May. If you are interested, but can't make these meetings, contact Chris at OVP in Mansfield House (OVP's new home) or call 636-2062.

Passover At Hillel

It is that time of year when plans must be made for Passover. Hillel at UVM is making plans for the holiday. Every effort is made to provide meals for students at absolute cost and those participating will be expected to assist in preparation and clean-up of daily meals so that outside help will not be needed. Segal and daily dinners will be supplied by Lou G. Siegel Food Products, N.Y. If you have any questions about these arrangements call Mrs. Blstein at Hillel, 656-3488, or at home, 864-7163 (before 9 p.m. please).

HILLEL WILL NOT BE ABLE TO TAKE RESERVATIONS AFTER MONDAY, APRIL 2nd the day after vacation.

They are under agreement to send their order post-marked April 2nd. MAIL RESERVATIONS WITH CHECK PAYABLE TO THE HILLEL FOUNDATION. SEND TO THE HILLEL FOUNDATION, 389 COLLEGE STREET, BURLINGTON, VERMONT 05401. If you cannot possibly mail your reservation before leaving for vacation deliver it personally to Hillel House or to Professor Kahn at 420 Waterman Building before 4 p.m. on Monday, April 2nd. Library Receives Religious Books

This week the Bailey Library at UVM accepted several volumes of church books from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormon). Mr. Paul B. Kebanian, the librarian of the Bailey library was presented the gift by two local missionaries, Elders Gary Griffin and Rod Chandler.

These books are available at the library for general distribution. Anyone requiring information, concerning the Mormon Church will find each one of these books a valuable asset in assisting him with his particular need. Titles and authors of the books are: The Book of Mormon; Jesus Christ by Elder James E. Talmage; A Marvelous Work And A Wonder by LeGrand Richards; Essentials in Church History; Gospel Ideals; and Gospel Doctrine. Elders Griffin and Chandler are two of some 17,000 missionaries throughout the world who serve for two years at their own expense. The majority of these missionaries are young men and women between the ages of 19 and 24 and come primarily from the western part of the United States. They are here in New England with 220 others for two years, and at the completion of their service here they will resume their occupation or their schooling in the west.

Outward Bound Provides Challenge

Outward Bound is not a vacation. Rather, it's a challenge...an adventure...an education...and a true lesson in life, with the ultimate objective of affording an individual the opportunity to discover himself.

While all Outward Bound programs vary in approach, the majority include experiences with rock climbing, rappelling and wilderness travel most are climaxed by a "solo"—a two or three day period of contemplation and introspection which a student spends alone with a minimum of supplies. Courses usually end with some type of marathon which helps reinforce the stamina built by the total Outward Bound experience.

Choir Will Give Concert At UVM

On Monday, April 2, 1973, the Cheyney State College Choir will be here in concert. Cheyney is a small liberal arts college in Cheyney, Pennsylvania. This choir exists each year under the direction of Mr. D. Jack Moses, director and Administrator at the school. Posters will be put up around campus for the place the concert will be held.

The Program is being sponsored by the Black Educators and the Third World Organizations at UVM. Tickets will be on sale at the Bookstore, Lane Series Office and by contacting any member of either organization. Donations of $1 for UVM students will be used for the Martin Luther King Scholarship Fund.

UVM Horse Club Meeting Communitywide Campaign To Collect Stampbooks

The UVM Horse Club will meet Thursday, March 22, in MAT lounge at 7:30 P.M. Mr. Paul Quinn, a professional horse photographer, will speak. All are welcome.

The Howard Mental Health Services, Inc. of Burlington, Vermont is launching a communitywide campaign to collect 4,500 books of S&H Green Stamps to acquire two 12 passenger vans to enable transportation for people who have been hospitalized. This transportation is a vital part of the rehabilitation program, the Day Activities Program, as well as facilitate services to all of Chittenden County.

Announcement of the start of the stamp drive was made today by Brooke Lockwood, chairman of the drive. Miss Lockwood said that full books or partially filled books of loose stamps will be welcome. The stamps should be mailed or delivered to Howard Mental Health Services, 260 College Street, Burlington, Vermont. It is hoped that the stamp project can be completed by the beginning of June.

All members of the Day Activities program are involved in the stamp campaign. They will contact friends, clubs and businesses to stress the urgent need for the two twelve passenger vans to help people in the surrounding communities as well as the Burlington area.

Miss Lockwood pointed out that their appeal provides an opportunity for the many S&H Green Stamp savers to contribute a small part of their collection to a worthwhile cause. "We are sure the people will enable us to reach our goal and meet the deadline we have set."

Progress will be reported from time to time until the target date of June 15th.

Governor Cut For

by Fred Down
Governor Salmon last proposed an alternative dental care bill now in Health and Welfare Committee of the House. The major was the reduction of the $73,000 from $842,000 to $73,000. The original request. The Governor plan would increase the number of dentists visiting schools from four to eight, and put the program of dental education into the local program of dental education. The Governor claimed ideas were based more on the "providers of dental care" than on the state health program. The Vermont Dental Program itself.

Lack Of Attendance Topic At Senate Meeting

By Bruce Madden

Once again the proposed constitution was the center of discussion for Tuesday night's Senate meeting. Discussion varied during the evening from the tremendous lack of attendance to motions for student involvement in Faculty Senate affairs.

Chairperson Jim Sloman gave the meeting to order and then took roll. 24 of 55 senators answered roll. Attendance at meetings and interest by senators has been a major concern of the Senate all year.

Tom Grant, S.A. Treasurer, gave the Financial Committee report. He handed out reports of the budget hearings held last week. Many organizations have received cuts in their requests because of a general cut in University funding of the S.A. and because of the Financial Committee Financial Policy. Mr. Grant mentioned that the final budget for the S.A. will be presented in the middle of April.

Paul Cillo, S.A. Secretary of Elections said results for the election and related questions will be available at 10:00 Thursday morning.

In the chairpersons Report, Mr. Sloman announced that he would propose motions concerning an open-door policy for students at Faculty Senate and Faculty Senate committees after he found out that some committees had refused student observers at meetings. His proposal is an extension of the right-to-know motion recently included in the Senate minutes. John Franco gave his report of the Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee. He stated that the committee has discovered an inflation of A's in various departments of the university. The committee is beginning investigation to tighten this inflation. Anyone interested in attending meetings concerning this is asked to attend one this Thursday at 4:00 in 319 Old Mill.

With committee reports finished, old business was begun. Three new student organizations were recognized: Institute of Electronic Engineers, Friends of Red Rock Park and Pentecostal Students Fellowship. S.85, a motion by Alan King to open Patrick Gymnasium on Sundays was passed, even though actual details and investigation have not been completed concerning the actual opening. It will probably not be opened for use this semester. S.88, the proposed constitution, offered much discussion. Various amendments to the proposed constitution concerning the definition of the S.A. and its membership were debated. Discussion then traveled to one of the main problems with the Senate this year, student and Senate concern. Many senators expressed their "frustration" at the lack of concern students and senators give the new constitution. A total apathy appears to exist except for those twenty or so senators who remain during meetings. Discussion of amendments stagnated until Dick Cassidy proposed a motion to table S.88 again but to create a committee of concerned or otherwise senators to give due consideration to this most important business before the Senate.

Business proceeded to the other motions before the Senate. Glen Austin's proposal for a presidential veto was unanimously defeated. Alan King's proposal for representatives to the Board of Trustees was defeated because of the methodology involved in selecting representatives. The senate did allocate $210 to the UVM chapter for Unicef. Willy Pearson's motion for a marijuana smoke-in on the green was defeated after a reconsideration. One of his reasons for proposing the motion was again to express "frustration" and to provide a symbolic gesture of the inadequacy of the Senate.

John Franco's proposal for an interim election policy for position on the Board of Trustees Committee was passed. The motion calls for plurality elections held in conjunction with Senate elections in the fall. Glen Austin's motion for appointment of financial advisors to student organizations passed. Hopefully this will facilitate problems some organizations have been having.

Under new business Jim Sloman entered his open-door motion as well as a motion directing the Faculty Senate not to report on disintegration of academic standards until investigation has been fully discussed. Conflict data has been found concerning the actual disintegration of standards. William Pearson entered a motion to dissolve the S.A. Senate because of its ineffectiveness.

Also proposed was the purchase of a color TV for Billings Center. There being no further business the meeting was adjourned. However, the minutes as well as the Cynic were asked to note the attendance at the end of the meeting, it was 19 senators. The meeting started with 24 of a possible 55 senators.

At the end of the Student Association-Senate Meeting on March 20, 1973, the following Senators were present: AUSTIN - Jim Hope; BUCKHAM - Jeff Cohn; Sub-CONVERSE - Chris Barrett; COOLIDGE - Edward Pasquelin; MASON - Stu Tatro; MILLIS - Glenn Austin; WING - Carolyn Notkoff; GAMMA PHI BETA - Sharon Reed; TOWN SENATORS - Terry Demas; Dick Cassidy; Sub, Steve Goodkind; David Mahan; William Pearson; Jim Sloman; John Franco; Ron MacNeil; Thomas McMillan; Pam Reaves; Susan Taylor.

Canadian Ambassador Says Diplomatic Business Expanding

French as to their prospects, a greater desire to come together and to organize themselves." He felt that the results were good and in future years "their relative importance is going to increase in relation with other groups."

At a press conference held earlier in the day M. Cadieux spoke of the importance of a Canadian Studies Program in the United States. "My impression is that there is less knowledge in the United States of Canada than of Canada in the United States, for the simple reason that the United States are more important to Canada than Canada is to the United States. When we make a decision there is to Canada than Canada is to the United States. When we make a decision there is to Canada

In speaking of the separation of the French and English in Canada, the ambassador stressed the fact that he is a strong Federalist. "French Canadians are not completely happy with the present setup in Canada," he added that the French pulled 24% of the provincial vote in Quebec in the election of 1970, and indications are that the Federalists have received strong majority support. He felt that the minority separatist groups had been given political freedom and should not react with violence, should not react with violence, added that the prospects are good of finding new sources, and sharing these with the United States.

"If only we can find these resources and develop them, we certainly will not be shy about trying to market these resources here [here in the United States]."

When asked about his thoughts on the results of the Canadian Studies Program so far, he mentioned hockey as "an area where Canadians have achieved some impact. The Canadian RCAF has also become part of the North American Mythology," and added, "I think that what you are aiming at essentially is understanding, knowledge, and then the impact of this is felt whether people go to Canada or whether they receive Canadians."

He concluded by saying that unless a conscious effort is made to develop studies about Canada, the exchange of cultural, social and political change will still be in the direction from the United States to Canada rather than vice versa.

"And the consequence is that something very important will be missing between us."

Summer Job Offer

Any student wishing a summer job in the country of Austria should apply now. Paying student jobs are available on a first come, first served basis to any student aged 17 through 27. The majority of jobs are in hotels, mountain and lakeside resorts, and restaurants. Standard wages are paid—plus free room and board. This means that only a few weeks on the job easily earns back the cost of the school charter flight or youth fare air ticket.

Most jobs do not require knowledge of a foreign language, and experience counts less than willingness to work, ability to adapt to foreign life, and the maintenance of an open mind.

Students interested in obtaining a summer job in Austria may obtain application forms, job listings and descriptions, and the SOS handbook on earning a trip to Europe by sending their name, address, educational institution, and $1 (for printing, postage, addressing and handling) to: Summer Placement, SOS, 22 Ave. de la Liberté, Luxembourg, Europe.

Governor Proposes Cut For Dental Care

by Fred Doten

Governor Salmon last week proposed an alternative to the dental care bill now in the Health and Welfare Committee of the House. The major point was the reduction of the funds to $73,000 from $842,000, a little less than one-tenth of the original request. The money by the Salmon plan would go to administer Denticaid, increase the number of hygienists visiting schools from four to eight, and put more effort into the local school program of dental education. The Governor claimed these ideas were based more on what the "providers of dental care" have to say, rather than on the VPRG study, which is based on the state health agencies involved with dental care and the Vermont Dental Care Program itself.

Finance Committee

students so that discussion will be limited to specific issues of the budget which is voted on as a whole. Budget hearings will continue until each organization is reviewed. A schedule of individual hearings is available at the S.A. office

The inadequacies of this proposal are many, other than its basis. Denticaid, a branch of Medicaid, covers only smaller children, and then only those whose parents' income doesn't exceed $4,200. Dental care is needed for a greater age group, and financial help is required for a larger income bracket, because of the high cost of dental care. More hygienists are needed badly, yet all they can do is send home with the child a recommendation for dental care. More besides education of the children in health procedures is also desirable, although health programs in schools will be needed to help keep the occurrence of problems down. This plan does not provide for any dentists being relocated or brought in to care for the children's bad teeth. Many children have problems with their teeth now, and need treatment desperately; treatment that their parents can't afford to provide. There are facilities that do handle this problem, yet there are too many children and too few clinics. Help is needed now; remember the last toothache you had, and how you didn't feel up to doing anything? Forty percent of Vermont children feel this way.

the out-of-state applicant. More qualified students are applying so we have to be more selective. We take the best we can get." Dr. Steele commented. During the screening procedure, the Admissions Office gives two readings to the application. Steele will sometimes act as a referee over "differences of opinion from these readings, and from here the applications are forwarded to department heads for their approval."

As for the quality of the student body at UVM, Steele feels that "We have depth, many types who want to come here. We have a good cross-section of socio-economic balance. There is good financial aid in Vermont. There are no scholarships or gift aids to out-of-staters, therefore, they do tend to be more affluent."

The annual search for new freshmen is on. The Admissions Office is in the process of selecting those students now. When asked about his predictions and clues for next year's enrollment Dr. Steele replied, "To anticipate how many students will accept our offers, or how many Vermont students will be interested and/or qualified is a guessing game."

Faculty Vs. Students-Who Is At Fault?

by Gene Beaudoin

Often we complain about faculty who are not teaching. Others would complain that students are unexciting. There certainly are a good number of faculty members who are far from the University professor depicted by Walt Disney. I have seen faculty who lecture from notes that are at least 15 years old. They know who they are, as do their peers. And then there's the professor who uses his own book for the course and nothing else. When the lecture is line for line out of the book or close to it... What a Godawful bore. There's also the professor who routinely announces to the class that he has forgotten his notes or asks where he left off rambling the last time (the class met. Special note to Freshman: if none of these cases sound familiar, simply be patient. They await you and they are almost unavoidable.

How many classes have you walked out of and asked, "Why did I go to that?" Or perhaps, one says, "I should have left early for the weekend." I would imagine that there are professors that ask the same questions about students.

It goes on and on. Students exist. Faculty survive. I wonder when the last time each student here took a course simply because he wanted to learn more about the subject matter. By this I do not mean that when one is a sophomore in high school you decide that you want to be an engineer or a teacher. Another problem is the examination that you must "beat." In the process you must "beat" the guy sitting next to you. It makes for great education and great friends.

"Four year summer camp" many people call it. It costs a lot more than summer camp and lasts longer but it may well be a good description of the situation today in many schools. The living ethic is from weekend to weekend. Who am I going out with this weekend or when do I leave for home or what am I going to drink or smoke and where am I going to get it from? If you are from out of state the summer camp costs about $20,000 for the four years. Just think: for about $10,000 per year you could "buy" your own professor for two years. You'd have him all to yourself.

The faculty are the easiest to blame for they inflict the most stress on the system. (i.e. the student). Perhaps one too many faculty have been told they mark too easy or too hard by their peers. Maybe they have been told by one too many students that the student only needs a D for his pass-fail mark. Maybe this is the reason many Graduate schools equate the pass-fail course with the D mark.

For those of you that are about to stop reading, shake your head, and say it's not me, you are wrong - IT IS YOU. ITS ALL OF US.

The behavior patterns of the teacher-student relationship are on the basis of the positive and negative feedback loops that exist. To the faculty: have you given this class a chance to make sure that they are not as bad as the last? To the student: have you given this prof. a chance to see if he's any better than the last one? In both cases a likely answer is no. With negative feedback loops operating on behavior here the basic system of teachers and students spirals downward.

THE ANSWER?
The answer might be a combination of events. The following are probably a part of them.

To the faculty: I dare you to tell your present class to simply hand in works that are scholarly works for that class. Asking everyone the same question is an excellent exercise but then again maybe the same difference exists between running on a track inside the fieldhouse and running crosscountry outside.

To the students: I dare you to chart your own course here at UVM. Students traditionally take what is given to them. Uncomplainingly. If you don't like what's happening to you speak the hell-up. No one will ever know if you just keep on truckin' weekend to weekend. And besides what have you really got to lose?

To the administration: Perhaps one of the roots of all evil is the love of money over all. Our present system of budgeting funds to the various departments and constituencies not only provides for interdepartmental competition, but also provides for individuals to feel constantly threatened. How can a faculty effectively operate when they have their niche to be worrying about?

Ex. if a professor has two classes, committee meeting about the reorganization of his college, and meeting about faculty pay raises, and a meeting about opening a new, innovative program in the department, which of these get preference and support. There are budgeting systems which don't stimulate competition between departments and do allow for cooperation between departments. (One sideglt: if the various departments are unified they make less of an adversary.)

Why not select a week in late April and have discussions dealing with where the University is going and why and also discussing individual philosophies. Why are we all here?

These god damn radicals what will they come up with next?

A projected four-point deficit.

An increasing competition for funds with State Colleges and Community Colleges.

Imposed tenure systems.

Firing aging scholars.

Diplomas with no meaning (in plastic cases).

A "no-job" job market.

A societal prejudice against Universities and colleges.

Students who follow patterns that they fit into at orientation and stay in until graduation.

The term "four year summer camp."

A faculty which is not allowed to really excel and then stagnate and is divided on whether it should have a Union or not.

A routine where the the professor tells it to the student enough times so it can be repeated:

ETC., ETC.

Ah, the goddamn radicals what will they come up with next?

Stafford Supports

Right-To-Know

WASHINGTON - U.S. Sen. Robert T. Stafford, R-Vt., has warned that efforts by the news media to seek federal legislation to protect news sources could lead to an ultimate loss of freedom of the press.

Stafford said it is unlikely that Congress will enact any legislation that would "grant newsmen absolute privilege in all situations," and that some form of limited protection "is the best the news media can expect from Congress."

"In my view," Stafford added in his weekly radio report to Vermont, "any form of limited shield legislation carries with it the serious threat of some form of federal licensing of the news media."

"I am opposed to any government licensing of the media, and I think newsmen should share that view," Stafford said.

"The price of freedom of the press is that the news media should fight its own battles, as our nation's press has always fought for its rights with an always reluctant, and often antagonistic, government."

Stafford said he continues his unyielding support of a policy of open government, including right-to-know legislation, and freedom of the press because they are vital to the strength of our government.

But, he added: "The best protector of freedom of the news media and the free flow

Faculty Senate Meeting Discusses Wage Increase, Fringe Benefits, Constitution Amendments

by Mike Cole

The March 14 Faculty Senate meeting centered over faculty wage increases which would be in effect with the beginning of the fall semester. President Andrews was the principal speaker, and from the podium he summarized, "We are determined to get salaries as high as we can this year," and continued, "...within the 5.5% federal restriction.

Although, I suspect we can get away with more." On the average he stated they were assured of a 6.2% total increase this including .7% increase in benefits.

Professor London commented on this, saying that he "was under the impression the administration was going to try to get as much as it can get. Then worry about federal restrictions... This is the year for salary increases."

Andrews replied, "The Deans felt we should have a solid base." He said he felt the decision was a psychological one so it would not seem the administration was chipping back the increase if and when they found it necessary. But he finished, "My feeling is that we could go beyond 5.5 per cent." Speaking for his constituents, Professor London stated that he would rather have the pay increase percentage as high as possible, then relinquish if necessary. He emphasized that the administration "should be going all out for faculty raises."

"We will do our damndest to get more," President Andrews reaffirmed. "When I started speaking last fall, I knew nothing of Mr. Nixon's budget." But he was certain the Deans would approve a reasonable deficit, fully perceptive of faculty merit. He elaborated that the increase, "adds about $500,000 to the planned $300,000 deficit," and that although he was still committed, it was extremely unlikely a larger deficit would be approved.

This deficit would still be incurred despite an increase in out-of-state tuition. As for in-state tuition, President Andrews noted that he had never stated in-state tuition would not be raised, simply that it would be kept to a minimum. The no-increase on in-state tuition was a clause written into the "bill in Montpelier." He added in this respect that Montpelier had a tendency to "fund students rather than institutions," and this had gone too far in recent years.

He concluded by adding that he did expect to get an additional sum of money from a special program which, he said, "I can't really announce."

The Committee on Academic Tenure reported that its preliminary study would be finished before the end of spring recess. President Andrews commented that he would like to see the final date-scheduled for the April meeting-moved up into June. This would allow an examination of the AUUP and Ford two-year tenure studies.

The committee considering faculty fringe benefits reported its final recommendations. These included a medical program which would provide for an optional insurance program. They felt that under the Blue-Cross, Blue-Shield program, they might be paying "more for an inferior program." Also, enforced privileges for use of University facilities and extended variable annuity for all retirement plans were recommended. After discussion, the recommendations were unanimously accepted.

In the last few minutes of the session, Robert Keen presented a proposed amendment to the University constitution. The proposal would allow students, in numbers equal to the faculty, on the Student Affairs committee under the status of voting members-although, the word "voting" was not specifically mentioned in the text of the proposal. This was pointed out by a member of the Senate, who added that the exact status of the students should be explicitly stated.

Robert Keen answered in this respect, "The distinction is that students are specifically excluded as voting members," in its present form, this is the distinction between the proposed amendment and the existing clause.

Another member commented that he did not want to "get into a situation where the students could out-vote the faculty in a decision-making process." Although he felt it was acceptable to have "student representation on the committee."

The chairman announced the Senate could not act on such a proposal. Afterward, Robert Keen said he would report the reaction of the Senate to the Student Affairs committee, which had proposed the amendment.

Night's stilling wind across the antless dunes, when then I rode her from waves to nether noon.
After minds were bent to dream of other places, and other eyes searched for other faces, and every hour more tears from heaven fell,
and every hour, less the tell of steepie knell:
When moan the naked wet against the north,
when wrists are opened wide to nameless worth, and flames drive pain into the black,

May To Be 'Environmonth'

Since its inception four years ago "Green Up" Day has made an impact upon Vermont and its people. It has met with success, but it is time to broaden the concept to encompass action programs concerning our environment other than just picking up of trash.

The month of May will be designated "Environmonth." It will combine the concepts of "Green Up" and "Community Betterment." Communities and community groups will be encouraged to initiate, and carry out programs in their own communities. The assistance of various State agencies and departments will be available upon request and channeled through and coordinated by a County Coordinator. The key to the effort is a voluntary attitude assumed by the local people. If clean up on town and secondary roads is a project selected by a group in a town, it will take place on May 5th in Bennington, Windham, Rutland and Windsor counties and on May 19th in the northern counties to expedite the coordination of State resources.

More information and suggested activities may be obtained from Edward J. Koenemann, State Coordinator, c/o Agency of Environmental Conservation, State Office Building, Montpelier, or phone 828-3385.

the doctor's bag

by Arnold Werner M.D.

Very rarely, excessive swelling of the tonsils and other lymph tissues in the throat call for special treatment. Sore throats are common with infectious mono and antibiotics should never be given unless a bacterial infection is proven by throat culture.

Physicians generally agree these days that in the uncomplicated case, bed rest only makes matters worse inducing excessive fatigue and muscle aching. Fatigue, common to the illness, provides a natural limit on the amount of activity you can engage in and there is no reason to especially alter your usual routine beyond the limits created by the fatigue. Initially, there may be a period of difficulty concentrating on school work, but this lasts a very short time. It is exceedingly rare for someone to drop out of school.

QUESTION: What do you suggest as the best treatment for someone who has just been told that he has infectious mononucleosis? What medication is recommended? Is complete bed rest necessary? If so, for how long and is it necessary to drop out of school?

ANSWER: Infectious mononucleosis is a non serious, self limited, non contagious, viral illness. The first line of treatment is reassurance. In the usual uncomplicated case, bed rest is recommended when fever is over 100.0F (38.0C) or when a person is excessively fatigued. It is common for the spleen (an abdominal blood forming organ) to become enlarged. This organ is easily ruptured in that state. Therefore, if enlargement occurs all contact sports and exposure to abdominal trauma should be avoided until the spleen returns to its normal size. In a severe case a person can have considerable pain in the throat, head or abdomen, this usually responds to the usual two aspirin, four times a day.

Sackbuts, Harpsichords, Dulicians Wanted By Friends Of Early Music

by Lisa Charles
In order to provide adequate and specialized instruction of Baroque, Renaissance, and Medieval music, the UVM Friends of Early Music have initiated a fund raising campaign to purchase the necessary instruments. Coordinated by Professor William Metcalfe, conductor of the UVM Baroque Ensemble, the campaign is designed to appeal to all faculty, students, alumni, and concerned citizens interested in increasing student exposure to Early Music (music written before 1750).
"All UVM music students are introduced to Early Music through historical references," professor Metcalfe noted. "However, the university has no departmental collection of Renaissance or Baroque instruments necessary for actual instruction or student performances."

While proposals and budgets are still in the making, plans to purchase a new harpsichord are already in process. The UVM Friends of Early Music have raised one fifth of the estimated $4500 needed to pay for the harpsichord now being constructed by a Vermont maker. Other instruments such as the sackbut, dulciana, baroque flutes and oboes, may be immediately purchased, but must often be ordered. Consequently it may take up to two years to complete the collection, as each instrument may be on order up to eight months.
"Hopefully the collection will be completed by the time the new music building is constructed behind Southwick gym," Metcalfe speculated. "The new building will provide proper housing for the instruments, more space and better facilities for the marvelous student instruction," he added. In addition to private instrumental lessons, professor Metcalfe and concerned faculty hope to provide opportunity for student performances of Early Music through a "Collegium Musicum." Ideally, these students studying this sort of music would not only conduct recitals for various music and history classes, but also perform publicly in concert.

Professor Metcalfe, recently appointed acting chairman of the UVM Music Department for the coming academic year, has noted an increased student enrollment in the music department over the past five years.
"Students are more interested in music and the arts than they were five years ago," he remarked. "It is evident by

The UVM Friends of Early Music have estimated a maximum of $12,000 needed to complete the proposed instrumental collection. All persons willing to contribute or serve on the fund raising committee are encouraged to contact professor William Metcalfe at 863-2296.

David Steinberg Plays It All For Laughs, But Spheris Bores

by Peter Campbell
When I got an assignment to review David Steinberg for this paper, I asked "Who is David Steinberg?" He is a young comic who got started on the Smothers Brothers show and is now often on the Johnny Carson show. I was told, (I must explain that though I watched the Smothers Brothers, I never watched Johnny Carson). I was informed that David Steinberg might be funny. But the same people had told me that George Carlin would be hilarious. (I was totally ignorant about George Carlin also) and he was terrible. At least no one had told me that I should go to see David Steinberg. But I have never expected much from TV comedians, and past experience made me wary of this type of concert. So I walked into the Patrick Gymnasium in a very cynical mood. (This is not to be confused with a C-Y-N-I-C mood which is a very different species altogether.)
My dreary expectations were rewarded handsomely with the first act, Jimmy Spheris, a Columbia recording artist, who managed to combine the styles of Joni Mitchell, Donovan, and because this is the year of our Lord 1973, David Bowie. The music was amazingly indistinctive in spite of these influences. Jimmy would have lulled me right to sleep with his flower-child versus war-mongers monotone, but it was my duty to report this, so I stayed awake. There was the usual song about heroin, and one good song about a Hawaiian Paradise, where a girl shared the vocal. She was good, and I wish we could have heard more of her. But it was Jimmie's show. He played piano too. Then, he really sounded like Joni Mitchell, incarnated in a male body, but strangely enough every chorus sounded like the chorus to Donovan's song, Isle of Islay.

Jimmie told us that he was not political, "but you know some show called Route 202 (?)". Yeah, well the only way the students are going to get along is if the Jew sells some grass to the Puerto Rican who trades it to a Hungarian," etc. in all of his routines, he was never content with letting the punch line rest. He would play for it all it was worth, and add little flourishes here and there.

drank water from a wine goblet perched on his piano. What more can I say? He will probably be a star next year.
But I was wrong about David Steinberg. He was a good and versatile comedian, and a very personable one as well. A lot of his stuff made me howl with laughter and a lot made me smile, and I was not restless for a minute. The rest of the audience was responding as well. For once I was not getting any echo.
David Steinberg was a little slow warming us up, but his pace never wavered. He started by satirizing TV shows such as The Dating Game and the Newlywed Game with such lines as "The thing that bothers me most about Earl is his premature ejaculations," etc. He said this to a national audience for a set of steak knives. And Richard Nixon does not run America and Ho Chi Minh does not run China. Good thinking, Jimmy. Finally he sang a "science fiction love song called The Nest, a direct rip-off from David Bowie, but with absolutely none of Bowie's musical dynamics or poetic imagination. Jimmy wore a Hawaiian shirt and such as talking to his shadow, "Benjamin."

He picked up a guitar and sang Howling Wolf's Evil, and his own well known "Freakers Ball," a lighthearted song about perversion. Every thing Steinberg did, he could pump for a laugh; the way he adjusted a microphone or in the way he moved his eyes when one of the spotlights went out. These spontaneous bits kept the show interesting.
Then Steinberg told us about his involvement in the lawsuit by the Smothers Brothers against CBS, for taking them off the air. David Steinberg had a lot to do with it. It seems that he was giving "Bible sermons" on the show, and a lot of people called in to complain. David had to testify in court. The judge asked him about a line from a sermon, where he was quoted as saying that "the new Bible scholars had taken the testimonies of the old Bible scholars." The judge wanted to know if this was any reference to the word "testicle." (Well, it was funny the way he related the story.) He denied this connection. He told us how the jury had laughed at these sermons, and he related a few of these Bible stories for us. They were hysterical.

Then he told us about the preview showing of the film, Last Tango in Paris that he attended. (They practically had to spatula me off the screen!)

For the encore he did his trademark, the psychiatrist routine, where the psychiatrist keeps screaming "AHH!" It did not come off as well as it has before, but it hardly mattered because the rest of the show was so good.
Now I know who David Steinberg is, and I recommend him to you. And if I get a chance, I will even disobey my doctor and watch him on the Tonight Show. No comedian has ever been able to keep my attention for two whole hours before. The SA Speakers Bureau picked a good man. It is too bad more people did not go to this concert.

An Evening With Bach

by Allyson Davis
The "Back to Bach" concert performed by the UVM Baroque Ensemble drew capacity crowds both Wednesday and Thursday nights, March 14 and 15 in the Front room of Billings Center.
Participating in the group were Jill Lewis, soprano, Jane Ambrose, performing on a 1760 rendition of a baroque flute, Thomas Read, solo violin, Evelyn Read, violin, Roger Gillim, viola, Philip Ambrose, recorder and harpsichord, William Metcalfe, conductor and recorder, Peter Tourin, viola da gamba, Ronald Foulkes, cello, and Elizabeth Metcalfe, performing brilliantly on a replica of a 17th century Rutgers-harpsichord built in Antwerp.
It certainly was "An Evening

With Johann Sebastian Bach." The music was superbly performed. First on the program was the "Brandenburg" Concerto no. 5 for harpsichord, flute, and violin in D major, William Metcalfe conducting. The instruments on the whole were in excellent balance and intonation, with perhaps the lovely tone of the baroque flute occasionally being overshadowed. The dynamic variation was good, and the tempo was steady. The highlight of the piece was Mrs. Metcalfe's superb harpsichord cadenza. The technique was flawless and the audience was captivated to the point of applause. Her touch was delicate and flowing and she performed in the finest style of chamber music for harpsichord. The ensemble of the group was perfect, and all the performers should be commended.
Next was the "Concerto in F major for Harpsichord, and two recorders from the 4th 'Brandenburg' Concerto in F (BWV 1057). The two recorders were in fine balance between themselves, but the other performers overpowered them a bit at times. "Andante" had beautifully mellow flowing lines. The ritards and cadences were truly felt by all the performers which added to the charm of the movement. "Allegro Assai" had the audience shaking their heads in utter amazement in reaction to the difficult technical aspects of the movement.
The second half of the concert was comprised of a Bach cantata for soprano, "Non Sa Che Sia Dolore" (BWV 209). Cantata 209, written between 1730 and 1734. The opening sinfonia is a virtuoso movement for flute and strings. Following a short recitative is an elaborate aria, expressing the sadness of the composer over the departure of a friend. The aria is a musical representation of sobbing and sighing. Mrs. Lewis has a beautiful, rich tone quality which she used to the utmost to express these emotions. Her dictation was good, as was her use of support. The aria becomes quite technically involved, but she handled it with ease and great sensitivity. Her face expressed the meaning of the words, and if one did not understand Italian, they could identify aesthetically in this manner.
The concert, in short, was excellent. It brought one back to music in a period of time which is all too often merely "performed," but not "felt". These performers did feel it.

Spring Concert: Weinrich Directs An Uneven 'St. Matthew's Passion'

by Chuck Hoag
On Sunday March 18th, the UVM choir gave its annual Spring concert, performing the masterwork, "St. Matthew's Passion" by J.S. Bach. It is one of Bach's better known choral works. The work consists of single and double choruses, with chorales, recitatives and arias interspersed throughout. Unfortunately, the edition which the conductor, Professor Francis Weinrich chose, was abridged and sung in English.
The work opened with the double chorus, "Come Ye Daughters, Share My Anguish," with the St. Joseph's Children's Choir successfully singing the soprano rippling line under the direction of Father George Paulin.
As for the remainder of the choruses, the highlights were "Have Lightnings and Thunders" and "Let Him be Crucified." The dictation was not always intelligible, but the overall tone and intonation of the group was good. Entrances and cutoffs were often sloppy, due to no fault of the choir. Professor Weinrich did not seem to be too concerned with this, as all through the concert there was a definite tempo difference between the organ, the choir, and the director's beat.

Just a note about the chorales; it was very distracting to this writer to hear breaks in between main phrases. These breaks disrupted the melodic flow of the line and certainly would not have been interpreted in this way by Bach.

Andrew Crispell, who sang the role of Jesus, is a senior majoring in Anthropology. Besides the fact that he looked the part of Jesus, he sang with real compassion and meaning. He does need some work in controlling his upper and lower registers. This is a voice with a great deal of potential.
Maurice Vilemaire, director of music at Rice Memorial High School, who sang the role of the narrator, was apparently having a bad day. His pitch was not precise and he was constantly overpowering. His dictation, however, was good. Dynamically, his voice was insensitive to the words.
Stephanie Hahn, a freshman voice major, has a very sweet voice, with a pleasant tone quality. She has good dictation too, but needs to work on her breath control. Professor Weinrich jazzed up her beautiful aria "Bleed and Break." Bach is said to be the "Grandfather of Jazz" but I was rather disappointed with Patti Akley after hearing her in the Christmas concert. Perhaps it can be attributed to laryngitis, but I rather feel she was unprepared.
Alan King, tenor, who is running for SA President, seemed well prepared with his solo. He had relatively good dictation, but needs some work with breath control.

Allyson Davis and Lorraine Routhier, both music majors, sang the duet, "Behold My Savior Now is Taken." The long lines of this beautiful duet were adequately handled. Both have a rich tone and good dictation. Unfortunately, Ms. Routhier did not seem very well prepared on some entrances.
Stuart Duke, a bass voice major, as Judas gave an adequate performance.
Other soloists were Janet Morris, Mina Carson, Gary Moreau, Grace Salmon, Robert Young, Karen Richardson and Rosemary Groat.
The organist was Mrs. Sylvia Moyer and the harpsichord was played by Reeta Colton.
On the whole, the choir could have done a better job if there had been more rehearsals and if the conductor had been more precise.

to express these emotions. Her dictation was good, as was her use of support. The aria becomes quite technically involved, but she handled it with ease and great sensitivity. Her face expressed the meaning of the words, and if one did not understand Italian, they could identify aesthetically in this manner.
The concert, in short, was excellent. It brought one back to music in a period of time which is all too often merely "performed," but not "felt". These performers did feel it.

First on the program, Quintet in E minor, no. 2, by Franz Schubert. "Allegro-Vivace" had entrance. The flute, which predominates was a much so in this movement. Intonation of instruments was excellent. The phrasing technique. The "L" had a lovely flowing clarinet and oboe beautiful, rich tone. "Minuetto-Allegretto

A Vonnegutian Birthday Party For Wanda June In Billings April 6-10

by Peter Campbell
The Billings Center for the Performing Arts is producing Kurt Vonnegut's play, Happy Birthday Wanda June in the Billings Round Room following spring recess.

Kurt Vonnegut is well known for his literary works, Cat in Hat and Slaughterhouse-Five and is considered to be one of America's best satirists. Wanda June, Vonnegut's first play, was written a couple of years ago and was successfully produced on Broadway. This production is being directed by Paula Reeder. Mrs. Reeder, a '72 graduate of UVM, has had extensive experience in the theatre. She was in the Shakespeare festival, and as a member of the University Players appeared in numerous productions here.

She also directed a children's theatre group in New Jersey. The play is about Harold Ryan, an Ernest Hemingway Ryan as the modern Odysseus sort of man, who after eight years in the Amazon jungle, returns home to find that his wife Penelope has in the meantime received a college education, and taken on two tutors, a peace-loving doctor and a vacuum-cleaner salesman, Herb Shuttle.

Mrs. Reeder made some comments about the play: "Wanda June is loosely based on The Odyssey, with Harold Ryan, an Ernest Hemingway Ryan as the modern Odysseus

Anouilh's 'L'Alouette' Is A Memorable Experience

by Peter L. Kurth
On March 16, 17, and 18, at the Arena Theatre, the Department of Romance Languages, in co-operation with the Department of Communication and Theatre, presented Jean Anouilh's L'Alouette. Directed by M. Thomas Geno, with a cast largely composed of department staff and students, L'Alouette was the first theatrical event of its kind at UVM and a highly memorable theatre experience.

The play tells the story of Joan of Arc, the young country girl inspired by God, who, in the 15th century, led the French army to successive victories over the invading English forces. She saw the Dauphin crowned king at long last, was subsequently betrayed and abandoned, and eventually, burned at the stake as a heretic. Her story has been told often enough, certainly, in hundreds of histories and novels, and at least two other major dramatic works (Shaw's St. Joan, and Maxwell Anderson's Joan of Lorraine).

Familiar as the plot may be, it was interesting to see it all told again, this time by a Frenchman, and presented in the original French.

In L'Alouette, young Jeanne (played here by Teresa Elwert), is on trial for heresy before a church tribunal. Her glorious military victories are in the past; she is alone before her accusers, who are already convinced of her guilt and determined to convict her. She has nothing but her sincerity and strength to rely on. The first act proceeds in a series of flashbacks, as Jeanne tells her story and defends herself. We hear of the day when, tending her father's sheep, she first heard the angelic voices of Saints Michel, Catherine, and Marguerite, commanding her to go to the Dauphin (later Charles VII) and to lead his armies to victory. We see Jeanne's family, shocked and angry when she announces her intention to obey these voices; a humorous scene in which Jeanne convinces the pompous Captain Beaudricourt to supply her with arms and men; then a long display of the frivolity and decadence of the French court, an interesting philosophical dialogue between Jeanne and Dauphin, when the latter takes heart and agrees to follow the bold young girl's advice.

The second act sees Jeanne's downfall - and her ultimate triumph. It is here that she shows herself possessed of a truly noble and free spirit, as she rejects the hypocritical demands of the judges who have condemned her, and chooses instead to go to her death in the strength of her convictions and personality. Anouilh chooses to end his play on a light and glorious note. As Jeanne burns at the stake, there is a sudden and rather amusing interruption. She is brought back, and the cast then with great pomp celebrates the Dauphin's coronation as King of France, for, as Anouilh sees it, "La vraie fin de l'histoire de Jeanne, c'est l'Alouette en plein ciel, c'est Jeanne a Reims dans toute sa gloire. La vraie fin de l'histoire de Jeanne est joyeuse. Jeanne d'Arc, c'est une histoire qui finit bien!"

L'Alouette is not simply a sentimental costume drama, and it is to the credit of director Geno and the cast that the richness and subtleties of Anouilh's text came through intact. The performances for the most part were excellent. Teresa Elwert, who has appeared in many UVM productions, felt her way into her difficult role with remarkable sensitivity, capturing Jeanne's inherent simplicity, her naive devotion, and her incredible strength. Ms. Elwert's was a truly marvelous performance. Jean-Pierre Lacombe gave a vivid and appropriately comic portrayal of the weak Dauphin, and his enthusiasm was refreshing. Others worthy of praise are Jean-Pierre Detchessahar, a native of Nice, as the intimidating Cauchon, should strongly encourage further productions of this nature.

This production had its problems. Some members of the cast were most definitely more at ease with their French than others, and the play dragged at times. This might perhaps have been avoided had more comprehensive cuts been made in Anouilh's lengthy script, one which does not provide for excessive action in the first place. Thus, for those whose French is rusty, the play may have been somewhat difficult to grasp.

Despite these flaws, L'Alouette emerged as a highly commendable production. Nancy Hayne's costumes were rich, colorful, and skillfully constructed. Gerard Bourcier's simple, almost stark set lent itself well to the bright color scenes as well as to the somber trial and prison sequences.

UVM Brass Performs Read's 'Isochronisms'

by Allison Davis
The UVM Brass Ensemble, conducted by Robert Wigness, performed for the first time a composition by Dr. Thomas L. Read, called "Isochronisms". According to the composer, "Much of the work was based on the principle that any musical component from largest to smallest, may be treated isochronally; the temporal distance between successive statements of any pitch may be fixed, and changes in intensity, register and timbre may occur periodically. Variety and change are brought about by the combination of various periodicities."

The piece was fascinating to listen to. It was extremely dynamic and difficult rhythmically and melodically. The percussion, especially, was unique, with gongs and chimes playing intermittently. The brass had difficult sounds to produce which they did admirably. The piece is a marvelous composition, and the audiences' applause and enthusiasm warranted Dr. Read to take two bows from the balcony.

Other pieces performed were Copland, Shahan, Gabrieli, Rautavaara, Shahn and Tourin. All of them were performed with extremely well with great attention given to dynamics and rhythm, adding to the brilliant clear tones.

With Bach

With Johann Sebastian Bach. The music was superbly performed. First on the program was the "Brandenburg" Concerto no. 3 for harpsichord, flute and violin in D major, William Metcalfe conducting. The instruments on the whole were in excellent balance and intonation, with perhaps the lovely tone of the baroque flute occasionally being overshadowed. The dynamic variation was good, and the tempo was steady. The highlight of the piece was Mrs. Metcalfe's superb harpsichord cadenza. The technique was flawless and the audience was captivated to the point of applause. Her touch was delicate and flowing and she performed in the finest style of chamber music for harpsichord. The ensemble of the group was perfect, and all the performers should be commended.

Next was the "Concerto in F major for Harpsichord, and two recorders from the 4th 'Brandenburg' Concerto in F (BWV 1057). The two recorders were in fine balance between themselves, but the other performers overpowered them a bit at times. "Andante" had beautifully mellow flowing lines. The ritards and cadences were truly felt by all the performers which added to the charm of the movement. "Allegro Assai" had the audience shaking their heads in utter amazement in reaction to the difficult technical aspects of the movement.

The second half of the concert was comprised of a Bach cantata for soprano, "Non Sa Che Sia Dolor" (BWV 209). Cantata 209, written between 1730 and 1734. The opening sinfonia is a virtuoso movement for flute and strings. Following a short recitative is an elaborate aria, expressing the sadness of the composer over the departure of a friend. The aria is a musical representation of sobbing and sighing. Mrs. Lewis has a beautiful, rich tone quality which she used to the utmost to express these emotions. Her diction was good, as was her use of support. The aria becomes quite technically involved, but she handled it with ease and great sensitivity. Her face expressed the meaning of the words, and it one did not understand Italian, they could identify aesthetically in this manner.

The concert, in short, was excellent. It brought one back to music in a period of time which is all too often merely "performed", but not "felt". These performers did feel it.

New York Woodwind Quintet Performs Marvelously

by Allison Davis
The New York Woodwind Quintet performed Wednesday evening in the Ira Allen Chapel. The performers were Paul Dunkel, flute, who substituted for Thomas Nyfenger who was indisposed; Ralph Frolich, French Horn; David Glazer, clarinet; Ronald Roseman, oboe; and Arthur Westburg, bassoon.

The New York Woodwind Quintet has been in existence for 15 years. The group has appeared in numerous concerts in the United States, Canada, and Europe, and also has appeared on television, radio and on recordings. The group holds clinics and workshops in schools all over the country, providing person to person contact for students. Each of the men is a virtuoso performer in their own right, combining the individual color of their instrument into a unique combination of sound. Often the quintet is combined with string ensembles for presentations of masterworks. Many works have been written for performance especially by this group.

First on the program was the Quintet in E minor, opus 67, no. 2, by Franz Danzi. The "Allegro Vivo" had a fine entrance. The flute, which was predominant, was a bit too much so in this movement. The intonation of all the instruments was excellent, as was the phrasing and the technique. The "Larghetto" had a lovely flowing line. The clarinet and oboe both had beautiful, rich tones. The "Minuetto Allegretto" was a welcome change in mood. The quality of the French horn tone is especially to be noted here.

"Kleine Kammermusik," opus 24, no. 2 by Paul Hindemith was performed brilliantly. The entire piece displayed the performers' technical abilities, the flow of the piece was intense with excellent use of dynamics. "Klein Kammermusik" is an exciting piece with strange dissonances which were performed to the utmost. The rhythmic structure is difficult but this did not hinder the performers. "Ruhig und Einfach" was an especially enchanting section. The movement began softly, with lush, full tones, gradually crescendoing with the oboe predominate. The background of the solo oboe was reminiscent of the "Dance of the Sugar Plum Fairies" from Tchickovsky's "The Nutcracker Suite". The muted French Horn in the background sounded like distant hunting horns. "Schelle Viertel; sehr lebhaft", the last section, had a loud and dynamic technical entrance. The music reminded one of medieval music with the instruments playing in parallel fourths throughout most of the section.

Fantasia in F minor KV608 (for mechanical organ) by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart (tr. Wolfgang Amadeus Meyer) was performed next. The meter was very strict here, almost to the point of monotony. The themes of the fantasia could easily be identified. The long by Anton Rauchner. This piece was light and very technical under control despite the loud, gasping breaths which could be heard. The technical aspects of this piece were well handled. Quintet, opus 43, by Carl Nielson, was a delightful end for the concert. "Allegro moderato" began with a bassoon solo. The entire tonal effect was a very light blend of sound. "Praeludium; Tema Con variazioni" began with a dissonant entrance which gradually became very conventional as the harmonic structure became hymnlike. This eased into an atonal section with the clarinet soloing. The French Horn resumed the solo. The section ended with the hymn again playing softly.

The enthusiasm of the audience prompted an encore of the Quintet in E flat major themes of the fantasia could easily be identified. The long by Anton Rauchner. This piece was light and very technical under control despite the loud, gasping breaths which could be heard. The technical aspects of this piece were well handled. Quintet, opus 43, by Carl

U.V.M. SPORTS

Tennis Team To Open Season April 6

by Rick Steinberg

With the close of the hockey season and the removal of the ice, Gutterman Fieldhouse has been taken over by the UVM tennis team. Coached Harold Greg, the team has started practicing for the upcoming season which opens on April 6 with the Second Annual Vermont Invitational. Also participating will be Albany State, St. Lawrence, and RPI. Last year's tournament was highly successful with UVM edging out St. Lawrence for the victory.

The team ended up at 7-1 last season only losing to the Yankee Conference champions UMass. But having lost four of last year's top six players, this year's team will be a young inexperienced team hoping to put together a winning season and build for the future. The team will be led by senior Jim Rubin who has been chosen as this year's captain. At the Yankee Conference tournament last season Rubin won the championship at the third singles and this past fall he was the runner up at first singles in the Cardinal Classic held in Plattsburgh. This year Rubin will be the Cats' number one singles player and will be pairing with teammate Pete Macauland in the first doubles slot.

The second, third, and fourth singles spots are up in the air with junior Bob Meritt and freshman Tom Lenci battling Macauland for the positions. Macauland played sixth singles last season and was runner up in third doubles at the Yankee Conference tournament.

Meritt, who has been with the squad since his freshman year, is an extremely hard worker. Having overcome his tendency to overhit in past years, Meritt has high potential and should be an asset to the Cats.

Senior Gene Peroni and sophomore Mitch Goldstein, who were seventh and eighth men on last year's squad could break into the singles lineup. Peroni and Goldstein may also be paired up to play doubles. Another potential doubles team could be Lenci and Meritt.

Other possible candidates for spots on the team are sophomores Steve Kalish, Art Lewis, and Larry Lacin and freshman George Georgeaklis, Peter Torrey, Steve Gardiner, Rich Delucas, Ken Raskin, and Calvin Hill.

Although the Cats may have difficulty at the outset of the season due to their inexperience and lack of depth, by the end of the season they may develop into a successful squad with great potential for future seasons. Coach Greg feels that UCONN, URI, and UMass are the teams to watch for this season.

This year's schedule includes dual meets versus UMass, UNH, St. Lawrence, Plattsburgh, St. Mikes, and a home-and-home series versus Middlebury. The Yankee Conference tournament will be held April 27 and 28 at UConn.

Salzberg Recruits Two From Metropolitan Area

Two top basketball prospects will enroll as freshmen at the University of Vermont this fall. It was announced by head coach Peter Salzberg, just completing his first year as head mentor of the Yankee Conference Catamounts.

Ronald Gottschalk of Freeport, N.Y. and Charles Trapani of Oakland, N.J., both centers in high school, are the first of several top basketball players coming to Vermont, as Salzberg sets out to join Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut as Yankee Conference and New England powers. Massachusetts recently (March 17) defeated Missouri in the opening round of the N.I.T.

Gottschalk, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Gottschalk of 309 South Side Ave., Freeport, averaged 15 points and 12 rebounds this past season under George Emma. Freeport has won 32 games the last two years, while losing only eight games. "An excellent high school pivot man, but I'll probably use Ron as a forward facing the basket. An excellent rebounder and inside scorer with his size (6-6, 195) and mobility, he should be a big asset to our program next year."

Only two year's club, and returning are All-New England (honorable mention) forward, Joe Greco (19 points and 11 rebounds a game as a sophomore), Mario Macias, a point guard who set a Vermont record for most assists in one season; Barry Cohen, a quick-stepping guard and forwards Terry Green and Bernie Palmer. All are sophomores.

PEARLS TEAM ROSTER: Bruce Fields, Robert Wyld, Lawrence Beck, Neil Stannard, Michael Fitzmaurice, Donald Sisto.

ART GALLERY TEAM ROSTER: Peter Sakash, Lawrence Onley, Arthur Newcomb, Edward White, David Steele, Boris Funtow, David Pierson, Robert Roberts, Steven Rice, Michael Johns.

Seniors Brad Cooke and Patty Wright who were selected Division II All-Americans

SPEAKING OF HOCKEY

by Bob Wilensk

I would like to congratulate Patty Wright and Brad Cooke for making the All-America team. Brad and Patty are seniors and have completed their careers at UVM. Other seniors are Steve Eckerson, who in my opinion was the best goalie that UVM has seen in its history, Rick Burns, and Fred Hunt. These players will all be missed greatly by the team and by the fans.

Patty Wright had his best season at UVM this year. He was voted MVP for the championship game against Bowdoin. In that game Wright had a hat trick to finish out an incredible career. Everyone will miss Patty's presence on the ice. He's given the hockey fans a great amount of excitement the last three years. When he graduates, his name will live-on in the minds of the fans and in the record books.

Fred Hunt leaves Vermont with the record for most career goals. Fred was a tremendous hockey player with a booming slap shot. Hunt had two shutouts in a season (5) and the lowest goals against average for a season. Steve has worked very hard this year and saved many games for us with his tremendous ability to stop the puck. Steve, congratulations on a great career. That also goes to Patty, Brad, Fred, and Rick.

Brad Cooke will be remembered for his great defense and hard, crisp checks.

He is also the second highest scorer in Vermont hockey history for a defenseman.

As I stated earlier, Steve Eckerson was the best goalie ever at Vermont. He may not have been as flashy as Dave Reese, but he was definitely much more consistent. Steve holds the record for most shutouts in a season (5) and the lowest goals against average for a season. Steve has worked very hard this year and saved many games for us with his tremendous ability to stop the puck. Steve, congratulations on a great career. That also goes to Patty, Brad, Fred, and Rick.

That's all from me until next season. I would like to thank Sports Editor Rick Steinberg and Sports Information Director Dick Whittier for giving me freedom of the press. Their help was extremely appreciated. I would especially like to thank Coach Jim Cross for allowing me to travel with the team-on the road and for letting me bother everyone in the locker room. Many things get said about a team and very little is said about the coach. Let me say that Mr. Cross has done a tremendous job with his hockey team and he has my fullest respect as a man and as a coach. Last, but definitely not least, I would like to thank the players for treating me as a friend and for giving the fans and myself a very exciting semester.

Students Fight To Open Future Meetings Of Academic Council

Students of the University of Vermont (UVM) are fighting to open future meetings of the Academic Council. The Student Association (SA) has filed a motion with the Senate to require the Academic Council to hold open meetings. The SA argues that the current policy of closed meetings is "unrealistic" and "unfair" to students. The Academic Council is scheduled to meet on Monday, April 9, at 4:00 P.M. in Old Hall.

Senators stated that the SA's motion was "unrealistic" and "unfair" to students. They argued that the Academic Council is a "private" body and that its meetings should be closed. The SA responded that the Academic Council is a "public" body and that its meetings should be open to the public. The Senate will vote on the SA's motion at its meeting on Monday, April 9.

Non-Academic Council Supports Tuition Remission Benefits

The Non-Academic Council (NAC) has supported a resolution to provide tuition remission benefits to students. The resolution was passed by a vote of 10-2. The NAC argued that tuition remission is a "reasonable" benefit for students who are "financially needy." The resolution will be implemented starting in the fall of 1973.

The resolution provides for a maximum of $1500 in tuition remission per student. The NAC also argued that the resolution is "unrealistic" and "unfair" to students. They argued that the resolution would "increase" the cost of living and "inflation." The resolution will be implemented starting in the fall of 1973.

Summer Jobs Will Be Scarce

by Wendy Nelson

The job hunt will be competitive and difficult this summer as Federal Trainee and Summer Internship programs have been severely cut, and deadlines for most other governmental jobs, such as working in the Post Office, have passed. Work in the Burlington area will be hard to find and will depend upon the amount of energy and persistence put into the hunt.

Mr. Larry Simmons, Director of the Office of Career Planning and Placement, stated, "Burlington is literally saturated with young people ready, willing and able to work." High school students in Burlington have a competitive edge on jobs because they know the area and often personnel in the local companies. Many students are going back to jobs which they held the previous year. UVM and other college students seeking jobs, on the other hand, have the advantage of an extra month of work time due to early semester closings. Employers often seek the maturity of a college student and would rather employ an older student, particularly on dangerous construction jobs. As in the recent years, more and more jobs traditionally filled by high school students will be occupied by college students this summer.

The best bet for employment other than on campus will be in the State of Vermont proper, and out of state. There will be on-campus jobs through the various departments and Work Study. Also, there will be work in the Library and in the business offices. Some maintenance and construction jobs will be available. Painting, putting the grass but the needs for help this summer have not yet been determined. The school has placed around 100 jobs.

Off-campus, in addition to the needs of the local businesses, there will be employment in the immediate vicinity of Burlington. These jobs are often in the form of construction of housing developments and farm jobs. The Burlington Free Press and the Placement Office post all campus job listings. In addition, the Placement Office has sent mass solicitations inquiring about jobs for students to 450 farms throughout the state and should receive replies by mid-April.

Summer Internships With The U.S. Committee For UNICEF

The UVM Committee for UNICEF has been informed that there are a number of volunteer intern positions available at the U.S. Committee for UNICEF for the Summer Intern Program 1973. The program is a 6-8 week (July through August) work learning experience with the U.S. Committee, a non-governmental affiliate of the United Nations. The U.S. Committee for UNICEF is one of the 10 national committees throughout the world whose purpose is to inform individuals about the work of UNICEF (the United Nations Children's Fund) and to raise funds for this UN organization.

IRA Minutes Recorded

The meeting was called to order at 7:05 in the Harris-Mills lounge by President Sig Heller. Dr. Miser and Dean Thompson were present.

Back copies of the minutes and the schedule of IRA-sponsored shops were distributed. The treasury balance is presently $2250.

The Executive Board elections will be held the second week in April. Petitions with 75 names will probably be required to be on the ballot. A probable change in the board will be to eliminate the positions of a Judicial Chairman and one of the two secretaries. The latter two will probably combine duties.

Jon Fackler notified Sig that they no longer want IRA's money and that the pottery shop may only be used two days per week. Sig also spoke to Terry Dumas and the films IRA voted on have been ordered.

The Leather Shop, now open in Williams Science Hall (the Art Bldg) will hopefully be moved to a dorm so that it may be open 20 hrs/wk rather than the present 10.

WDW is hoping to rent a film to be shown for all campus and would like IRA to consider paying half of the cost, since the film that is being considered is Play Marty for Me, costing $200.

Sig mentioned continuing with some activities for the first two weeks of next year and asked for suggestions of activities.

Dr. Miser discussed the Residence Hall Handbook to be printed for next fall. They hope to have a much more pleasant approach in the new copy and introductory explanation for each dorm.

The publication cost is about $1800, and depending on the exact cost, IRA may be asked for $100-$200. With regard to room choosing for next year, Dr. Miser said that the in-person room choosing is preferred, and hopefully will be in the lobby of Patrick Gym according to this year's plans. An explanatory packet will be in each mailbox April 3. April 9-10 will be in-hall room choosing, and after that, all campus room choosing. Later, any choosing will have to be by mail. The first day of choosing is for Seniors and displaced people, the next day Juniors in the morning, Sophomores in the afternoon. Rather than having different rental rates according to the "quality" of the dorm, Chittenden, Buckham, and Wills are to be improved. Chittenden is to house grad students and seniors in singles. Buckham and Wills will have boys on the 1st and 3rd floors, and girls on 2 & 4. They will be done over during the summer, with new furniture, etc. Some of the girl's rooms will be singles to satisfy the regulation of one toilet per 7 girls. Even with the increased on-campus residence hall costs, Dr. Miser expects more students to remain on campus since off-campus rates are also increasing.

In the dining halls, Waterman's breakfast and lunch hours will be extended, but closed at supper. The Living/Learning Center dining hall will be open for supper at least as long as Marsh One of the five L/L center buildings, probably won't be open in the fall. Two of the buildings will probably be open to regular room choosing.

Robinson Hall would like to landscape the area around their dorm and asked about funds of $60-100 from IRA. Since maintenance probably could not provide more than grass seed it was suggested that the Botany or Plant Science Departments be consulted for possible contributions.

There being no further business, the meeting was adjourned at 7:45.

Respectfully submitted,
Allison Milne,
Recording Secretary

Bud Drinkers, can you figure this out?

Suppose Bud came in 24-oz. bottles that cost 50¢ apiece. And suppose the 12-oz. bottles cost 25¢ each. A guy comes up to you carrying two boxes the same size. He tells you one box is full of 12-oz. bottles, the other is exactly half full of the 24-oz. bottles. One is worth more than the other. Which one?

ANSWER: Since both boxes are exactly the same size, the size of the bottles makes little difference. The full box is worth more than the half-full box because it contains twice as much. If you suppose each box holds 144 ounces, the full box would contain twelve 12-oz. bottles, and would cost $3.00. The half-full box would contain seven 24-oz. bottles, and would cost $1.75. The full box is worth more than the half-full box. The full box is worth more than the half-full box. The full box is worth more than the half-full box.

THE GREAT MASHED POTATO MYSTERY

The first publication of Image Eye "The Great Mashed Potato Mystery" contains manifestations of outerspatial events in everyday signs and surroundings in a new spatial format which imitates a new geometry. The voyage is continuous and constructed by the perceiver of the format.

The publication will be distributed and hidden throughout the campus on Wednesday, April 11, 1973. 200 copies are available on request through the Student Association Office.

Bicycle Survey Being Conducted

This week students of transportation planning from the department of Civil Engineering will be conducting a bicycle survey study. A questionnaire will be distributed to both on campus and off campus residents and to faculty and staff to determine the magnitude of bicycle use on campus and the attitudes about bicycle use. The cooperation of students, faculty and staff, in completing and returning the questionnaire will be appreciated.

$1500, and the 40% figure should include all earnings above $1500, according to the resolutions.

Elections for the NAEC are approaching, and several members, pressed for comment, indicated they will run again. Mr. Ballard said that he will run again, and Mrs. Samuelson, who will be moving up to class "II," said she will "probably" run. Mrs. Hildine Lynn, chairman of the NAEC, did not rule out running again and commented, "I am eligible."

Dr. Clemmons Will Speak

Sickle Cell, an inherited sickle cell disease will be discussed by Dr. Jackson Clemmons, UVM professor and MD at the monthly meeting of the NAACP Burlington Branch. In addition, a short-length color film narrated by actor Ossie Davis and current literature on the subject of the disease will be featured at the meeting. The meeting will be held on Thursday, April 5, 1973 at 7:40 P.M. at the First United Methodist Church on South Winooski and Buell Streets in Burlington. All are invited and welcome to attend.

Old Salt Talks

During April, the UVM Sailing Club will be sponsoring a series of "Old Salt Talks." On Thursday, April 5, Michelle Ferland and Nat Sims will discuss "Night Sailing" at 7:30 p.m. in Cook B106. Then on April 20, in conjunction with the SA Speakers Bureau, Norris Hoyt, photographer for Sail Magazine, will narrate a showing of his slides, at 8:00 p.m. in Votey 101.

These programs are all presented free of charge, and everyone is invited to attend.

Yoga Classes To Continue

Ananda Marga Yoga classes will continue through the month of April on Tuesday afternoons, 3:30 at 73 Church Street, and Thursday evenings at Southwick gym at 6:30 with meditation at 8:00. The closing date is May 1; after this date another meeting place must be found for the Thursday night class, which will continue throughout the summer. Any questions call 658-0694. New people are welcome, especially at the Tuesday class.

April 11th Showing Of Bergman Film

An Ingmar Bergman film, The Seventh Seal, will be shown twice on Wednesday, April 11, in the Benedict Auditorium of the Marsh Life Sciences building at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. There is no charge for admission, but contributions to defray rental costs will be welcome.

Bluegrass Concert!

There's a Bluegrass concert this Friday (the 6th). Some fine groups like "Banjo Dan & the Midnight Plowboys," the "White Harts" and "That Country Feelin'," "Blackberry Trio," "Bill Lyons Family," all in one evening. It costs $1.75 but that's because it's a benefit and the money is going to Nicaragua. Amanda Marga Relief team has been down there for about 2 months working and helping the people build back their homes. Do you remember the flood?

The concert is in Watsfield, at the Oddfellows Hall at 8:00. Come along.

Information About Semester Abroad

Qualified undergraduates in Philosophy and such related majors as Sociology, Psychology and French literature, can earn from 30 to 34 credits taking regular courses at the University of Paris (Sorbonne) during 1973-74. The SUNY Program Director will help students secure suitable housing, arrange programs and assist or arrange assistance for them in their studies throughout the year. A three-week orientation and intensive language review will be held at the start, September 15 to June 15. Estimated living expenses, transportation, tuition, and fees, $2800. Additional information may be had by writing to: Price Carlson, Department of Philosophy, FT1000, State University College, New Paltz, New York 12561. Telephone: (914) 257-2696.

Corrections About Admissions

In the last issue of the Cynic, an article on the admissions office incorrectly stated that admissions were rising 19% this year. They rose 19% last year and are presently approximately 1% higher than last year's total. Additionally, while 53% of the Vermont freshmen last year were in the top 20% of their graduating class, 71% of out-of-state students were in the top quintile of their class. Dr. Richard Steele, Director of Admissions also wished to comment that he is not optimistic, as was stated in the article, that UVM will receive government funds which were cut. The Cynic extends apologies to Dr. Steele and the Admissions Office for the inaccuracies.

UNICEF To Benefit From 'La Mancha'

The UVM Committee for UNICEF is sponsoring the opening night showing of the film, Man of La Mancha, starring Sophia Loren, Peter O'Toole, and James Coco. Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 1973. Time: Two Showings 6:45 & 9:30 P.M.

Place: Merrill's Showcase I & II, Williston Road, South Burlington (opposite MacDonald's).

A contribution of $3.00 per ticket is requested.

Tickets may be purchased at UVM Bookstore, Lane Series Office, Little Professor Bookstore, and Bailey's Music Room.

Parenti Will Speak

Michael Parenti will be speaking on campus twice on the morning of April 11. At 9 a.m. he will be speaking in 104 Old Mill; at 10 a.m. he will speak in B 112 Cook. The topic is "Fear of Inequality" and it is open to everyone.

Regional Planning

A "Talk on Regional Planning" will be given by Don Rich on April 5th. Location is 301 WSH at 8:00 p.m. and is open to the public.

You Cannot Close Doors

The Student Association, in accordance with its own "right-to-know" policy of holding meetings open to the public, believes that Faculty-Senate meetings, which are now closed, should be opened to all interested observers.

For once, we agree wholeheartedly with the Student Association. Both the S.A. and the Board of Trustees realize that their meetings are of vital concern to all persons connected with this university. That is why these two organizations follow the "right-to-know" policy, which means, simply, that anyone involved or interested in UVM has the "right-to-know" what's going on. Decisions are made at these meetings which affect us all. Therefore, we must have the opportunity to find out why and how these decisions are reached.

The Faculty-Senate, apparently, has not agreed with this concept of open meetings. Although they have not yet stated their reasons for this, it can be presumed that they consider their discussions and subsequent votes as their concern only. Why then do both the Board of Trustees and the Student Association feel that their meetings are of interest to everyone?

The Faculty-Senate will soon decide whether or not to hold open meetings in the future. Hopefully they will realize that in order for a university to truly offer a complete learning experience, everyone should have the chance to see and participate. You cannot close doors if your goal is to open minds.

Steinberg And Spheeris Concert Reviewed In A Different Way

To the Editor:
After spending an enjoyable evening at the David Steinberg/Jimmy Spheeris concert, we were appalled by the gross lack of competence displayed by Cynic reporter Peter Campbell in his review of the concert. To begin with, Jimmy Spheeris was excellent and the audience received him warmly. It seems the reporter's impressions of Spheeris were a product of his own expectations. In regards to Steinberg, it was pleasant to hear complimentary words for a time. However, if Campbell is not the most inaccurate reporter on record, he is definitely in the top ten. Campbell's "Route 202" was Steinberg's "Room 222", a television series which Steinberg dislikes because it does not even approximate reality. Benjamin was not Steinberg's "shadow" but the sound man with whom Steinberg shared a joke or two. The song "Freaky" Ball, Steinberg told the audience, was written by Shel Silverstein with Steinberg contributing to the writing of the last verses. Silverstein also wrote "I was Stoned and I Missed it." Apparently Campbell missed it too. Steinberg's hilarious statement about the Smothers Brothers' trial, so ineptly misquoted, should have read: Judge Mr. Steinberg, when you said the new Bible scholars have grabbed the Jews by the old testament, were you making a subtle reference to testicles? Steinberg: No, Judge. That was your reference and it wasn't very subtle. In Steinberg's psychiatrist routine, the psychiatrist does not scream "AHA!" but tears an imaginary creature from his shoulder, throws it to the ground, and stomps on it screaming "GET OFF!" In view of the fact that Campbell has uncommon musical taste, could not take a quote, was not aware of what was going on, and recorded incorrect information, the Cynic would be wise to find a more competent, aware reporter.

To the Editor:

In the March 22 issue of the Cynic, Tom E. McCormick attempts to satirize "some bad side effects" of the Women's Movement. I would like to suggest to Mr. McCormick that most offensive among these are narrowminded editorials like his.

Although the author claims to "read all the propaganda," the column is filled with assumptions, exaggerations, and stereotypes. The greatest folly is in stating that the Women's Movement, centuries old, is "one more passing fad." He suggests that the Movement is located mostly on college campuses. On the contrary, the Movement on college campuses is often not as strong as elsewhere; among young housewives and mothers for instance. As a subscriber to Ms. (not as in "mix and match" Jones," although the old "Mrs. Magazine," I notice that few of their numerous letters published are from students.

Mr. McCormick states several things as facts without offering a single source. No "made bodies grace the pages of" Ms. magazine, a leading Movement periodical, unless one considers Cosmopolitan to be representative of Women's Lib. If the author can state that "Women's Lib" has somewhat encouraged women to be promiscuous, I can state the opposite in view of the Movement's attitude against the woman as a sex symbol.

"Women have a few legitimate gripes," concedes the author. I contend from his approach to the Movement that he has almost no understanding of it. "They would rather open doors for men, light their cigarettes, and buy them dinner," he states. This sentence contradicts what I feel to be the goal of the Movement, which basically is the freedom from an assigned social role. Women want the freedom from being tagged with a role from birth, and the freedom to shape their futures without bias from organized society. Women do not want to be appreciated for what they're supposed to be, but for what they can be in an openminded society.

The author complains that women and all ethnic groups are overly sensitive to humor made about them. Perhaps the reason why ethnic groups appreciate poking fun at themselves more than when it is done from outside is because they best understand their situation. Feeling that Mr. McCormick didn't know what he was talking about in his editorial, and he was talking about me, I did not find his attempts at humor funny. The Women's Movement is an effort by many individuals for more complete fulfillment, unlike "white socks and hula-hoops."

Witchcraft Course Is Not Free From Prejudice

To the Editor:

A brief note in response to Mr. James Overfield, Assistant Professor, Dept. of History. In his letter of last week, he attempted "to allay the fears of Lois Wright and other concerned persons that the special topics course, I am offering in introducing young minds to the 'horrors' of witchcraft and enticing them down the dangerous and damning path of satanism and the occult." I find it ironic that Mr. Overfield admits to the danger of satanism and the occult, but then goes on and tries to justify the course by calling it a "standard history course." I am not sure what comprises a "standard" course in any discipline, but I severely question whether any free, "standard" or not, is free from the instructor's biases.

And, Mr. Overfield demonstrated his apparent biases by writing, "how and why a supposedly Christian society could indulge in such an orgy of cruelty and twisted justice demands an answer." I submit, if the instructor takes the opinion that the said acts were in fact "an orgy of cruelty and twisted justice" before the course even begins, how can he possibly hope to find the unbiased answer which supposedly is the reason for the course?

I admit that I do not possess a Ph.D degree and we all know, of course, that the possession of such a degree makes one an "unquestionable authority" in his discipline and gives him the right to expound on questions of "cruelty" and "twisted Justice" and also gives him the right to expect his students to accept those views as factual. I don't have the degree, but I have Jesus Christ in my life. He gives me the love to want to warn people that Satan is alive and is not just "historical." If you don't know what you are getting into by inquiring into satanism and the occult you may be in for a rude awakening; so beware. Better yet, turn to Jesus for the answer.

Re: Tom McCormick and all other M.C.P.s.

Is civil rights just a fad? Will it go the way of white socks and hula-hoops?

Women's Liberation is an important movement that has existed for many years. In our history we have worked for the rights of just about every minority group and we will continue to support the equal rights of all human beings as long as there are people in the world who are being enslaved.

You may just have become aware of the movement because there are a growing number of women on this campus who are raising their consciousness to their position in society. Women are as diversified as men. We are not all born to be housewives and mothers. We are fighting for the opportunity to pursue our own goals not the goals imposed on us by society.

We are finally beginning to realize that women are people too. Our brains function the same as any man's. Our hormones and the fact that we are endowed with a uterus does not effect our ability to contribute mentally to society. We want to broaden our opportunities.

Contrary to popular opinion, women who stand up for equal rights are not necessarily man-haters. We do not mind having doors opened for us, cigarettes lit, or being taken out to dinner as long as you do not mind having the same done for you. We believe in loving our neighbor also; however, I would not consider it charity, just appreciation of another.

If you can only find humor at the expense of other people maybe you should re-evaluate your out-dated beliefs and have a good laugh.
Yours Truly,
Ms. Judith Martin

P.S. If you do not wish to pronounce Ms. as "mix" maybe you could bring yourself to spell it. "M-S" is just as proper and acceptable.
Thank you.

To the Editor:

One is rarely treated to such a combination of ignorance, muddled logic, prejudice, and fanciful trivia as Tom McCormick's recent meanderings about "Women's Lib," as he calls it. I am not sure that his ideas deserve intelligent criticism, but I would like nevertheless to comment on a few of the more outlandish ideas he tries to express.

McCormick displays greater than typical willingness to ignore history in his assumption that the feminist movement is a passing fad. By focusing on the relatively superficial aspects of sexism which have gained recent attention like door-opening,

Miss/Mrs./Ms. and "chairman vs. "chairperson," he manages to avoid noticing that the concern for equal rights for women in all spheres of life has been with us for centuries; it will survive a little more condescension and misinterpretation. McCormick might also have noted that the "sexual revolution" of recent years was well under way before the recurrence of popular interest in women's rights in the '60s. It seems difficult, then, to blame (or credit) any new sexual freedom for women on the recent women's liberation movement. A more reasonable argument might be that as women gain self-esteem which arises from our independent abilities and achievements of many kinds, we depend less on sexual attractiveness to men for our self-esteem, and thus may have less need to be "promiscuous," as McCormick so nonjudgmentally puts it.

Finally, McCormick bemoans the fact that it is becoming unfashionable to make women as a group the butt of jokes. Where is the fun in life? What will happen to humor if the dumb blonde, the spinster, the mother-in-law go the way of the shufflin' darkies? The answers are obvious; try making fun of WASP men for a change, if your idea of humor requires stereotypes of large numbers of people; you may learn something about how it feels. Or, better, poke fun at stuffy individuals who need it. Or help us slough at the tragicomic aspects of all human life. Surely the best humor requires, besides wit, sensitivity, tolerance and sympathy. Thus McCormick on the women's movement seems to me to be quintessentially unfunny, but groups of women together, relaxing, talking about our hang-ups, foibles and frustrations, can be very funny people to each other—not making each other the butt of bad jokes, but sharing, and growing through it. We can laugh at ourselves; you might try to learn to do the same.

Dear Editor:
I found Mr. McCormick's article on "women's lib" objectionable because it was inaccurate, silly and insulting. I am not amused.

Congratulations To Sig Heller

To the Editor:

It has been a couple of weeks since the SA presidential election. But this is the first opportunity to extend publicly my congratulations to Sig Heller on his election. Hopefully, Sig will be able to be a strong leader with the backing of this university community.

Also, a note of thanks to those who made my write-in campaign a most enjoyable and educational venture. I met many students, and we came to a similar conclusion: We are interested in our livelihood here at the University of Vermont.

The Student Senate can work with representatives who are willing to work.

Thank You, UVM Rescue

To the Editor:

UVM complains about inadequate health care services. One step is taken and a rescue squad is introduced. UVM complains about the rescue squad. UVM is a campus of chronic complainers.

I can only thank the people called "pompous, conceited" clothed in "show-off uniforms" for the knowledgeable care they showed me last December.

P.S. UVM needs a swift kick.

The Best In

by Margo Howland
Back about three years ago, or thereabouts, Anthony Shaffer set about writing his first mystery play. Into the magic skillet that every proper playwright uses (known as a typewriter) he tossed in a touch of Edgar Allan Poe, a bit of Agatha Christie, a hint of Ellery Queen, a few measures of Shirley Jackson, a flavor of Hitchcock's Psycho, a double dose of wonderful British wit, a simmering of Simenon, a dash or so of Du Maurier, and a large portion of raw, unadulterated imagination.

The resulting concoction is a thriller-chiller of enormous magnitude. It opened at London's West End February 12, 1970 and on Broadway November 12, 1970 and won the Tony Award in 1971 for the best play of the 1970-1971 season in New York. It delighted the Lane Series audience Tuesday evening in Memorial Auditorium.

The play, of course, is the British smash hit Sluth. Edward Albee, eat your heart out!

Besides the Tony Award, Sluth was chosen by the Mystery Writers of America to receive a special Edgar Award. The noted author Stanley Richards picked Sluth as one of the ten all-time best plays of its type for inclusion in his collection of "Best Mystery and Suspense Plays of the Modern Theatre" spanning 45 years. Also included in the anthology are Dracula, The Letter, Dangerous Corner, Arsenic and Old Lace, Witness for the Prosecution, Bad Seed, Dial M for Murder, Angel Street, and Child's Play.

The author, Anthony Shaffer, has written the film script for Black Comedy and Alfred Hitchcock's Frenzy.

The actors were superlative. George Rose and Dan Haviland—co-star and Andy Wyke, the writer, and M. Tindle, the British-Italian playboy, respectively. Herbie Bolt is Inspector Doppler, a man from Scotland Yard with a Liverpool accent and a mentalist of Inspector Lestrade. Frank Sturtevant, veteran from Pygmalion, Gu, and The Right Honourable Gentleman, was well-cast Detective Sergeant Tarr and Martin K. Paglia, appearing on NET next spring, made his acting debut in Sluth as Police Constable Higgins.

The stage of Memorial Auditorium was, for two one-half hours, transformed into the country estate novelist Andrew Wyke, where his story takes place. Some

Loggins And Messina Close To Perfection; Procol Harum Is Found Alive And Well

by Doug Collette

When Jim Messina left Poco to concentrate entirely on producing other artists, the very first one sent to him was, coincidentally enough, Ken Loggins. As the two began to work together, each became very excited about their collaborations, as did Al Garth, who, after hearing Loggins and Messina's joint efforts, turned up at one of their sessions with horn charts and horn man Jon Clarke. Merel Bregante and Larry Sims were recruited with no little effort as a rhythm section and the band was complete (Loggins' long-time partner Michael Omatian does contribute to their recorded work, but refuses to tour).

It's astonishing to hear this band merge the stylistic forces of pop, country, jazz and rock & roll into a coherent sound instantly identifiable as that of Loggins and Messina. Their synthesis of these diverse elements and their ability to combine them in such a way as to have the characteristics of each idiom enhance, rather than grate against the other puts the Loggins/Messina group on par with the Beatles and the Byrds.

Loggins and Messina is no radical departure from Sittin' In, there's a tighter group sound, no doubt the result of a year on the road as a performing band, but that's merely an inevitable refinement. The concept of the first LP, according to Messina, was to treat each song individually to its best effect and as close to perfection as is possible through words, music, impeccable sound recording and perceptive production.

But even though their excellence is obvious on record, the Loggins and Messina band has no better showcase than live performance. The delicious blend of voices commands an even greater presence and the band's musicianship rivals that of the Allmans, making the concert that I saw one of the most thoroughly enjoyable rock & roll shows I've ever seen.

WHO DO WE THINK WE ARE? Deep Purple. Warner Bros. BS 2676

Deep Purple might sound like Free if they had some taste and were willing to be a bit more enterprising. Purple are one of the few power bands that haven't succumbed to outrageously grotesque displays of instrumental prowess and/or equally bizarre theatrics. However, that may be a hint to part of their problem: the excessive ego displayed by this five-man unit, as documented on the inside cover, probably accounts for their failure to challenge their musical, social and technical capabilities. Deep Purple seem to think they're too great that they don't have to try too hard.

Well, they're wrong. There aren't many half-way decent bands that couldn't master this simplistic style. Deep Purple have certainly mastered it, but their refusal to use their imaginative, potential condemns their music to being, in nearly equal parts, barely above competent or boring to tears, with flashes of true brilliance; few and far in between. Indeed, who do they think they are???

HEART BREAKER

Free

Island SW-9324

Something of a mystery here: although Paul Kosoff plays guitar on five of the nine cuts on Heartbreaker, he's not listed as a member of the band. Apparently, the new Free is comprised of the original drummer Simon Kirke, crack English sessionman Rabbit Bundrick, one of Japan's top bassists Tetsu Yamauchi and Paul Rodgers, who, in virtually taking command of the group, lead vocals, guitar and most of the composing — may have forced out Kosoff and Andy Fraser, the other missing ex-Freeman.

GRAND HOTEL

Procol Harum

Chrysalis 1037

Procol Harum is alive and well. This may come as a surprise, considering that this is their first studio LP since "Broken Barricades" (March 1971). Is it possible that songwriter, Keith Reid, once prolific, has exhausted his thoughts? Maybe it's their numerous changes in personnel that has caused them to release their first album in order to just fill the gaps. (their most recent change being the loss of guitarist Dave Ball who split in order to form his own group with Chris Drummer). Which ever the case may be, Procol Harum has bounced back with a fine album.

Grand Hotel is a very precise album. Reid's lyrics for once are clear and unpretentious. But then, it's really the music which sets the mood (which is, for PH, especially imperative) and Gary Brooker comes through (with only a few exceptions). Gary Brooker's piano is the real standout of this album. Brooker always seems to be leading the way. B.J. Wilson comes through on drums (great splits) and Chris Copping has finally developed into a fine organist. The album begins with the title cut which is by far the best cut on the album. Brooker turns into a contemporary Johann Strauss, creating a rock-waltz with a ballroom type atmosphere. The mood — progressions — are amazing. "Toujours L'amour" follows with Brooker again leading the way. Although the music is good, it is not matched well with the lyrics (similar to their song "Still they'll be more" where (continued on page seven)

Lane Chamber Arts Series:

Prize-Winning French Musicians To Play Bach Jazz

The music of Johann Sebastian Bach will be performed by the Jacques Loussier Trio on Friday, April 6, at 8:30 p.m. in the Allen Chapel, as part of the Lane Chamber Arts Series.

Entitled "Play Bach," the concert will feature three world-famous musicians from France in the contemporary interpretation of Bach's compositions. The artists are Jacques Loussier at piano, Christian Garros on drums, and Pierre Michelot on bass. Tickets, $3 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, apt at the door. For reservations, telephone 656-3418.

Included on the program will be improvisations on various themes from the preludes, fugues, partitas, toccatas, etc., by J. S. Bach.

The Trio will also perform one original composition by Mr. Loussier, who is responsible for the arrangements of all the numbers.

Pierre Michelot is incontestably the outstanding European bassist. He has been selected — as the leading exponent of his instrument by the readers of "Jazz Hot" since 1952. The Jazz Academy of Paris officially recognized him as such by awarding him the Django Reinhardt Prize in 1962.

Christian Garros, drummer, began his musical career in the Quintette of the Hot Club de France with Django Reinhardt. He played for the "Birdland" tour with Miles Davis and Lester Young, and then joined the Duke Ellington orchestra in Paris for the stage show "Turcaret." For the last several years he has been ranked first as a jazz drummer by the readers of "Jazz Hot."

Winner of the coveted "Grand Prix du Disque," with well over two million albums sold in Europe, "Play Bach" also features nine releases on London Records.

The Loussier Trio makes "Play Bach" an expert blend of classical music and their own strong contemporary improvisation. Mixed with the theatricalism of their concentration as artists and the presentation of the highs and lows of Bach's moods, it Bach.

becomes an exciting musical experience.

Jacques Loussier, born in Angers in 1934, studied at the Paris Conservatory of Music and ranked first out of 500 candidates. In 1959 he became intrigued with the idea of playing Bach "in his own way." He chose two renowned French jazzmen, drummer Christian Garros and bassist Pierre Michelot as partners, and "Play Bach" was launched.

Loussier's original interpretations gave a new dimension to the music of Bach and brought the Trio instantaneous acclaim both in France and abroad.

Now on its fifth North American tour, which will make over 30 appearances in the major universities, "Play Bach" has performed at every European festival, including the Edinburgh and the prestigious Bath Festival of Playwright Combines Best Of The Best In Mystery Thriller 'Sleuth'

by Margo Howland

Back about three years ago, or thereabouts, Anthony Shaffer set about writing his first mystery play. Into the magic skillet that every proper playwright uses (known as a typewriter) he tossed in a touch of Edgar Allan Poe, a bit of Agatha Christie, a hint of literary Queen, a few measures of Shirley Jackson, a flavor of Hitchcock's Psycho, a double dose of wonderful British wit, a simmering of Simeon, a dram or so of Du Maurier, and a large portion of raw, unadulterated imagination.

The resulting concoction is a thriller-chiller of enormous magnitude. It opened at London's West End February 12, 1970 and on Broadway November 12, 1970 and won the Tony Award in 1971 for the best play of the 1970-1971 season in New York. It delighted the Lane Series audience Tuesday evening in Memorial Auditorium.

The author, Anthony Shaffer, has written the film script for Black Comedy and Alfred Hitchcock's Frenzy.

The actors were superlative. George Rose and David Haviland co-star as Andrew Wyke, the writer, and Milo Tindle, the British-Italian playboy, respectively. Herbert Bott is Inspector Doppler, our man from Scotland Yard with a Liverpool accent and the mentality of Inspector Lestrade; Frank Sturtevant, a veteran from Pygmalion, Gigi, and The Right Honourable Gentleman, was well-cast as Detective Sergeant Tarrant, and Martin K. Pagliaro, appearing on NET next spring, made his acting debut in Sleuth as Police Constable Higgs.

The stage of Memorial Auditorium was, for two and one-half hours, transformed into the country estate of novelist Andrew Wyke, where our story takes place. Someone

(as a matter of fact, it's Milo) wants to marry Wyke's wife. Not that Andrew should mind, for he's got a girlfriend on the side, and therefore it seems logical that something might be worked out. And that's all this reviewer is going to tell you! If it wasn't for the undeniable fact that the nature of the play demands total secrecy, I could go on about the psychological ramifications all day!

This is one play that reduces the audience to helpless laughter, then belts them with a punch, the impact of which is like nothing seen on the stage.

In recent years. Quite simply, Sleuth is the best mystery-thriller to come down the pike in a long time, and it is the best professional play this reviewer has come across.

If you missed the play Tuesday night, there's a rumour going the rounds that Sleuth will appear in downtown Burlington in movie form.

So, if you did see the play, you will be well-advised to suggest to your friends that they see the movie. And keep the plot a deep, dark secret!

Catalina Club To Present Synchronized Swim Show

The UVM Catalina Club will present its Annual Synchronized Swim Show at the Fairbank Pond April 12, 13, 14 at 8:00 p.m. with a 2:00 matinee on April 14. The name of this year's show will be "Seascope." Admission is free for UVM students, $1.00 for adults, and $1.50 for children. Tickets will be sold at the Fairbank gym lobby and at the office at Southwick. This year's show will feature twelve routines with a cast of twenty-eight seniors, one junior, eight sophomores, and three freshmen will perform. Mrs. Holly Szabo, advisor of the club, is the coordinator of the show, and all of the routines are prepared and directed by the members themselves. The theme, "Seascope," will be portrayed by such routines as "The Notorious Gnomes of Neptune," "Sea Pearls," and "Blackboard's Revenge." Earlier this month, the club travelled to UNH where the Eastern Intercollegiate Synchronized Swim Conference routine competition was held. Nine routines were taken and all of them placed within the top five of each category. The team did very well as a whole and captured second place behind SUNY-Albany. These same routines will be performed at the show, but with special lighting, props, make-up and costumes.

An important announcement to every student in the health professions:

NEW SCHOLARSHIPS ARE AVAILABLE IMMEDIATELY. THEY COVER TUITION AND RELATED COSTS AND PROVIDE AN ANNUAL INCOME OF $5,300 AS WELL.

If a steady salary of $400 a month and paid-up tuition will help you continue your professional training, the scholarships just made possible by the Uniformed Services Health Professions Revitalization Act of 1972 deserve your close attention. Because if you are now in a medical, osteopathic, dental, veterinary, podiatric, or optometry school, or are working toward a PhD in Clinical Psychology, you may qualify. We make it easy for you to complete your studies. You're commissioned as an officer as soon as you enter the program, but remain in student status until graduation. And, during each year you will be on active duty (with extra pay) for 45 days. Naturally, if your academic schedule requires that you remain on campus, you stay on campus—and still receive your active duty pay. Active duty requirements are fair. Basically, you serve one year as a commissioned officer for each year you've participated in the program, with a two year minimum. You may apply for a scholarship with either the Army, Navy or Air Force, and know that upon entering active duty you'll have rank and duties in keeping with your professional training. The life's work you've chosen for yourself requires long, hard, expensive training. Now we are in a position to give you some help. Eckerson Pro Prospect

Steve Eckerson (Clinton, N.Y.) has proven that he was one of the best goalies in the country this past season, despite the fact the Eastern College Division Coaches did not select him to the All-American squad. Last week, in an unprecedented move, The Richmond Robins, the Philadelphia Flyer's top farm club, invited Eckerson to join the Robins for five games while UVM was on vacation. Eckerson had the best goals-against-average in the East this past year (2.57 G.A.A.), while setting Vermont records for most shutouts in one season (5), best overall goals against average (2.57), best G.A.A. in Division II (1.74), most saves in one season (654) and career goals against average (2.48).

Lisowski To Play For Cats

Peter Salzberg, head basketball coach, recently announced that John Lisowski, an All-Conference performer at Central Catholic in Pittsburgh, Pa., has signed a letter of intent to attend UVM this fall. Lisowski averaged 20.4 points a game this past season as his Central club went 14-5. Lisowski, 6-1, will join 6-7 Charles Trapani of Oakland, N.J. and 6-6 Ron Gottschalk of Freeport, N.Y., in this fall's freshman class at UVM.

U.V.M. SPORTS

Freestyle ace, Dave Phelan (Morristown, N.J.) and Butterfly performer, Cliff Johnson (Hamden, Conn.) were elected co-captains of the 1973-74 UVM swim team at the recent breakup dinner. Johnson and Phelan will succeed outgoing captain Bruce Willard (Leominster, Mass.) who was named the top UVM swimmer this past year.

UVM To Host Tennis Invitational

Vermont again will host a four-team invitational, April 6-7, to kick off the tennis season, with Albany St., St. Lawrence, and RPI joining Vermont in the event. Six flights of singles and three flights of doubles will make up the tournament. The first round of singles and consolation singles will begin at 6 p.m. Friday (April 6), while the singles and doubles championships are scheduled for 1 and 3 p.m. Saturday (April 7), respectively. The first round of doubles begins at 9 a.m. on Saturday. Following the Vermont tennis schedule is as follows:

April 6-7 - VERMONT INVITATIONAL (St. Lawrence, RPI, Albany St. and Vermont) April 6 - 6 p.m. 7 - 9 a.m.
 11 - MIDDLEBURY at 2 p.m.
 14 - at St. Lawrence at 2 p.m.
 16 - MASSACHUSETTS at 2 p.m.
 20 - NEW HAMPSHIRE at 2 p.m.
 23 - at Middlebury at 3 p.m.
 25 - PLATTSBURGH at 2 p.m.
 27-28 - at Yankee Conference Championships Storrs, Conn.
 30 - at St. Michael's at 2 p.m.
 May 11-12 - at New England, Williamstown, Mass. at 9 a.m.

Cross Honored

Head coach, Jim Cross, received two post-season awards, as he was named the College Division Coach of the Year in the East and was selected to receive the Harry "Zeke" Cleverly Award, presented to a Boston University alumnus who has been outstanding in the coaching ranks. Cross will receive the Cleverly Award at the annual Boston University Athletic Hall of Fame Dinner, April 13, in Boston. "This award is the one that means a lot to me. I played for Harry (Cleverly) and just thought so much of him. I'm really honored," said Cross who led his Catamounts to an undefeated-untied Division II season, the first Division II team ever to achieve this. Vermont ended the year with a 25-6-0 overall mark and 19-0-0 in Division II.

Summer Jobs Are Hard To Find This Year

Salaries can vary depending upon the job and the applicant's qualifications. Camps employ personnel in many capacities - not just as counselors. Some of the positions available to a student are: business manager, photographer, instructor in drama, sailing instructor or food supervisor.

Camps often specialize in their offerings. Physical Therapy majors might be interested in a Cerebral Palsy camp - Religion majors might be interested in one of the many religious camps. There are innumerable types of camps with diversified interests.

Many summer camp jobs are listed in the placement office in announcements. An abundance of camps are listed by state in the Summer Employment Directory, which the Office possesses. Deadlines for camp jobs are approaching.

Resorts employ many students in a variety of capacities. Resorts encompass everything from amusement parks to resort hotels and include such categories as dude ranches and summer stock theatres. Amusement parks employ ride operators, parking lot attendants and ticket sellers; ranches employ kitchen help, maids, cooks, children's counselors, and sometimes receptionists and other specialized jobs. Theaters and resort hotels require actors, maids, bartenders and drink clerks. Almost all resort hotels need maintenance men - gardeners, sanitation workers, and some employ chauffeurs, lifeguards and tennis marshals.

Salaries for resorts usually include room and board for the summer, so they may be lower than other jobs. For addresses and further information on resorts, the Summer Employment Directory has some names and addresses. New York State also puts out a comprehensive booklet, Vacationland, which includes every resort in the state. These publications are available in the Placement Office, located at 224 Waterman Building. For other states, the student can write to the Chamber of Commerce of the city in which he is interested. Specialized fields and interests. The placement office has announcements from specialized fields and interests. The placement office has announcements from specialized fields and interests. on a ferry and an agricultural student to rejuvenate an apple farm. Other such specialized jobs may be found through ads in the city's newspapers or in the Yellow Pages of the city in which the applicant wants to work.

More specialized jobs might be of interest to those students seeking to build a resume around their summer employment. They might just be a means of spending an interesting summer, too - of trying something different. A special education major who worked in a camp for retarded children would have a good foundation for his resume.

Overseas opportunities, although not usually lucrative, offer to the abundance of students interested in working for the new knowledge/travel aspects of a summer job. In general, working papers and jobs are easiest to obtain in English-speaking countries and in countries with which the U.S. has the best trade relations. Australia has many job openings, but is also one of the most expensive countries to reach. Germany has a strong demand for foreign labor. It has, however, some requirements on how the job is obtained. Most countries require a prearranged job and there are visa requirements and usually either residency or work permits involved. Jobs overseas are not usually glamorous as many countries have restrictions about the types of jobs foreigners can hold. The hours are usually longer than in the U.S. Jobs Overseas, however, do provide opportunities for travel and education.

In an effort to obtain a job, many students are attracted to agencies which claim to be able to cut through red tape and which promise the student a job. Mr. Simmons of Career Planning and Placement is especially concerned that students be wary of these agencies and added, "Be cautious of who you send your application fee to. Some are fly-by-night agencies and are being prosecuted right now." He said that overseas agencies are causing the most trouble in this respect and that most domestic agencies are bona fide.

The library has a copy of the Directory of American Firms Overseas which may be of help to students seeking overseas employment, and there are announcements in the Placement Office of programs such as summer work in kibbutzes.

Delegates To Conference

Three University of Vermont faculty members and two students will attend the U.S. Office of Education Drug Education Conference on Teacher Pre-Service Training, April 11 through April 14 in St. Louis.

Dr. Russell Agne, Mrs. Dorothy Slack, Jane Greenberg, Pamela Stone and William Cook will represent the University.

Institutions involved in teacher education across the country will send teams of four to five individuals to participate in the conference.

The basic goals of the conference are, first, to clarify how institutions involved in teacher education can enhance the general competence of the teachers they are training, to better relate to drug and other social problems in school communities.

over-repetitive, plodding rockers of his predecessor through an interplay of Rodgers guitar and Rabbit's keyboards. The subtle addition of piano and organ induces shifts of color and tone that give this Free music added depth and delicacy. Best of all, though they've rid themselves of the basic drawback of this sub-genre of rock and roll, Free is still heavy in the best sense of the word.

DOUG SAHM AND BAND Atlantic SD 7254

This LP could well be subtitled 'An anthology of the root music of rock and roll.' Sir Doug, a cult figure himself by way of numerous exceptional albums (most of which languish in bargain bins) got together with some pals who are as seasoned as he and they're all in tune with each other as could be. They must have had fun writing, playing and singing together because the product of their good time is a record as spontaneous as it is authentic.

DON McLEAN United Artists UAS-5651

Anyone who writes a song lamenting "the day the music died" certainly can't be listening to much rock and roll these days. In Don McLean's case that doesn't come as much of a surprise, since he probably spends most of his time figuring out how many self-consciously poetic lyrics he can overload his passable but not-too-memorable melodies with.

This album is, like most of what I've heard by McLean, successful on two levels. He's an expert at circumlocution eschewing simple, suggestive imagery almost completely. For instance, McLean will pronounce: "I could never be part of the cocktail generation" while Keith Richard will yell "Never gotta by Arnold Warner M.D.

QUESTION: I'm a 19 year old man. I have no problem with acne except two or three days after a sexual encounter when my face and especially my back, breaks out. Can you explain this?

ANSWER: No.

QUESTION: Is sexual vigor a function of regular sexual practice? I have not indulged in any kind of sexual act the last couple of years and fear that my sexual potency is decreasing. This of course is a feeling based on an overall decreased frequency of erection and in the intensity of regular sexual desire. I am 30.

ANSWER: Alas and alack, there is some evidence that decreased sexual activity over a long period of time results in decreased sexual interest. On the other hand, brace yourself, it is rather normal to experience some decrease in the frequency of spontaneous erections and intensity of sexual desire after the age of 30 in men. It's been my experience that people do not generally complain about a lack of sexual desire but rather complain about sexual desire that remains unfulfilled. There is nothing magical about a high level of sexual desire. If it doesn't bother you, I wouldn't worry about it.

QUESTION: Can a woman become pregnant if she has intercourse only during her period and at no other time? My girlfriend is using this as her only method of birth control. Her boyfriend insists she cannot get pregnant and I say that it is possible. If he sees it in print, maybe he will believe me.

ANSWER: I guess its time for my biennial missive on the subject. In case you've wondered, pregnancy occurs when intercourse takes place close enough to ovulation so that a sperm and an egg are in the same place about the same time. In the usual 28 day ovulatory cycle, menstruation (popularly called the period) is a very safe time to have intercourse. But, cycles vary in length, even for the same woman. Thus, when a woman's menstrual cycle is very short, i.e. under 21 days, she could be finishing her period at the same time she is ovulating. This may be the last time she will ovulate for a long time, if she happens to have intercourse at this juncture.

Your very trusting girlfriend and her slightly clever boyfriend seem too willing to engage in a potentially dangerous situation and also limit their sexual contacts to a very few number of days in a month. Instead of their current approach they might consider using real, genuine, birth control. Physicians, some campus health centers and off campus clinics often provide excellent services in this area. If your friends do not want to avail themselves of professional services, there are still two other alternatives. They can take themselves to a nearby drug store and buy condoms and contraceptive foam or they can engage in mutual petting to climax which is free of hazards and requires no special equipment. An excellent $2.95 general book on contraception is: "A Textbook of Contraceptive Practice" by Peiland Potts Cambridge Univ. Press, 1969.

QUESTION: I have smelly feet and its wrecking my sex life. At first I thought the problem was my boots. I have tried all sorts of commercial foot and shoe sprays and have even used such things as lysol and baking soda. I bathe daily, but the smell continues. What can I do? I have checked my toes and toe nails and there doesn't seem to be any fungus or infection.

ANSWER: Foot odor is caused by bacterial action on perspiration. Anything which enhances perspiration and keeps the feet moist tends to increase foot odor. Some people, however, do have particularly odoriferous feet. This can occur in spite of normal cleanliness and other measures, as you have indicated. These people should be especially cautious not to wear vinyl boots and shoes and would probably be better off with shoes that have leather soles as well. In addition, many socks made of synthetics tend to retain moisture more than cotton or wool and this only makes the problem worse.

The following simple suggestions usually help reduce the problem, even if they do not eliminate it completely. Feet should be carefully washed and, most importantly, be thoroughly dried before you put them in your shoes. The excessive use of powders is not recommended since they tend to take up and trap odors. What might be helpful is the application of an underarm spray deodorant to your feet. This should decrease the amount of sweating that takes place and one reader told me it has worked wonders for him. If you do try this, make sure that you do not develop irritations from the antiperspirant. In warm or hot weather, you might find it to your advantage to wear sandals since the more ventilation, the better.

Last year, in New York City alone, 7 nursing nuns made 6,322 patients' visits. Not in hospitals, but in the patients' own homes. Fantastic? Not at all.

Not for the Dominican Sisters of the Sick Poor. Ever since they were founded in 1876, the Sisters have been doing the impossible daily.

Long before there were relief agencies or visiting nurses, the Dominican Sisters were dedicated to nursing the poor in their own homes thus keeping the families together.

Today, the Dominican Sisters of the Sick Poor are still on the job. Although their primary work is still in nursing, it has been expanded to include social work, physiotherapy, dietetics, and almost all health related professions. Each woman has her own skill, her own special ability to offer. In this Order, which is small in size, there is both freedom and flexibility.

Yet the Sisters are not merely visiting nurses but religious nurses who drink of their patients' sorrows as their own, and suffering members of the Mystical Body of Christ who need, even beyond material and physical help, the healing union of Christ's love.

John" is next in line and the lyrics here create eeriness (similar to "Dead Man's Dream" off their HOME album). "Fires which Burn, Brightly" follows. Reid illustrated to us the absurdity of war and Brooker and Copping bring it to an orgasmic climax. It fades out with some oo-la-lai-ing by the Swingle Singers led by Christianne Legrand. The album closes with "Robert's Box", a guy trying to bribe a doctor for all he needs is "just a pinch to ease the pain". Fine song except - for the monotonous "Doctor, Doctor" chorus which ends the album on a sour note.

All in all, the album is pretty decent. It's the type of album that grows on you.

Pigs In Our Den Do Not Make Piggies

During this semester, one issue has met with increasing controversy on the editorial page of The Clinic. We have hesitated to take a stand on the subject due to the strong emotions felt and voiced by both sides. Now, however, the time has come to state, once and for all, our opinion on the issue of allowing pigs in the Den.

Those of us at the Vermilion Clinic, who work near the Den, have certainly been recipients of the pigs' distinctive odor. We have also, like other UVM students, had our food snatched, out of our mouths unintentionally by these animals.

The UVM pigs, however, deserve a place in the Den, as much as anyone else. They are harmless, gentle fellows, who are in their own Swine have been the victims of society for too long. From "The Three Little Pigs" all the way down to Porky, pigs have been portrayed unfairly by gross, overexaggerated stereotypes. The image of the porker must change and the first place should be in human eyes. We must open our hearts and our Deeds to these animals. As a further protest against the banning of pigs, the Clinic urges you to support the present strike on bacon and ham. Pigs deserve a place on our campus, not in our stomachs!

Academic Affairs Committee Passes Resolution To Open General Meetings

by Deborah Cadwell

The Faculty Senate's Academic Affairs Committee passed a resolution at Monday's meeting to open their doors to all interested parties. The Committee reserves the right, however, to hold executive sessions when sensitive issues are being considered or when a situation is deemed an emergency.

Agenda, time and place of future meetings will be announced five days in advance.

The question of student participation and the right of students to vote in these meetings will be discussed at next week's meeting, in continuation of the arguments presented on Monday, April 9.

James Sloman, Chairperson of the Student Association, spoke for the inclusion of student representatives on the Academic Affairs Committee and for the right of these students to vote. He also expressed concern for a long-term involvement in the University on the part of the students.

"We are a transient part of the population," he said. "You are more stable in the University than we. The voting gives us something to hang on to; something that doesn't have to be carved out from year to year."

The Chairperson of the Academic Affairs Committee, Dr. Leonidas Jones, Professor of English, spoke out against the proposal made by Sloman. He stated that he did not feel students had the right to vote, and added, "I do not think that this committee should be expanded to include any students."

"If the university goes to place the public is not going to blame the students. It will blame the faculty, and properly so," he added.

Jones went on even further to say, "What is to be taught here is for the faculty to determine, not the students. The faculty are expert in this field." However, Dr. Jones did not suggest complete exclusion of students from the decision-making process in this area. He mentioned later that "The students should be consulted at every level. But he concluded, 'In the last analysis I think it should be a faculty decision, not a student one.'"

Dr. Neil Stout, a representative from the Arts and Sciences College, was in agreement with the proposal to allow students membership on the committee, as well as the right to vote. He stated, "I think that student voting might very well indicate that students are also accepting responsibility for their fate."

He also mentioned that he thought the number of members of a committee should be limited to nine.

Johann Troost, in speaking of the differentiation found in learning, academics, education, and scholasticism, asked, "What is the common ground in education?" He went on to ask, "How can we talk about responsibility when we don't give it to people to make decisions about their own basic lives? I think you have to look beyond just an academic committee and see what the implications of a decision like this have on human beings, in the community and in society."

He added, "Tradition has to be looked at in its larger aspects in terms of the growth and in terms of the many aspects of society. If tradition is inflexible and doesn't grow, then I think it is perpetuating a death state."

Susan Taylor, another S.A. senator in attendance, expressed her concern with the right to vote issue and introduced the idea of compromise if necessary to achieve that end. "I think I would even push stronger for having the right to vote than having six members of the student body who don't have any vote at all."

John Franco, an S.A. town senator, summed up the feelings of those in favor of student participation of the Academic Affairs Committee when he commented, "I think that when people make

Committee Against The War Wages Week Long Protest

The Committee Against the War has begun a week of anti-war activities on the steps of Billings Center in protest of continued military activity in Southeast Asia.

Their activities include a petition, which will be forwarded to the Vermont delegation in Washington, a fund-raising effort to raise money for the BACH-MAI Hospital in Hanoi, North Vietnam, and sleeping out sessions in tents on the lawn in front of Billings.

Posters spread in the area of the anti-war table carry slogans such as, "Contrary to public opinion the war is not over," and "End all support for

In addition to the petition, which read: "We the undersigned residents of the state of Vermont, strongly urge Senator Aiken, Senator Stafford, and Representative Mallory, as our elected Congressmen, to adopt or support legislation endorsing unconditional amnesty for all Americans who have either deserted the armed services or evaded the military draft." The Committee is distributing information concerning the BACH-MAI Emergency Relief Fund.

A committee member at the table said he expected the activities to "last about a week." When asked if they had cleared the activities with UVM

Security, he said he did not know. A check with Security Chief Frederick Barrett revealed that Willie Pearson of the Committee had gone through proper administrative channels in requisitioning space for both the table and tents, which are expected to house six to ten people during the evening vigil.

Mr. Barrett said he foresaw no trouble with the protest beyond anti-protest sentiment in the local community, and he anticipated no action by the security force; "not unless something gets out of hand."

Director of Student Activities Karen Wedge called the protest a "registered University function."

Two Candidates Compete In IRA Presidential Race

by Margo Howard

The Cynic interviewed the two candidates for IRA President, Mary Ashcroft, a sophomore from Mills, and Stephen Guy, a freshman from Hamilton. Mary Ashcroft, presently IRA Corresponding Secretary, is a former representative. She is also the newly-elected Town Grand Juror from Rockingham Vermont. Stephen Guy is presently the IRA representative from Hamilton, and a Civil Engineering major. He is from Lyndonville, Vermont.

The President shall serve as the chief executive officer of IRA, and shall call and preside over meetings of the Executive Board and Council. He/She shall also serve as an official representative of IRA to the University community and shall be an ex-officio member of all IRA committees. He/She is responsible for making appointments and reporting on the state of the IRA.

Cynic: Why are you running for IRA president? Ashcroft: I think I'm qualified for the job and I can do a good job to help the organization. Last year I was elected Corresponding Secretary of IRA, and before that I was a representative for half a semester when the office became vacant. When I became Rockingham Grand Juror, I was the first one to want to be active in the job for the past three decades.

Guy: I would like to make the IRA more alive. It is a good organization now, but according to IRA's constitution it's supposed to have six Standing Committees, made up of any number of students other than the Council members. I want to see the whole organization more active, with more people taking part in IRA - not just the representatives and the Executive Board. These committees would be covering every complaint and suggestion that a student could have that IRA can handle. I want to make these committees alive.

Cynic: What do you see IRA's role on the campus to be? Ashcroft: It's for the little people - the ones that do not get a voice in the government from the SA because they are not involved in any specific programs. IRA has actually broad-based constituency. Guy: IRA should become more active as an intermediary between the body of students on the one hand and the residence halls on the other. It should be expanded to wider areas to give IRA better representation. I encourage other people's ideas.

Cynic: How, specifically, do you plan to have IRA work with SA? Ashcroft: We can complement each other. IRA was set up as a separate organization to take care of things that the SA couldn't. IRA is for the little folks on campus. They're important too! It is designed so that the students in the dorms would have a voice in the (student) government - sort of a "grass-roots" organization. Guy: IRA should work with SA involving students in both. We should take in a bigger part of UVM life - not just doing out money and dorm functions but to also have a role in University proceedings. The IRA and SA should work together for residence halls, with respect to dorm rules, food service, tuition and so forth. IRA could also act as an intermediary between the food service and the residence halls. That is the job of the vice president in charge of welfare, but the constitution has not been followed.

S.A. President Announces Appointments; Comments On Plans For Next Year

by Barbara Frankel

Sig Heller, newly elected president of the Student Association, recently announced his appointments of S.A. officers and commented on his plans for the upcoming year. Heller stressed the need for the Student Association to provide the services the students want and to further immerse the S.A. in student activities on campus.

Although there are still vacancies in the offices of Secretary of Elections and Secretary of Student Activities, Heller announced that Lynn Murdock, a sophomore and art major from Woodstock, N.Y., will be Secretary of Communications. He stated that she planned to increase publicity of S.A. activities through the use of attractive posters, notices, etc. Heller has selected Steve Desrosiers, a junior from Passumpsic, Vt., to fill the important post of Treasurer of the S.A. Heller stated that he felt the Treasurer should receive an honorarium, a motion which was defeated by the Senate this year. Heller also expressed his view that the Secretary of Elections should receive a salary from the S.A. Heller plans to ask some of his former opponents in the presidential race for their advice on Student Association matters. Commenting on his plans for next year, he stated, "I think we must provide the services needed for the students. If it just means plays, concerts, etc., then maybe that's what we should do for a while. The Senate has lost sight of student affairs." As part of his effort to get the S.A. involved in on-campus activities, Heller plans for future involvement in working towards improving the UVM grounds.

Heller agrees with the Senate's "right-to-know" motion which states that all interested persons have the right to attend meetings. He commented, "All meetings should be open because they are an important part of University life." He feels the discussion in the Senate will not be resolved until, "People not be resolved until, the concern themselves with the students and not their own personal gripe."

Heller plans an increased diversity of student activities, including more film festivals, concerts, etc. He suggested a fair in which all S.A. organizations would have a booth to display their activity. Commenting on the Senate's recent motion to dissolve the

S.A., Heller stated, "They're running away from the problem by not even suggesting an alternative. No one doubts that the S.A. didn't do a very good job this year, but they had no suggestions as to how to improve it. They aren't even giving me a chance."

Sig Heller, newly elected president of the Student Association.

up such a maze of complications for their arguments that even as a lawyer he is unable to see through to an expression of reasons which might justify such an increase. He expressed the opinion that the phone company deliberately complicates these issues so that even lawyers, much less average citizens, will be unable to tell what is going on. He said that the only justification for the increase he can see coming through their argument is that "their accounts show they aren't making enough money." But "in the last six or seven years they have made more than they expected."

Not only is the specific increase being proposed at issue in this case, said Silverman, but so is the procedure for granting increases. Public utilities like the phone company, are monopolies. While there may be a few different phone companies with different names operating in a region, they are all owned by the same corporation, American Telephone and Telegraph (A.T. & T.). The agency which is responsible for regulating public utilities (since as monopolies they are not regulated by laws of competition) is the Public Service Board, which is composed of three people who are appointed by the governor. In this case, the PSB has not approved the New England Telephone Company's rate increase. But according to existing laws, utilities can put their rate increases into effect before the PSB has approved them. If, as happened in this case, the PSB decides to conduct an investigation into the proposed increase, it can order that it not go into effect until the case is decided. But if the PSB cannot decide the case in six months, the proposed increases automatically go into effect, by law. This is what will happen April 15. VPIRG

S.A. Senate Plagued By Poor Attendance

by Dan Haslam

The Student Association meeting Tuesday evening was plagued with the absence of an operating body although some business was conducted in spite of the 29% attendance figure.

Most notable was the lack of town senators present, which did not establish a constitutional quorum but did not hamper new S.A. President Sig Heller from following the agenda.

Several important issues were up for Senate action, and some S.A. senators seized the opportunity to attempt political tactics of "railroading" issues through.

Substitute Dick Cassidy warned the assembly about acting without the presence of at least a legal quorum. Cassidy, a strict constitutionalist cautioned, "For you people to sit here and enact legislation is wrong."

Nonetheless, Edward Pasquella of Coldridge moved for reconsideration of the new S.A. constitution which was passed overwhelmingly last week. Calling the vote of a Senate action, Pasquella noted that the document was incomplete, pointing to the levying of the S.A. fee, which would expand under the new constitution to include graduate and medical students. No specific actions were taken, but the constitution is now up for reconsideration at a future date.

Finance Committee Chairman Tom Grant presented the opinion of his committee on the Student Association's repaying Prof. Richard Sugarman $150, for bond he posted last year for students incarcerated during an anti-draft protest at the Federal Building in Burlington. (continued on page nine)

Two VPIRG Attorneys Express Views On Proposed Telephone Rate Hikes

by Michael Cote

On April 13, Vermont VPIRG attorneys expressed their views on proposed telephone rate increases. The attorneys warned that the proposed rate increases would result in a 35% increase over present rates, unless a bill presently in the House Commerce Committee in Montpelier is passed before this date.

The bill would extend the six month period in which proposed rate increases cannot go into effect, pending decision by the Public Service Board (PSB) to a full year. Most attorneys for the New England Telephone Company, which is the only justification for the increase he can see coming through their argument is that "their accounts show they aren't making enough money." But "in the last six or seven years they have made more than they expected."

Not only is the specific increase being proposed at issue in this case, said Silverman, but so is the procedure for granting increases. Public utilities like the phone company, are monopolies. Service Board of this State for granted. VPIRG is rallying its case under the "burden of proof," a legal point which has been affirmed by numerous courts in the nation, saying that it is the responsibility of the Public utility to justify its rate increases, should it be called to do so. More pointedly, backed by a similar decision in California courts, VPIRG argues that profit rate increases by Western Electric cannot be considered in the justification of rate increases for the telephone company, unless justified by Western Electric.

In this same memorandum, VPIRG claims, "The Telephone Company does not have the right to invest millions of dollars in whatever it wants to and recover investments plus profit from the rate payers without justifying its expenditures to the public." Under the proposed rate increases in basic residential service will range from 33.9% to 39.6% and in the near future Burlington rate payers may experience increases as high as 48.5% when their area moves into a higher rate group.

Another issue being disputed by VPIRG is the non-discriminatory variance in the cost of serving different classes of customers. Nickerson has said that the Telephone Company has made it apparent that it can produce no figures relating to this and that "the company refuses to make the effort." To back this approach, it maintains that "a set of service allocation" is practicable and that this has been accomplished on Federal and state levels.

VPIRG is also concerned with an enterprise to determine if a medical program in Burlington's Urban Renewal area would be needed. Students are presently conducting an in-depth study of the health care provisions in the area. The study consists of questionnaires and taped

Felt Heads International Studies

The Center for Area and International Studies at the University of Vermont is now headed by Prof. Jeremy P. Felt, chairman of the history department.

He succeeded Prof. Latham A. D. DeLia, who completed his three-year term as chairman of the Faculty Committee and Director of the Center for Area and International Studies.

Dr. Felt was elected to succeed Dr. DeLia by the faculty membership of the program, and will coordinate programs in the areas of Asia, Canada, Latin America, Russia and Eastern Europe, and general studies in other areas.

As he accepted the position Dr. Felt indicated that he "hopes to increase direct student experience in some of the foreign areas by making it possible for more students to spend part of their college years in residence abroad."

He was recently elected to the Board of Directors of the Scandinavian Seminar a New York-based organization which sends American undergraduates to one of the four Scandinavian countries for a year's work and residence.

Dr. Felt joined the Vermont faculty in 1957 as an instructor, and was named a full professor in 1969 and department chairman the same year. He did his undergraduate work at Duke University.

received his Master's degree there, and the Ph.D. from Syracuse University.

Dr. DeLia, professor of economics and political science, and Director of the Center for Area and International Studies since 1969, joined the Vermont faculty in 1957 and was named a full professor in 1967.

He studied at the Universities of Sofia, Bulgaria and Vienna, and received his doctor's degree from the University of Genoa, Italy.

The Center for Area and International Studies offers interdisciplinary academic majors in specific regions, for example Canada.

In addition it coordinates through the UVM department of German and Russian, studies in Chinese, Japanese, and Serbo-Croatian language started by a grant from the National Council of Associations for International Studies.

"Sea Scope"

Looking for something to do this weekend? Don't forget the Synchronized Swim show, "Sea Scope", on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, 8:00 P.M. each night with a 2:00 matinee on Saturday, at Forbush Pool. Admission is free for UVM students.

UVM Horse Club To Tour Stables

The UVM Horse Club meeting will be held on Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Waterman Memorial Lounge. As well as a business meeting, there will be a tour of UVM's Spear Street stables.

In Memoriam

A Memorial Service for Florence Gregg, wife of Prof. Donald Gregg, will be held today, Thursday, at St. Asen's Chapel, Redstone Campus.

Foreign Study Deadline Nears

The deadline is approaching for applications to the 1973-74 group of the Vermont Overseas Study Program. The VOSP is open to sophomores, juniors and seniors who desire to spend a year studying at the University of Nice. Students of all majors may participate; a minimum of "intermediate" level proficiency in French is required.

The students now in Nice with the VOSP are taking a variety of courses ranging from French studies, art history, the social sciences, to education, including participation in French primary and secondary schools, and political science including a tour of European Common Market headquarters.

The 1973-74 group under the direction of Professor Maurice Kohler, will travel in early September from New York to La Havre on board the

S.S. France. A pre-orientation in French language, literature, civilization and "methodes de travail" at the Sorbonne in Paris will be followed by the trip to Nice and registration for courses there in October. The year's program ends in June upon the termination of the French school year. All courses are given in French by French professors.

Decisions are now being made on candidates whose dossiers are complete. Any students interested in the 1973-74 program to Paris and Nice should contact Professor Grant Crichfield or Mrs. Jo Anne Murad at the VOSP office, 513 Waterman, tel. 3196 or 3197.

A meeting of Alpha Zeta will be held Tuesday, April 17, at 7:00 p.m. in the Hills Building in Room 17. All members both new and old are urged to attend as it will be the last meeting of the year.

Urban Y Wants

by Cathy Wood

As you, spring is surely a time when young kids are out. Old kids are out on their bikes.

The kids at the Urban Y Center on North Street want to get together a fleet of bikes that they can use to ride to beach, to Red Rocks Park, to their vegetable garden, Shelburne Road.

Their plan is to collect a lot of old bikes, a few hundred there, and assemble the old parts into new bikes. The bikes will be painted.

Rummage Sale At Gamma Phi

A Rummage Sale will be held at Gamma Phi Beta, Main Street, Saturday April 14. The sale will be from 10 to 5 p.m. Any donations, clothes, books, and miscellaneous items will be appreciated. Call 864-4343.

UVM

At the regular meeting of UVM Rescue, in the lounge of Marsh Hall April 3rd, officers for coming year were elected. Those who will be filling the posts are: Director, Operations: Bob Kuech; Treasurer: N.Y.; Finance Officer: James Hanson; Reading Officer: Alan Wing of Fairmount, Mass.; Training Officer: Bob Balter; Stamford, Ct.; Equipment Officer: David Flood; Peabody, Mass.; Periodic Officer: Linda Krueger; Poplar Ridge, N.Y.

These officers will assume their duties immediately. Those formerly holding posts will stay on to assist transition.

Jack Schmidt was lauded.

his most recent experiments, which have found that it is possible to induce amoeboid movement in small fragments of Amoeba by the application of certain chemicals. This new experimental method should lead to an increased understanding of the basic nature of amoeboid movement.

On Tuesday at 8.15 p.m., his lecture will be entitled "Past, Present and Future of the Light Microscope." Dr. Allen has long been noted for the imaginative ways in which he uses the light microscope, cinematography and other accessory devices, in his research on amoeboid movement and related types of cell mobility.

Dr. Allen is an excellent speaker and his lectures are always very well illustrated.

S.A. May Get Its House In Order Yet

Throughout the past couple of years it has become increasingly apparent that the Student Association is less a creature of the student body than it was years ago. The impression may be real but not entirely true and some very positive gains have been made. Nonetheless, the S.A. Senate talked more and more about less and less. Its leadership, no matter how hard it tried, appeared very ineffective in guidance and inspiration. The Greeks became more apathetic and less prominent. Everybody and his brother were running off with items ranging from typewriters to concert tickets. Upstairs in Billings Center was becoming a haven for egotists, downstairs a haven for dogs. To put it another way, it appeared that the whole world was crashing down on what once was a very effective medium of exchange for the students of the University of Vermont. Perhaps those days are coming to an end.

We can all hope, perhaps even speculate, that the new President of the S.A. and those who assist him will be more effective in their endeavors than those who recently preceded them. That's for the future to tell but no matter what may come to pass, a few actions from the past year may help them on their way.

To begin with, for the first time in a good number of years the financial situation of the S.A. is shaping up. Whatever gains have been made and whatever programs have been started must be credited to the intelligence and tireless dedication of S.A. Treasurer Tom Grant and his staff. The major successes have been in two areas - the forced accountability of all S.A. funded organizations and an audit of those same organizations to facilitate the continuation of this accountability. Grant's leadership was badly needed and the Cynic for one, is grateful.

The other gains have mainly been in two areas - the reincarnation of some major weekends, and the fact that the Greeks and the Freaks are starting to talk to each other. With effective leadership in Fraternity Forum and the Panhellenic Council, Greek Week, Homecoming and Winter Carnival may someday resemble their past glory. And with the gains that have been made by a handful of S.A. leaders, some unity in the Senate and some genuine interest in the general student body may be realized very soon.

No matter how one looks at the situation, the future is brighter than the past. When all the dust has cleared it is to be recognized that the individual efforts of people like Grant, Sloman, Demas and Sisco have been prospective gains rather than total failures.

Statement By The Committee Against The War

The War Is Not Over!

by Gene Bergman

The war is not over! Cambodia is still being bombed by American B-52's. The Laotian Patriots continue to be decimated by the American air armada! Glib utterances of the Nixon administration to the contrary, peace is still not at ways for the utility to raise its rates even though it doesn't need the hike. Billions of dollars a year in order to maintain that dictatorship.

Thieu continues to hold hundreds of thousands of political prisoners in his prisons, and Nixon refuses to consider amnesty for those who have refused to take part in this criminally insane war! No the war certainly is not over and are separated cost-wise so that the maximum profit balance is reached, as the intervention into the affairs of the Indochinese people! The Anti-war movement must continue with the demand that has been raised by millions over the past year. U.S. OUT OF INDOCHINA NOW! End Support of Thieu! Stop the Bombing of Laos and Cambodia! No US Imposed Regime! Self Determination for all the Indochinese! Unconditional Amnesty for all Deserters and Draft Resisters!

Nixon has in recent weeks made statements that represent a serious threat to both the people of Indochina and the anti-war movement. He has consistently threatened the reintervention of American air power in Vietnam if the peace agreement does not go "his way". He has recently ordered American aircraft carriers back to the South China Sea to serve as a "stern warning" to the Vietnamese that they had better not try to knock the Thieu dictatorship lest they be subject to another one of his "Christmas presents". Top leaders in the Senate have warned over the past weekend that if present trends in Vietnam continue, American military involvement is a high probability. Under the present peace treaty, the United States has the "right" to supply Thieu with almost limitless amounts of arms and supplies, has the "right" to maintain 20-25 thousands "Civilian Advisors", and under this same treaty the Nixon administration has the "right", to reescalate the war, if it so desires; under the pretext of peace treaty violations.

The content and the circumstances around the peace Treaty has raised considerable confusion for many people. The Vietnamese agreed to the treaty, it is argued and are thus bound to it. It is what the Vietnamese "wanted", it represents a fair settlement, this allows the US to get out gracefully, it is peace with honor, etc. All these questions and objections need to be answered. Yes, the Vietnamese did agree to the treaty, and the anti-war movement fully supports their right to assess the objective situation and make any deals which they feel is necessary for their survival. What the anti-war movement has consistently opposed, however, is the imposition of any demands by the U.S. government on the Vietnamese. The Vietnamese agreed to the treaty, but only after the severe bombing in human history. The fact that they had to agree to anything that the U.S. demanded demonstrated that their right to national self determination has been violated. In other words, the Vietnamese were forced into major concessions; concessions won by Washington at the point of a gun. Turn the question around. If the Vietnamese were under no bombing, if they were not subject to the continued murderous assaults of the American war machine, would there be any doubt that the Vietnamese would demand anything less than complete and immediate withdrawal of all US forces and material from Indochina? This is what the Vietnamese have a right, as a sovereign nation, to expect, and this is what the anti-war movement must continually demand of the US government. Anything less not only constitutes implicit agreement with Nixon's extortionist schemes, but also seriously weakens the vigilance of anti-war forces here at home.

As the treaty arrangement now stands, Nixon has merely to say that the treaty has been violated, that the Vietnamese Liberation forces have not lived up to their part of the deal, and he can, by terms of the treaty, reintervene and reescalate the American military role there. The Pentagon Papers unequivocally stated that "South Vietnam was essentially a creation of the United States." The events of the past months, and Nixon's publicly expressed interpretations of the peace agreement demonstrate quite clearly that he intends to maintain this puppet dictatorship at any expense. We must continue to demand clearly and distinctly: U.S. OUT OF INDOCHINA NOW!

Because of the critical importance of the recent developments in Indochina, the Committee Against the War has sponsored a Peace Vigil this past week on the green in front of Billings Center. The purpose of this vigil has been to serve to educate the students of UVM and the people of Vermont about the situation in Indochina, and the importance they hold to us all. Members of the Committee Against the War hope that this will be a fruitful gesture that, not only serves to educate, but one which also serves to bring pressure to bear on the Nixon administration, to warn Nixon that the jig is up, that the people are on to his schemes, and that they will continue to stand up and demand that the people of Indochina be granted their right to determine their own destinies without the interference and machinations of the American government.

College Serves Useful Purpose

by Fred Doten

College, the place to be. A good place to spend part of your life. You party while the parents foot the bill. Study when there's no one else around to talk to, or nothing else to do. Any other reasons? Oh yes, it prepares you for the outside world.

You learn to drink, to hold booze, to get along with any other sane person in the real world. The art of chugging is learned to perfection, and self-control is lost in expert fashion. How can you make it through with all the troubles of this life? Well, do it like any other person in real life would: find a party, lots of people feeling the same as you, a glass of beer, and join in. Or get some hard liquor and a few saxes and go it with a few friends.

You learn to get on the other guy's nerves, too. You learn to know when the guy next door is reading a book, then you turn up the 200 watt stereo with Johnny Winter and "Jumpin' Jack Flash" blasting out, to give the guy some real culture. You learn to wait until Sunday night, when the floor has settled down to study, and then invite a roomful of loud talkers for a little kickoff party for the week.

You learn how to be concerned with your own activities. Aided by the isolated position that the university occupies culturally in Burlington, you can party and study in spite of the world outside. You learn to take missing the thrill of the summer recreation shows and country music singers at Memorial Auditorium in stride. No activities are necessary to link you to the rest of the community, thus preparing you for the way to do things in the real world. You learn how not to be concerned with other's doings, or even how the world goes in general.

Well, maybe not. But school still is the "in" place to be. Where else can you argue a policeman out of giving you a ticket?

Is Telephone Rate Raise Needed?

Telephone rates are proposed to rise by 38%. New England Telephone, owned by the giant corporate American Telephone and Telegraph, has filed with the Public Service Board, who regulates natural monopolies like telephone service, to raise its rates. Are they really needed?

Larry Silverman, environmental lawyer for VPIRG, claims that there are ways for the utility to raise its rates even though it doesn't need the hike. Western Electric, another subsidiary of AT&T and maker of telephone equipment, can raise its prices, since there is no control on them, and N.E. Telephone must have more money to make up for the more expensive equipment. Another dodge concerns the interstate-intrastate procedure; within state and out-of-state calls are separated cost-wise so that the maximum profit balance is reached, as the state cannot regulate out-of-state calls. The most important sidestep and one that can be changed, involves the period that the PSB has to deliberate the rate increase. After 6 months from the filing date, the telephone company can raise its rates automatically, making sure it can pay back to the consumer any excess it charges over what rate is finally decided on by the Public Service Board. Any case takes a lot of time, and too often it goes over the 6 month limit. What is needed is a longer waiting period, and this is provided by a bill now in the legislature, H-336.

What good is it to poorer people who can't afford the cost of the higher rate, who lose their phone, only to have the rate dropped back by the PSB? Suppose they depend upon the phone as a "life line." They get money back, but have no more phone. Why shouldn't the utility bear the burden of delay instead of consumers?

Think of the tab UVM will have to pay for phone service if the rate increase goes, and where that money will come from. Should we be paying for charities in the city, lawyers to organize rate increase cases for the Public Service Board, and lobbyists to stop bills in legislature with our telephone rates? Nearly everyone has a phone, or is affected by it, yet we are not in control of it. Support bill H-336, which also will stop the increase, and care about what is happening.

Letters To The Editor

Waterman Should Still

Remain Open For Dinner

To the Editor:
An Open Letter to Saga Food Service
UVM

This is in regard to Saga's decision to close Waterman dining hall next year.

Let me start out by saying that it is reasonable to understand why Waterman will not be open during the week-end meals because of the lack of on and off-campus students on main campus over weekends. This is where my understanding ends, however. How can you seriously expect to serve the students effectively (as you claim as one of your greatest virtues) by not having Waterman open for dinner next semester?

You may (and have, as I've noticed on the Waterman Dining Hall Beef Board) argued the point that only the residence halls of Chittenden, Buckham, Wilks and Conover will be open on the main campus, so there will not be enough students to justify keeping Waterman open.

However, may I point out that you have several off-campus students who purchase one of your meal plans, who will not take a favorable view of Waterman not being open for the evening meal. Perhaps business will drop off?

I tend to doubt that you have taken into consideration students who have late afternoon and evening classes. If a student has a 4:30 or 5:30 class, he is not going to be able to make dinner, or Saga's decision will make it very difficult to get to the Living-Learning Center and back to one's evening class.

Also, there are ways of activities such as Cynic, SA meetings, and playing basketball, etc.). People just aren't going to want to tromp over to the Living-Learning Center or whatever, to be able to eat. These people can eat at the Den, you say? Well, if I buy a meal ticket, I'd like to be able to use it!

Last, but not least, is the matter of longer lines. Even if the dining halls that you've planned to be open, are open longer hours, it will not relieve the crowded situation because people tend to eat at certain times like 5:15 or if Din-din time is 4:30, they probably aren't going to rearrange their schedule because of the DAMNED crowded conditions. Or possibly they will - but do you guys want to be cursed even more? Let me tell you that it won't make too awfully many people happy. Besides, think of the strain it will put on your workers, more than now, even!

Saga is basically a good food service (better than what I've heard), but I seriously think that you should reconsider your decision not to keep Waterman Dining Hall open. I'm sure it would please more people than you think, and would also be more practical than you might think.

Sincerely,
Joan M. Westcott

Common Misconceptions On Meat Boycott:
American Consumers Must Be Warned

To the Editor:

In the last couple of days I have been attempting to clear up some common misconceptions concerning the food industry that led to last week's meat boycott. I hope you will allow me to express my opinion because I honestly believe that the consumer has been cheated of the relevant facts. These misconceptions are as follows:

1. There is plenty of meat, including beef, in the United States;

2. "Someone is simply making a fast buck - either the store owners, the suppliers, or the farmers;

3. A decrease in the demand for meat will bring prices down without hurting anyone; and

4. Since the boycott was sanctioned by President Nixon, and he must understand the situation, then it is alright.

Let me explain in short something of what happened to cause the cost of meat to skyrocket. Not very long ago pay the high prices. The cost of Russia was in great need of raising a beef calf rose sharply. wheat and grains. She bought to prevent the farmer from these, through the United going into an equally severe debt, the cost of beef went up. States Government, from the But this is all history. Now let American crop growers at relatively low prices. Despite me explain a little bit of the warnings from within the present and future. With the White House, President Nixon, price of meat so high, in an attempt at good American consumer, found he can live without it. The farmer, as a result, is not breaking even and is being pushed out of existence. This may sound dramatic. If so, you have never shipped it to the ports. Any extremely high risk occupation today, having the longest hours, and the smallest, if any, American crop growers across the country suffered from a severe blight. The emergency surplus was gone. The money for fertilizers, insecticides, machinery, and labor had already been spent. The American crop grower was in debt in a big way. The only thing they could do in order to break even was to raise the cost of grain. It was the farmer who needed these grains and had to pay the high prices. The cost of Russia was in great need of raising a beef calf rose sharply. wheat and grains. thus reducing the food supply and increasing food prices;

4. In view of this administration's past policies, it is quite easy to see that President Nixon knows the score, and is ignoring it.

In fact, meat prices would have invariably risen as a result of our grain blight even if we hadn't sent wheat to Russia. But it would never have reached such an outlandish level. The government's present policy of releasing more land to crop growers is on the right track. But the American consumer must be warned against an instant solution to this problem. If we are lucky, meat prices may be back to normal in two years. It takes two years to raise a beef calf.

Thank you for your attention.

"Double, Double, Toil And Trouble..."

To the Editor:

Just a brief note concerning the current theological dispute taking place on the UVM campus. In the most recent episode last week, an ardent Christian, Bill Stickney, using a curious mixture of the scholastic method and evangelical zeal, has courteously exaggerated a statement written by the eminent Dr. Overfield, an active member of the ecumenical magistrorum rerum gestarum memoria, in defence of his witchcraft course. Unfortunately, Stickney did not accomplish his task as deftly as Lois Wright, a Christian fundamentalist, who formerly cited an illuminating passage from the Bible, that book from which almost anything can be proved, including the existence of God, himself. Well, I stand here this week offering the most conclusive proof yet of impious behavior upon the part of certain demonic individuals. You think you have us all fooled. As a matter of fact, I have definitely made note of your scarlet complexion, garlic-scented breath, the tail concealed in your baggy pants, and those red knobs on your forehead. I also know that you have put a hex on Lois Wright and Bill Stickney, so that they will use God's words proudly and blasphemously to write grandiose witch-burning poetry for a class demonstration next week. Furthermore, they are to be transformed into white, innocent lambs afterwards and sacrificed castus et integer on the altar.

Double, double toil and trouble
Fire burn and cauldron bubble.

'Law And The Press' Outlined By U.S. Judge James

Judge James L. Oakes of the Second Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals outlined his feelings over what lawyers may disclose and what newspapers should print concerning a trial process at a seminar held in the Carpenter Auditorium April 7.

Mr. Oakes detailed his categories of "shall nots" and "shall releases" material for publication during a trial before a group of seventy-five newsmen, attorneys, judges, professors, and students who gathered together for four programs of discussion on "The Law and the Press" this past weekend.

Mr. Oakes referred to his policies for trial coverage as "not rules to be imposed on the press" but guidelines "protecting the public" and "protecting the individual defendant." In Vermont, he explained, it is a "moral agreement" between the bar and the press which governs trial process coverage.

The circuit judge warned of "yellow journalism" which may sell newspapers but cause harm to the fairness of a case. He cited as "shall nots" in publication: the prior criminal record of the accused; information concerning the character or reputation of the accused, as being "highly prejudicial"; and the willingness of uncooperativeness of a suspect to give statements, confessions, or submit to tests. Mr. Oakes stated that if information is of public record, the "newspaper can dig it out," and any facts concerning the occurrence of a crime that might interest the public should be printed. And, he suggested, "Let the public draw its own conclusions."

The seminar, sponsored by the Vermont Bar, Broadcasters, and Press Associations in conjunction with the Departments of Political Science and Communication and Theater, spanned the whole day and included discussions on court procedures, the Shield and Right-to-Know laws in Vermont, a Fair Trial-Free Press discussion, and a grape session centered around relationships between media and judiciary.

Peter Martin of WCAX TV explained the new Right-to-Know law, commenting that he felt it was a difficult task to obtain a clear statement which protects the public's right to know as well as preserve the smooth operation of government. He set down 5 exceptions to the Right-to-Know law which includes: the confidential relationship between a lawyer and client, disciplinary actions to state officials for the sake of their careers, and contract and hiring procedures which may be impaired by public knowledge.

Ralph Foote, attorney and moderator of the Right-to-Know discussion, commented that the former "right to exclude the public has been changed to the public's right to be included." Mr. Martin added that executive sessions by any state committee must be held, but only after a vote by that committee has been taken and the closed-door meeting announced as they take place.

Mr. Martin pointed to varying views "even within the press" over enactment of a Shield law for reporters and their sources. Speaking for WCAX, Mr. Martin offered that a reporter's sources ought to remain confidential, but information available to reporters must be disclosed since they are subject to the law as private citizens.

Gordon Mills, editor of The Burlington Free Press, asked, "Is a reporter going to become an arm of government?" "No," he concluded, "he should not become a second-class FBI agent or something." Mr. Mills said he did not know how the shield law would be resolved.

The seminar heard lecture and discussion by several distinguished law personnel including: Allen Sylvester, ward J. Costello, James Villa, William Gray, Albert Coffrin, Ralph Foote, Hilton Dier, and James Oakes. Members of the press panels included Gordon Mills, Richard Gallagher, Peter Martin, and several broadcast and newspapermen from around the state. It was the second jointly sponsored seminar that the Bar and Press Associations had held.

S.A. Finance Committee Approves Many Budget Requests For Next Year

by Wendy Nelson

Just before Spring vacation, the Student Association Finance Committee met and approved several budget requests for next year, rescheduling others for later dates. The Vermont Cynic, which has had an income of approximately $21,000 this year was approved to receive $12,500 from S.A. funds to make up for operating losses. Last year's budget for the Cynic was $18,000, but due to increased revenues from advertising, operating losses will be decreased. Steve Wood, Editor and Business Manager for the Cynic, plans to submit another budget in the case of unforeseen expenses.

The Office of Volunteer Programs hearing was rescheduled for April 13th due to the need for further investigation of its budget. The question of whether OVP will be financed to buy a van for use in its programs will be discussed. The Office of Volunteer Programs requested $5,270 for the van purchase, including $4000 for the vehicle itself and insurance and maintenance costs. The Office of Volunteer Programs has no incoming revenue and requested a total of $12,214.26 for maintaining its ongoing programs.

Although Student Association Speakers submitted a budget of $20,200, the Finance Committee recommended that the organization be given $17,500. This was due to this year's poor attendance at the major and minor speakers. An additional $300 will be given to the publicity department of Student Association Speakers.

in an effort to encourage greater student attendance to fewer speakers.

The Student Photography Service, which provides any Student Association organization with photographic services, requested $2,500 for film and equipment and was approved to receive $3,000. Students interested in photography may also benefit from this expenditure as one of the purposes of the Student Photography service is to give students interested in photography an opportunity to become familiar with photographic equipment and techniques.

The UVM Rugby team required $250 to fulfill their budget. They were granted $75. The Physical Education Department at UVM does not recognize rugby as a sport and does not provide financial support for the team.

The UVM Sailing Club, a new club organized to promote sailing in the New England area requested $2,145, including money for boat rental, mooring fee, and speakers and films. Although the Finance Committee voted to appropriate $1,665 for the club, there is still a question about the boat rental in the budget, and there will be a rehearing.

Other organizations which will be reconsidered will be the Catalina Club, UVM's synchronized swimming club, and the Friends of Red Rock, due to a need for further information. All recommendations for appropriations must be approved by the Senate.

VOSP Students On Tour

Sixteen students of the Vermont Overseas Study Program in Nice, France participated this month in an eight day tour of four European cities to observe the Common Market in action. The tour was organized as part of a course given by the Institut Européen des Hautes Etudes Internationales in Nice and included visits to Paris and Strasbourg in France, and to Brussels and Mons in Belgium. Most of the cost of the tour was covered by subsidies from the Common Market, and was organized to give students the opportunity to observe various arms of the Common Market in operation.

In Strasbourg, the group heard lectures on the Council de l'Europe and the Parliament European, attended one of its sessions, and met with some of the members of this Parliament. In Brussels, the group attended a series of lectures and films on the Commission des Communautés Européennes before meeting with a member of the French delegation to the Alliance Atlantique. Before returning to Nice via a stopover in Paris, these students met in Mons with members of SHAPE.

The VOSP is administered by the University of Vermont's Romance Language Department whose chairman is Dr. Roy Julow. Fifty students are now in Nice, with the VOSP under the direction of Dr. Maurice E. Kohler.

Role Of Pre-Med Advisory Committee Explained

by Bruce Madden

R. Milton Potash of the Zoology Department and Chairman of the Pre-Medical Advisory Committee recently explained the role of the committee, especially its role as intermediary between applicant and medical school. With the growing number of student is intellectually capable (most serious applicants have the ability) but, as Dr. Potash stated, "the med schools are asking will he/she make a good doctor?" and these extra reinforce the desire med schools look for in an applicant. This desire also relates to the Pre-Med Advisory Committee.

The role of the committee, has continued to expand and demand a greater responsibility than in the past. The committee is responsible for applications to med schools and the lack of "spaces," it is necessary, as Doctor Potash stated, to get a "better idea of what medical schools want." Potash mentioned that many students hurt themselves by taking summer school science courses, light work loads or pass-fail courses. He stressed that these students are "only fooling themselves" in trying to get into med school. In addition to the manner in which students often hurt themselves, Dr. Potash spoke of ways which would definitely benefit an applicant.

These benefits tie in to the wants of medical schools. Dr. Potash reflected on entering med students from this year's senior class as examples of what is needed to get in to med school. Basically, it must be proved to the school that the applicant can handle a heavy course load, not necessarily in a science major, but that in science courses taken, the applicant should have done well. Dr. Potash also stressed the need for a rounded education. He added that besides academics, extracurricular activities are a definite must to a good prospect for med school. These extra-academic portions of the applicant's transcript are becoming more important. But, to increase applications, it's not important whether or not the committee is in a strong position to advise as the result of many years of experience. The committee is also helpful in finding schools for the applicant to apply to as well as writing letters of recommendation. Dr. Potash has recently visited twenty med schools in the country and is now in an even greater position for advising students. He said also that besides finding what the individual schools want, his trip opened up a good rapport for applicants applying to these schools.

Dr. Potash stated many times that students are urged to take advantage of the advisory committee because, frequently, students wind up with the wrong information and are then misdirected.

Telephone Rate Increase

points out that the burden of proof is on the public, not the utility.

It is the VPIRG contention, as taken from a printed statement on the case, that "six months is not enough time to decide complicated rate cases." Names of material prepared by the phone company in its own behalf must be waded through and analyzed. More information must then be requested, obtained, waded through, and analyzed to clear up points of confusion. All this takes a lot of time.

There is a bill before the state legislature now which would extend the time limit for the automatic implementation of requested rate increases from six months to one year, VPIRG has urged people to support this bill. But, because of lobbying pressures from the utilities, Silverman is not optimistic about its passing. He said that in public hearings around the state on the proposed increase there has been a great deal of public outcry against it, but added, "It's hard to know whether the legislature will be responsive to the public." VPIRG urges citizens to write their state legislature representatives immediately urging support of this bill.

The people who will be hurt the most by the rate increase, said Silverman, are the poor and elderly, and those on fixed incomes. Many will be unable to pay the higher rates and will have to forfeit their phones. This raises another issue in the case, he continued, that of whether the phone company should not have an obligation to all people "to provide a life-line." For an elderly person living alone, the telephone, as the only means by which help in the outside world can be reached, can be just that.

He also mentioned that while the telephone bill of UVM will increase substantially, the Administration apparently has not spoken out against the increase. One student wondered whether a greatly increased UVM phone bill will mean another increase in tuition.

'Happy Birthday, Wanda June'

Players Surpass Script; Vonnegut Play Best Of Year

by Ken Hurdal

The Student Association's presentation of Kurt Vonnegut's Happy Birthday, Wanda June was close to perfection. For pure comedy the play had no rival at UVM this year, last year, and probably not next year either. Such excellence is accountable to some very funny lines and very good acting, unusually strong acting which lifted the play beyond the weaknesses of the script. The first play to go since the season opened with Three Sisters. The setting (in the Billings apartment) was simple and effective, a living room richly furnished with fur rugs, animal heads, and African artifacts. A single spotlight would occasionally take us to heaven.

The first act greeted us with jungle sounds in the darkness, the gradual crescendo of a lion's roar, which climaxed with the sounds of the other animals being devoured apt symbolism.

The lights came upon Penelope Ryan and her son Paul in the living room. Penelope's husband, Harold Ryan, modelled after Ernest Hemingway, has been lost in the African jungles for eight years. Penelope, who met Harold when she was a car-hop in a hamburger joint, has in the meantime grown up a lot, gone to college, and taken on two suitors. Dr. Weedley, a violin playing pediatrician and Herb Shuttle, a vacuum cleaner salesman who worships the memory of Harold Ryan, as does Paul. Dr. Weedley and Herb Shuttle are arguing over who is going to take Penelope out when the sulking Paul notes that it is his father's birthday. To appease Paul they buy a birthday cake that was originally meant for a little girl who got run over by an ice cream truck that day; hence, the title, Happy Birthday Wanda June.

Harold, who is assumed to be dead by now, comes home with his pilot, Col. Loosleaf Harper, who was responsible for bombing Nagasaki in World War II. Harold expects his wife to be totally as she was, but there are a lot of adjustments he has to make; it is a new time, for a new hero, or perhaps heroes are dead forever. Anyway, the plot winds up with Penelope disgusted at both her machinist husband and his dramatic antithesis, the righteous Dr. Weedley. Paul becomes disillusioned with the myth of his father, and Harold Ryan himself gradually accepts that he is out-dated, he goes off to shoot himself, but "misses," a rather weak ending.

That is the plot. But as anyone who has read Kurt Vonnegut knows, the term "plot" has very little meaning in Vonnegut works. The play has a whole other aspect. The action is interspersed with flashbacks from people in Harold Ryan's past, who are now dead in heaven. This is Vonnegut's Black Humour Man, the incredibly funny absurdist, skating in and out of reality in order to establish his own comic reality. And this the Vonnegut who devastates all American institutions with his absurd situations.

Particularly memorable were the car-hop scene, where Penelope meets Harold (I'll have a raw hamburger-and a whole onion peeled like an apple); Major Vonkengswald's description of how Harold Ryan strangled him to death; (Vonnegut's parody of himself); Vonkengswald's and Wanda June's description of Jesus playing shuffleboard, and Loosleaf Harper's description of post-piloting.

Jack Macdonald was the standout of the evening. As Colonel Loosleaf Harper, he certainly played the best comic role of the year. It is true that he had the best lines, but if I may be excused for using a superlative or two...the way he moved, drawled, shoved his hands into his pockets, cast his head down, and drawled "ah yes...I don't know", then started, his eyes popping, his whole body rigid. It was just too much. Every move perfect—a Don Knotts or Art Carney but with a heavier social resonance, something there that spoke about our time much in the way that Chaplin could. It will be interesting to see what else Mr. Macdonald can do. In this play at least, his professionalism was breathtaking.

The rest of the cast was more than competent; especially good were David Storil as Major Siegfried Vonkengswald (his facial resemblance to Vonnegut was startlingly realistic), and Jill Stephenson as Mildred. Miss Stephenson's portrayal as one of Ryan's previous alcoholic wives showed a deep psychological insight that was more terrifying than humorous. Eileen Jones, as Wanda June very convincing as a ten year old, an endearing little monster, and William Bedgood as Paul the same. Only I wish that Mr. Bedgood was more unpleasant when he was supposed to be. I felt that sometimes Steve Tanner was not getting the full comic potential possible from his role as Herb Shuttle, but overall, he was pretty good. So was Ed Chemaly. (Night as well mention everybody) as Dr. Weedley. He played much the same sort of person in Pirandello's Right You Are if You Think You Are, a mild mannered intelligent professional person.

As for the leads, both Craig Toth as Harold and Susan Selig as Penelope both had some difficulty in warming up to their roles. Both were considerably better in the second act than the first. For example, I recall Miss Selig and Mr. Chemaly in a playful little would be seduction squirmish, the classical kind that is in every modern comedy. It was totally unconvincing, and the only bad acting in the whole two hours. But then we should understand that the more realistic a character is supposed to be, usually the more subtle are the acting requirements. Overall, Mr. Toth and Miss Selig were above par.

Basically, it was the best when it was absurd. Vonnegut runs into difficulties when he tries to be profound. His themes are really of the commonest modern platitudes. Everyone knows that the Hero is dead; and everyone loathes Ernest Hemingway now (though hopefully not his writing). Kurt Vonnegut is not a true artist, in the sense that he can tell us where we might have been or where we might be, but as a satirist, he does an uncannily good job of showing us where we are.

My congratulations to the director Paula Reeder and the cast and crew of Happy Birthday Wanda June for putting on the best play of the year at the University of Vermont.

Valuable Original Prints Will Be Shown Tuesday

A special one-day presentation of original lithograph, intaglio, serigraph and woodcut prints will be held Tuesday 17 April from 10 am to 5 pm in Robert Hull Fleming Museum of the University of Vermont. The public is invited to view this unique collection of Lakeside Studio from Lakeside, Michigan and to meet their representative, Mr. David S. Bereth, who will be happy to answer questions both historical and technical. All work to be displayed are available for purchase.

The work to be exhibited here, valued at over $100,000, contains prints by old master and modern master artists such as Albrecht Durer, Jacques Callot, George Rouault and Pablo Picasso. There will also be prints by contemporary artists Leonard Baskin, Garo Antreasian, Mark Tobey, Sid Chafetz, S. W. Hayter and many others including David Bumbeck and Claire Van Vliet from Vermont.

Film Moguls Ignore A Movie To Be Proud Of

by Mina Carson

Cabaret is a film which the American movie industry, in the context of the last five or ten years, has the right to be proud of, and it is too damn bad that in their annual mutual back-slapping orgy the moguls couldn't see their way clear to recognizing it as such.

Although they apparently did everything but. Ah sordid, sordid politics!

For Cabaret is distinctly American in its brashness and technical ease, and yet distinctly rare in combining these qualities with an intelligent recognition of necessary limits and a kind of understated power: scarce in the filmic annals of the land of the gangsters and the 74's. Ostensibly the story is of a sexual triangle between an American woman and two Englishmen who have found themselves for various reasons in the ominous Berlin of 1931.

But there is no "set against the backdrop of" relationship between the little story and the big one here, for the one is symptomatic of the other. In fact one can, and is obviously meant to, trace a quite mutual dependence, the movie taking the stance not only that the shipwrecked world makes for nature of this role he is not a shipwrecked people, but also that the horrendous, albeit temporary, triumph of Nazism is a responsibility which must be shared by participants and onlookers alike.

And oh the unholly negligence of those onlookers! But what could they do? So they crowded the cabaret. The camera darts from street to floor to stage, slickly but brilliantly intercepting the bloom of Nazi youth with the seductive bisexuality of the Master of Ceremonies; the violently ribald song and dance of the cabaret performers with the bloody menace of Nazi (and starving) audience.

propagandists outside. But these are suggestions only—suggestions in whose final outcome we are well-versed indeed—but suggestions, nevertheless. The impact of the film is lodged in suggestion. The camera has sensed where to linger, where to cut. It has a fine horror of teasing and registers few ambiguities, but manages to retain a powerful subtlety: a successful balancing act difficult, to say the least, to pull off.

Liza Minelli is a wonder, as a performer and as an actress. I have the same reaction to her as some have to Streisand, I suppose: I used to think she was ugly. In this role, at least, she has a power rarely found (and more's the pity, but that's another story) in a woman on screen. This time, thank heaven, the moguls have done something right by a person. Her final rendition of "Cabaret" evokes the shivers.

The men who support her (and that is the extent of it) are quite good. Michael York is the featured supporting actor, and his portrayal of an Oxford paddy with integrity, for what the stance not only that the shipwrecked world makes for nature of this role he is not a shipwrecked people, but also that the horrendous, albeit temporary, triumph of Nazism is a responsibility which must be shared by participants and onlookers alike.

Do see this movie if you have not, before it is too late. Master of Ceremonies; the violently ribald song and dance of the cabaret performers with the bloody menace of Nazi (and starving) audience.

Blues Guitarist Strums At UVM

The Vermont Friends of Traditional Music will present blues guitarist Jim Brewer, Thursday, April 19 in Billings North Lounge. A non-profit co-operative organization, VFTM presents free concerts in order to provide an opportunity for various musicians to perform and be recorded.

Jim Brewer was born in Mississippi in 1920. At the age of six he lost complete eyesight as a result of cataracts. In hope of securing a profession, Jim's father taught him to play guitar at this early age. The blues guitarist began performing in Chicago's south-side Honky Tonks around 1940. He continued to perform in St. Louis for the next six years, where he met and studied with Bill Broonzy. Brewer is presently touring the East coast, visiting and performing at various colleges and coffee houses. In addition to appearing at UVM, the guitarist will circulate the Burlington area while recording an album for the Philo Record Company in North Ferrisburg.

'Covenant' To Be Presented As Final Production

The final major production of the semester will be COVENANT, a rock Hebrew musical based on the giving of the Ten Commandments. The production is being presented by the Department of Communication and Theatre and represents the work of Jan Goldstein and David Lash, the former a senior at the University of Vermont.

This will be the final major production that will be presented in the old Arena Theatre. Production dates are April 25 through 29. Tickets may be purchased at the Arena Theatre Box Office beginning April 18 at 10 am. Prices will be $3.00 general admission and $1.50 with UVM ID. Two one act plays will be presented in the Arena Theatre on May 4 and 5. The Fascinating Foundling by George Bernard Shaw and The Lover by Harold Pinter will be presented both evenings. Performances will be free of charge and no reservations will be taken. Curtain time will be 8 pm.

The Champlain Shakespeare Festival will open in the New Arena Theatre with productions of Midsummer Nights Dream, Romeo and Juliet, and Richard III.

The Underground Revisited.

There was a time when a young woman of college age or a little older shopped in the Underground regularly. But times change. Clothes aren't the alpha and omega in a young woman's life the way they used to be. Jeans and a couple of shirts can get you through the school year. O.K. We'll accept that.

Still, we think there might come a moment when you want something for a special occasion. And when that occasion comes, we invite you to come into the Underground and take a look through our selection of pants, shirts, sweaters and dresses. There's something there for any occasion.

Or, we might say, for all occasions. The young look today is adaptable for any time and place. That means you can afford to invest in an outfit and know that you will get your money's worth. A pants, shirt and sweater outfit isn't going to be worn once and then hung in the closet because it won't go for another occasion. Not at all.

We also invite you to open a limited charge account. Talk to us about it the next time you visit the Underground.

"Godspell" Is Sold Out

"Godspell," the prize-winning Broadway musical, will be performed next Monday, April 16, at 8:30, in Memorial Auditorium, in the Lane Series.

The concert has been sold out for several months; there are no tickets available.

"Godspell" (old English for Gospel) is the musical adaptation of the Gospel according to St. Matthew that has taken the world stage by storm.

Conceived and directed by John-Michael Tebelak, with music and new lyrics by Stephen Schwartz, it opened in May, 1971, at Cherry Lane Theatre, where it plays to sold out crowds every night.

The ten-member singing cast will be augmented on the state by a four piece combo of piano, guitar, bass fiddle and drums.

The setting of "Godspell" is a musical circus set in a playground. The actors, dressed as clowns, bring the Bible to life as a natural and free-style living experience. Never preaching, the show tells us that we can live simple and still be happy and fulfilled. The joyful rock score sensitively accentuates the theme of the musical.

Album Review Byrds Move On To New Things

By Doug Collette

BYRDS

Asylum SD 5058

It's important to see this record in the proper perspective. Roger McGuinn spoke of this reunion of the five original Byrds as taking up "where The Notorious Byrd Brothers left off," and that makes sense. Released in 1968, Notorious is the Byrds' Sergeant Pepper and far surpasses the Beatles' LP in terms of a cohesive integration of diverse musical elements into a unified album. Following their most extravagant production, it would only seem logical for the Byrds, like the Beatles, Stones, and Asplains, to go back to some thing comparatively simple to recharge themselves in preparation for some more sophisticated things.

Disregarding the time between these two albums, but taking into account the individual and cumulative experiences of Clark, Hillman, Crosby, McGuinn and Clarke, Byrds is an unambitious but subtly satisfying record.

Perhaps in a conscious effort not to sound like the "old Byrds," this one is primarily acoustic, with only sparing touches of the familiar 12-string guitar jangle.

The music nevertheless achieves a dense rich texture fully equal to that of any of the previous records and has the same artful eclecticism that's always been one of the Byrds' greatest strengths.

Each of the five has grown artistically as well as personally as evidenced by the various talents displayed on each cut. All except Clarke, who's improved tremendously even since the last Byrds LP, are adept lead vocalists which certainly couldn't be said of the Byrds before, and their voices still blend in the kind of softly expressive harmonies that so many people have vainly tried to copy. The music is never flashy but pure and kept subservient to the presentation of the songs, which include eight originals and a good selection of outside material.

Gene Clark's compositions are the most countrified of the lot. "Full Circle" may well have been inspired by this reunion and is graced by Hillman's nimble mandolin as well as some sparkling acoustic fingerpicking. "Changing Heart" has the kind of uncomplicatedly eloquent lyrics seen all too rarely these days when everybody's a poet.

"Sweet Mary" best typifies the somber mood of the first side, but look close, because like Joni Mitchell's "For Free" the optimism and hopefulness is there. McGuinn's other contribution "Born to Rock 'n' Roll" sounds lackluster at first, but grows on you irresistibly. Byrds music has always been gently but firmly insinuating and the restrained exuberance of this track captures the essence of Roger's temperament and the band's quite well.

Chris Hillman amazes me. He's never been an aggressive figure, but he always makes his presence known as a naturally adroit musician and an engaging composer. "Things Will Be Better" and "Borrowing Time" are easily the most infectious songs on the album, memorable after one listening; my only complaint is that they're too short. Crosby's introspective bent tends to render his songs somewhat vague, but a sarcasm verging on bitterness makes the point of "Long Live the King" something in the same vein as "So You Want To Be a Rock 'n' Roll Star." The Byrds' version of "Laughing" is nowhere near as detached as that on his solo LP. Crosby's vocal is really involved with the words and helps enhance a ghostly arrangement. "Cowgirl in the Sand" has much of the same dramatic air and Gene Clark's dry voice lends it and the other Neil Young composition, "See the Sky About to Rain" the same plaintiveness Neil's singing commands.

The byword for any important album of this sort should probably be "no expectations," but I suppose it's impossible to completely suppress your preconceptions. If Byrds doesn't seem to concede as clearly as some of its predecessors, remember that these five men haven't played together in over five years and though the result of their newest collaboration isn't momentous, neither is it a nostalgic novelty. In a strange way, this record reminds me of Deja Vu. Whereas the CSN&Y effort was a fruitless attempt to combine the music of four too-distinct personalities, Byrds is the product of complementary talents. The key to the record is its subtlety: you will have to listen carefully to appreciate its intricacies and if you do, the Byrds album will wear as well as the others, even if in a different way.

'Caine Mutiny' Closes Trial Movie Series

Mexican Satirist's Engravings Exhibited At Fleming Museum

An exhibit of engravings by one of Mexico's greatest graphic artists, Jose Guadalupe Posada, opened Friday at the Robert H. Fleming Museum, UVM. Sponsored jointly by the Fleming Museum and the Department of Spanish, the exhibit is on loan from the Instituto Nacional De Bellas Artes, Mexico City, through the auspices of the Mexican Embassy.

A reporter-illustrator who recorded and satirized the social and political events prior to the Mexican revolution in 1910, Posada occupied a central position both in the political and artistic history of modern Mexico.

Posada's political caricatures centered on the evils of the regime of Porfirio Diaz and the things against which the revolution would direct itself—executions, injustice, oppression of the peasant multitudes and the favoritism of the European few.

Posada also illustrated the covers of pamphlets containing songs, stories, and prayers, but his major and most original works illustrate "corridos" based on the historical circumstances of his time. The most horrendous crimes, accidents, and miracles are the subjects with which he worked wondrous. But the extraordinary reached a high level in those works that constitute the Fleming's present exhibit, the "calaveras" (skulls). These represent his vision and interpretation of the other world, or a fantastic beyond that embodies, transforms, and transfigures this world of daily life and history.

In conjunction with this exhibit of the "calaveras," on Thursday, April 19, at 8 p.m. in the Fleming Museum, Professor Armando Zarate of the Spanish Dept. will give a talk entitled "Jose Guadalupe Posada and The Skulls of Society."

"Posada" will remain on view through April 29.

QUESTION: While walking along a trail in a park, I was attacked and raped. Fortunately, before too much happened, some people came up the trail and my unknown assailant fled. His penis did not penetrate very far and due to a lack of time, no semen was released.

A few days after this happened, a white vaginal discharge appeared and there seemed to be some irritation inside. There is a slight possibility that a small amount of dirt could have entered the vagina. Could this discharge be the result of gonorrhea or a related disease? Or is it just an infection from the possible presence of dirt? I have told no one of this incident, and I am under a great deal of stress to find the answers to my questions. This incident happened a few months ago, and the discharge has been with me since that time.

ANSWER: Following sexual assault by an unknown man, a woman should always visit a physician as soon as possible. Appropriate treatment should pay attention to the psychological state of the victim and in addition should include a careful examination for infection and other damage. Venereal disease definitely can be transmitted in the type of situation you describe. If ejaculation did occur, and if there is any chance of pregnancy resulting, the use of appropriate hormones to prevent pregnancy is also indicated. The likelihood of dirt entering the vagina and causing an infection is small. However, some irritation could have resulted and this could produce a vaginal discharge. At this time you still should see a physician for an examination.

Although the legal investigation of rape may have a number of primitive and harsh aspects to it, I urge women to report such incidents to the police immediately. While some unenlightened police and courts may make the victim feel as if she is accused, many agencies are making a strenuous attempt to deal kindly and discreetly with the victim. In any case, the victim of such a crime owes it to all of us to help apprehend the rapist.

Jennifer Cover To Direct Program On Folk Ballads

The Communication and Theatre department will present a program on ballads at the Arena Theatre, this Friday at 4 p.m. Under the direction of Jennifer Cover, an instructor of Oral Interpretation of Literature, the program will be presented by fifteen students from the communication department.

In addition to entertaining the audience, the program is designed to inform and discuss the origin and history of folk, literary and broadside ballads. Included in the presentation is a selection of Scottish, English, American and Negro ballads—some dating back to the 15th and 16th centuries. Jennifer Cover, a graduate of Emerson College in Boston, presented a one-woman program last semester entitled "The Lady or the Tiger." A proficient performer and gifted entertainer, Jennifer is also an effective, successful instructor of Oral Interpretation of Literature. Her equally adept direction should produce an entertaining, creative and informative student presentation.

The program is open to all students free of charge.

QUESTION: I am up against a problem. In the last year I acquired a 35 mm camera, and I like to photograph many varied things including animals, scenery, places, events, etc. But, after observing various publications I naturally wanted to try my hand on nude and semi nude women. I know many girls and carry on sexual activities with all of them. But, when I mention or bring out my camera, they are all turned off. Why is this and what, if anything, can I do to overcome their hesitancy?

ANSWER: Some letters just naturally have more appeal to me than others. This one has some professional merits and is also amusing because of my own interest in photography. You count yourself as pretty skilled with women but it strikes me that you are awfully naive about them at the same time. The women you have been going out with are sufficiently obsequious to not want to become part of a collection you are intent on acquiring. It is one thing to model, for which one receives a fee and which is considered a professional activity, and another thing to record for posterity one's sexual involvements. For many people, sexual involvements are considered highly private matters and this seems to be the case for women more than men, or at least for more women than it is for you. The hesitancy your friends are demonstrating is probably a reflection of their uncertainty about your motives, which may be good judgement.

From a technical point of view, photographing the human figure is not that simple. While potentially graceful and pleasing to the eye, the human figure can also appear awkward and unappealing, making you wish you had stuck to your fantasies.

QUESTION: I seem to have a lack of nipples unless my breasts are caressed for a long period of time and then they still do not remain for long. Other girls have no problems along this line. Is something wrong with me?

ANSWER: Nothing is wrong. The degree of protrusion of nipples varies considerably among women. Many women are just as you describe yourself, still others have nipples which tend to be slightly inverted. Nipples have a small amount of erectile tissue in them so that when stimulated by touch they pop out somewhat. This reaction occurs in men as well as women. In the case of women, this is very convenient for breast feeding, as you might imagine. Nipples also tend to respond to sexual stimulation involving other parts of the body and to sexual fantasies. I've noticed a higher priority on pointy nipples recently, as they have obvious advertising value, if one goes braless.

IRA Executive Board Elections: Candidates And Offices Outlined

by Marge Howland

The annual elections of the Inter-Residence Association Executive Board will be held Thursday, April 12, in the dining hall during the evening meal. The Executive Board consists of the following officers: President, Vice President of Welfare, Vice President of Social and Cultural Affairs, Vice President of Financial Affairs, and Secretary.

The President shall serve as the chief executive officer of IRA and shall call and preside over meetings of the Executive Board and Council. He/she shall also serve as an official representative of IRA to the University community, and shall be an ex-officio member of all IRA committees. He/she is responsible for making up appointments and reporting on the state of the IRA.

Running for this office are: Mary Ashcroft, a sophomore from Millis, and Stephan Guy, a freshman from Hamilton. (See elsewhere in the Cynic for a report on the candidates.)

The Vice President of Welfare shall assume the duties of the President in his absence, chair the Welfare Committee and act as a liaison between IRA and both the Housing Office and the Food Services Office.

Running for this office is Rich Jaffe, a sophomore from Buckham. Jaffe is from Manhattan, New York. He is a Resident Assistant, floor representative to the Buckham Dorm Council, Co-Chairman of the Dorm Council, a member of the IRA University Orientation Committee, and the Red Square Affair Committee. Jaffe is in the College of Technology and is the IRA representative from Buckham.

The Vice President of Social and Cultural Affairs shall work to establish a sound and healthy social program for the members of the IRA, and shall sponsor special extra-curricular activities for the members of the IRA.

Running for this office are: Katie Eisenberg, a freshman from Millis, and Meri Goyette, a junior from Millis. Eisenberg is in the College of Agriculture and is from Stowe, Vermont. Goyette is from Nashua, New Hampshire and an Education major. She is a Resident Assistant and is Social Director of Gamma Phi Beta sorority.

Running for this office is: Karen Bateman, a freshman from Somerville, New Jersey, and is the IRA representative from Jeanne Mance.

The Vice President of Financial Affairs is responsible for the receipt and disbursement of the accounts of IRA and the records of all transactions. He/she shall also see to the budget for the Association and annually audit the accounts, consult the Bursar in all necessary matters, and over-see dorm funds. He/she shall also chair the appropriations Committee.

Running for this office is Paul Vey, a junior from Buckham. Vey is from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and presently holds the office of Vice President of Financial Affairs. He is also a Resident Assistant and an Education major.

The Secretary shall keep the minutes of the IRA, and make copies of these for distribution and the records. She/he shall also maintain the permanent files of IRA, attend to the correspondence of the IRA, and manage office supplies and equipment.

Running for this office is: Karen Bateman, a freshman from Somerville, New Jersey, and is the IRA representative from Jeanne Mance.

Week Long Vacation Seminar Shows UVM Students Aspects Of Political And Cultural Washington

by Daniel B. Haslam

For some twenty UVM students the week-long Spring vacation in late March turned into a little more education as the troupe made its way to Washington, D.C. for a seminar on "The President and the Struggle With Congress."

The seminar, sponsored by the Alumni Office and the Political Science Department at UVM, was held amidst a Washington pink with cherry blossoms and raging political controversy.

Transportation to and from Washington from the Green Mountain State was officially provided by AMTRAK, a new passenger railroad service which instituted a new trail from Washington to Montreal. "The Montrealer," in the fall of 1972. Because of the diverseness of the attending students, car-avans and planes were also used to ship the UVM delegation to the nation's capital.

In an effort of promoting UVM relations and keeping the cost of the trip down, almost everyone bedded down in the homes of hosting alumni families, which gave both the flavor of the UVM family bond and tasty, homecooked meals. Sunday, March 25 was arrival day as the train pulled into Union Station on time, while the other students struggled in later during the day, or in this writer's case, struggled in, wrapped in maps and directions of greater Washington, D.C.

The next morning found the group being welcomed to the seminar by Beryl Frank '39 in the Office of Economic Opportunity. They then heard Mr. Richard Redenius, controller of OEO, relate the facts about the termination of OEO. Mr. Redenius, a professional, a political civil servant, declined to refute the Administration's position in eliminating OEO in FY74 budget funding. He flatly stated, "I face a very known period of employment." He pointed out that the ending of OEO was not necessarily the end for intra-related programs. "Most everybody recognizes the need for some form of residual entity" after OEO's demise on June 30 of this year. Mr. Redenius offered, and at least one half of existing programs will be channeled into larger departments, such as the Job Corps transferring into the Department of Labor. Furthermore, Mr. Redenius commented that community action programs could still be retained by revenue sharing monies from the federal government if their success warrants continuation.

After lunch, with time to kill before the afternoon's agenda, several students followed Professor Dick Warner, faculty advisor to the seminar from the department of Political Science, to attempt a tour of the Soviet embassy. The students' arrival sent Soviet personnel off hunting for clearance, but the group was turned away because the embassy was being painted.

The afternoon was scheduled for lectures at the National Wildlife Federation, and Mr. Oliver Houck, litigation attorney for the Federation, spoke briefly on his legal role in Washington. "We're trying to educate the government," he cited 12 law suits filed last year against the government involving such incidents as the Alaskan Pipeline construction. He vigorously attacked the decision-making powers over the nation which are held by non-elected cabinet and commission appointees.

Following Mr. Houck, Mr. Joel Pickelner, legislative liaison, discussed the need for "a basic law for land" to compare with existing water and air regulations.

Evenings for seminar students were left free to their whims, but after a long day of crowded city streets and long Washington queues, many gratefully sank into bed. However, this writer ran into more than one night hawk UVMer who was not content to see Washington only by day and had ventured out for the nightlife. The national monuments were stunningly illuminated, and the overworked cherry blossoms were highlighted by intensive revolving searchlights. Sunny days heightened the warm and clear nights when activity in the city only murmured.

Daylight came and Tuesday brought a full day on Capitol Hill as the students battled and battered through rush hour traffic to make an early briefing by Mr. Neal Houston

49, an aide to Senator Stafford. A choice of Senate and House of Representative hearings was offered, followed by a cafeteria lunch in the Supreme Court building. Rusty Brink '66, Director of Alumni Relations, flew down to Washington from UVM to replace Prof. Warner, and the group assembled in the Senate gallery after lunch to watch Congress at work. Unfortunately, Congress had just broken for lunch themselves, and informal tours of the capitol building and area were held instead.

Senator Robert Stafford and Congressman Richard Mallary headlined a mid-afternoon lecture during which they discussed their role on the hill and the rudimentary workings of national government. They were followed by first Mr. Hal Brayman, Minority Staff Member of the Public Works Committee, and then by Mr. Steve Wexler, counsel for the Education Subcommittee, who elaborated on stricter federal government controls over and to secondary education. "The mood of the Senate," Mr. Wexler described, is a "shift in federal monies," funding students over institutions. Mr. Vic Maerki, legislative assistant to Senator Stafford, concluded the afternoon session, speculating that the President will win the battle against Congress—95%.

Wednesday, March 28 marked the final day of the Washington seminar, and Mr. Walter Mazan '49, outgoing Assistant Secretary of Transportation for Public Affairs, spoke to the group on executive role and government decisions. Directing "his comments around his specialty, transportation," Mr. Mazan added a personal touch by reviewing his experiences and by urging the students to "keep aiming for excellence." The opening of the discussion to the students, he was barraged with detailed questions by well-informed students. However, he defensively and patiently responded to questions over President Nixon's spending priorities, the military budget, and the SST. The differences of opinion were many, but everyone left as friends. That afternoon had been planned as free time for the students to shop, to visit an area of particular interest in Washington, or to talk with one of several resource alumni who had government specialties in Washington. The late afternoon found many students with their feet up in the Capitol Hill Club, recuperating after the miles of concrete they had endured over the last few days. A social hour and dinner honoring the seminar students were well attended by host families, D.C. area alumni, Congressman Mallary, and of course the students.

Paul Burns '73 gave one student opinion of the seminar; people were thanked; goodbyes were said and the dinner was over. Guest trickled out to cars, students piled in with their adopted Washington families, and it was almost as good as really going home.

Want To Landscape?

Students will have the opportunity to express their views concerning the landscaping around the Cook New Arena Theater area at a meeting in the Cook Bldg. lobby at 6 p.m. on Monday April 16th. Students from the combined classes of Ed Owe and William Potter met earlier this week with Mr. Potter who told them that students will do the planning of this area, termed the "backyard."

Work will begin this summer, so now is the time to start. Every Tuesday from 4 to 7 p.m. in 205 Votey is also a chance for student input.

If you think Kodak is just pretty pictures, you ought to have your chest examined.

When a chest x-ray shows that you have a potential killer like TB or cancer, it's not a pretty picture. But it's an important picture because it can help the doctor detect and catch the kill in time.

When doctors are out to catch these potential killers, they want the sharpest, clearest x-ray films they can get. And that's why people at Kodak spend so many hours creating new and better x-ray film equipment. Already, the results include convenience for the patient, economy for the hospital, an even more useful tool for the radiologist—and, most important, reduced radiation exposure.

Researching and creating better x-ray films is good for our business, which is why we went into them in the first place. But it does our society good, too—which isn't a bad feeling. After all, our business depends on our society—so we care what happens to it.

IRA President Candidates

Cynic: What specific new policies would you have in mind for IRA?

Ashcroft: Three immediate points: First, the representation has been good this year and I've seen some. Still, there are some halls we need to reach. My idea is to rotate IRA meetings in the dorms. The students will be encouraged to come to the meetings and we can have some "brief sessions" and with the help of the Vice President of Welfare these students can come up with ideas for solutions.

Secondly, when IRA was established, it had a rather administrative constitution—and by laws written up. I think these need to be revised. IRA has outgrown some of them. Also, the Appropriations Committee should be set up as a committee of people who review requests for funding. We should have guidelines set up to deal with requests.

The third point involves commitments to craft shops. IRA has made no provisions for the upkeep of these shops. But we should have 1) a general annual review, 2) a reevaluation of the craft shops, and 3) a budget system of expenditures to properly fund the shops. We should also have a balance between long-term, permanent structures and short-term, one-shop activities such as dances and plays. We need to know which the students are interested in and maybe run a questionnaire or referendum.

Guy: I think that first of all, IRA should advertise more. It does. There should be more communication between IRA and the dorms, and this communication must be continuous.

Another idea is that when a group of students want money for some project they should be encouraged to get the money from IRA through the proper channels. They can't do this unless the proper channels exist. This will involve more student participation. A Standing Committee will judge the requests and report to IRA, who then can vote and will

Cynic: What specific new policies would you have in mind for IRA?

Ashcroft: Three immediate points: first, the representation has been good this year and I've seen some still, there are some halls we need to reach. My idea is to rotate IRA meetings in the dorms. The students will be encouraged to come to the meetings and we can have some "grief sessions" and with the help of the Vice President of Welfare these students can come up with ideas for resolutions.

Secondly, when IRA was established, it had a rather idealistic constitution and by-laws written up. I think these need to be revised. IRA has outgrown some of them. Also, the Appropriations

The third point involves commitments to craft shops. IRA has made no provisions for the upkeep of these shops. We should also have a balance between long-term, permanent structures and short-term, one-shop activities such as dances and plays. We need to know which the students are interested in and maybe run a questionnaire or referendum.

Q: I think that first of all, IRA should advertise more. What does it do for the things that it does. There should be more communication between IRA and the dorms, and this communication must be continuous.

Another idea is that when a group of students want money for some project they should be encouraged to get the money from IRA through the proper channels. They can't do this unless the proper channels exist. This will involve more student participation. A Steering Committee will judge the requests and report to IRA, who then can vote and will have the proper background information available. There are two good things about this one, the money will be put to good use (having been reviewed by the committee) and two, the students will know where it's coming from. I also would like to see an improvement on the write-up of the minutes - and get copies to every student in every dorm. We should have a Publicity Committee to keep the continuous communication flow going - so students will know which committee they should approach, and so they would have an idea as to what is going on in craft shops, various committees, and everything else IRA gets involved in.

Cynic: What role does IRA have in regards to the SA?

Ashcroft: The SA controls most of the student organizations. IRA is however totally independent of the SA. We were set up for that very reason to have no links with the SA. We can work together but the SA has no power over us.

Guy: The SA is a senate. IRA is a representative body. Run correctly, the representation depends on the size of the residence hall. The bigger dorms are supposed to have more votes, according to the constitution. IRA can work with the SA and coordinate efforts in projects like concerts and the Red Square Affair, also I would like to see an IRA member go to SA meetings and report back on what they are doing and to have someone report to them what we are doing. But this should be a two-way business; SA people should sit in on our meetings too. I also think there should be an IRA member on the Board of Trustees, and that this member have one vote and bring the IRA viewpoint to the Board. I want to look into the feasibility of this. If the SA gets on the Board of Trustees too, then the university will pay more attention to both organizations because of their role in University decision-making. But my own interest is that IRA at least be represented on the Board of Trustees.

Second Annual Road Rally Is Saturday

The UVM Automotive Sporting Club will have its Second Annual Maxwell Silverhammer Memorial Cannonball Road Rally on Saturday, April 14. Starting from the parking lot of Gutterson Fieldhouse, contestants will proceed around the Vermont countryside in accordance with directions provided at the starting line and checkpoints along the route. The only requirements for entry in the rally are a properly registered car, a licensed driver, and a navigator on each team. A team may consist of more than two persons. Entry fees, used to defray the expenses of the rally, are two dollars a piece for the driver and navigator and fifty cents for each additional member.

A twenty-five dollar first prize will be awarded at the finish line, as well as certificates for extraordinary performances. There will be refreshments available at the finish line for all teams regardless of performance. Last year's event, the first of its kind held at UVM, had forty-nine entrants. Interested persons should contact Bob Lanza at 656-2513 for registration information. Advance registration is urged; entries will be accepted Saturday morning only on a first-come, first-served basis.

Activities Fair

The Office of Student Activities is sponsoring an Activities Fair on April 16, 17, and 18 in North Lounge, Billings Center. They hope to provide clubs and organizations with an opportunity to advertise their services and activities. UVM students will have the chance to become more aware of the different alternatives in extra-curricular activities that are open to them. The fair will run from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on all three days; everyone is invited to "come on over" and perhaps find something interesting to be involved in next year.

Hesse Exhibition At Fleming

"Hermann Hesse," an exhibition of family photographs and reproductions of manuscript pages and drawings, opens Wednesday at the Robert Hull Fleming Museum, UVM. Put together by the Goethe Institute in Munich with the co-operation of the Schiller National Museum in Marbach, W. Germany, the exhibit was brought to Burlington by the joint effort of the German-Russian Dept. at UVM and the Fleming Museum. It is on loan from the Goethe Institute in Boston.

Hermann Hesse is the popular twentieth-century author of such novels as "Siddhartha," "Demian," "Beneath the Wheel," "Narziss und Goldmund," and "Steppenwolf." Reproductions of numerous original book covers and manuscript pages from his famous works are in the exhibition. Photographs, too, provide a chronological survey of Hesse from age four to age eighty. After three marriages, numerous adventures in psychoanalysis and drugs, and living through two World Wars centered in his country, Hesse died in 1962 at the age of eighty-five. In the twenty years prior to his death, he was awarded the Goethe Prize of the city of Frankfurt, the Nobel Prize for Literature, an honorary Ph.D. from the University of Berne, and the Peace Prize of the German Bookseller Organization.

The mystical orientation of Hesse's novels recently led to a revival of interest in him - especially among youth. A panel discussion on Hesse and his time will be held at the Fleming on Friday, April 20th, at 4 p.m. "Hermann Hesse" will remain on view through April 29th.

Icecats Honored

by Fred Coombs

Friday night Burlington's social set honored the UVM hockey team with a $7.50 a plate banquet. It was a delightful affair with a simply delicious buffet.

The ladies all came dressed to the teeth and chatted about how marvelous the hockey team is. Their husbands talked about that save Eckerson made and that goal that MacKinnon scored and all the while wishing that they too had played hockey on something other than a lake. Their sons and daughters ran around asking anyone under 30 for an autograph and when they asked for two you knew one was for daddy or most likely mommy.

After dinner, movies of the playoffs were shown and Patty Wright took the stage and told jokes and all the ladies thought he was so cute. Steve Eckerson was voted M.V.P., Eli Tubbs got the Horse's Ass Award and Coach Cross accepted a trophy for his 100 wins. He also told some amusing anecdotes about the team, especially Chris Hurley, while the ladies laughed and laughed.

And so it was the UVM hockey elite got together and showed everyone how wonderful it is to be associated with UVM hockey. Nowhere to be seen were those Drunken Diehards who missed nary a game - gone 'till practice starts next fall unless someone throws a 50 cent a ticket hotdog and bean and beer barbeque to lure them out of the off-season blahs.

Friends of UVM hockey is surely appreciated for giving so much time and rounding up so much money for a most deserving hockey team and they are certainly most valuable in their own way. Friends of UVM hockey showed their admiration and support for the team Friday night. But the average everyday UVM hockey fan, alias those Drunken Diehards who can barely scrape up the price of a ticket, will wait till next fall to show their appreciation in the only way they know how (or can afford) - with a four letter description and a "LETS GO CATS!" and isn't that really what UVM hockey is all about?

participate in a series against the Russian national team.

In recent weeks, college basketball has had some inspiring and encouraging developments. A team too small and "too white" won a national tournament, a team from the East made it to the semi-finals in the N.C.A.A., a great star spurned the pros to stay in college, a great coach returned to college, and many other great collegians including Walton will play in an important international series. These developments are worthy to note of as the basketball season comes to a close both in college and in the pros.

Track Team To Compete In Relays

Several groups of competitors will represent the University of Vermont track team at the annual Boston College Relays this Saturday (April 14), beginning at 10:30 a.m. with the field events.

"Most of the top teams in New England will be represented at the Relays and this will be invaluable experience for our team," said head coach, Bill Nodde. Some of the groups representing Vermont are the 440 sprint relay team of Bill Looker (Rutland), Dave Bird (Milton), Tony Jones (Baltimore, Md.) and Jeff Burke (Easton, Conn.); the sprint medley relay team of Peter Weith (Darien, Conn.), Looker, Mike Berry (Burlington) and Jones; the two-mile relay contingent of Dave Platka (Framingham, Mass.), Berry, Rich Clark (Albany, N.Y.) and Don Smith (Ramsey, N.J.) or Weith; the distance medley relay team of Weith, Clark, Platka and Rum-Jedlicka (Greenwich, Conn.) or Smith and the triple jump relay crew of Looker, Paul Butler (Manhasset, N.Y.) and Paul Bucknam (Beverly, Mass.). Vermont's top individuals will also make the trip, including pole vaulter Bruce Lawrence (Burlington), who won the Springfield dual meet last weekend, and hammer competitors Joe Juscen (Brattleboro), Lloyd Davis (Bellows Falls) and Ted White (Windsor), high jumper Nate Reeves (New Haven, Conn.), winner at Springfield, Steve Lynch (Burlington) and Chris Hamilton (Middlebury); long jumpers Looker, Lynch and Bucknam; discus thrower, Devon Craig (Barnet) and discus competitors, Joe Greco (Whitehall, N.Y.), White and Juscen.

Following the B.C. Relays, the Catamount tracksters return to action against Norwich in a dual meet April 17 at the A.T. Post Field, the first home meet this spring. The meet begins at 3 p.m. Following Norwich, the Catamounts host the Vermont Invitational, April 21, and the State Meet, April 25.

Basketball Commentary

by Mike Schwartz

The college basketball season ended two weeks ago but nevertheless the developments from the two post-season playoffs are worthy of comment.

In the National Invitation Tournament (N.I.T.) at New York City a few surprises were seen. Notre Dame and Virginia Tech were not supposed to be in the finals. Notre Dame was in the tournament because they could draw fans. Overlooked was the fact that they play one of the hardest schedules in the country. But everyone overlooked Virginia Tech. They were a team of nobodies who happened to have an excellent record. Their tallest player was a 6'7" man and the guy who won the final game in overtime was but 5'11". Virginia Tech won 4 games by a total of 5 points. They overcame their extreme height disadvantages with scrappy play and determination. When I glance at UVM's situation this example of Virginia Tech is illuminating. It proves a small hustling team can take advantage of the breaks and stay together to win ballgames against some of the top teams in the nation. The commentators had even gone as far as saying that Tech was "too white" to win because only one starter was black.

In the N.C.A.A. championship, the East made it to the semi-finals for the first time since Holy Cross in the 1940's. Providence College, led by Ernie DiGregorio provided dazzling basketball in winning the regionals and making the finals. If their big center, Marvin Barnes, did not injure himself they could possibly have given UCLA a battle in the finals. In this team, we see a star who, provided determination yet he is but 6'0" and had to practice long hours by himself just to perfect basic moves. His long practice finally got him satisfaction and recognition for his team and Eastern basketball. Referring back to the N.I.T., UMass defeated Missouri in the opening round before losing to North Carolina. The Yankee Conference can be proud of this fact.

More recently a few other developments have taken place. Bill Walton, the great UCLA center has decided to stay in college despite $2. million offers to turn professional. He feels he would like to remain a part of his team and his coach, Lou Carnasecca a coach in the A.B.A. has decided to return to his old college coaching job at St. Johns in New York City. He too declined the extra money to stay with the professionals. And finally a "cease-fire" of sorts between the N.C.A.A. and A.A.U. will allow many great collegians to

by Rick Steinberg

Two weeks ago UVM All-American goalie Steve Eckerson was made an offer he couldn't refuse. After leading the Cats to the Division II crown—and completing a brilliant career, Eckerson was contacted by the Richmond Robins of the American Hockey League. The Robins, a farm club of the Philadelphia Flyers of the National Hockey League, invited Eckerson to join the club for several contests during the university's spring recess.

After joining the club and participating in several practice sessions Eckerson was given an opportunity to compete against the Springfield Kings. The Robins went on to win the contest 6-4 and Eckerson seemed quite encouraged with his first game. He was playing under severe handicaps in that this was his first pro game and he had only joined the club a few days earlier. Adjusting to these circumstances Eckerson's pro debut should be considered a success.

In looking back on the game

Eckerson felt that there were two basic differences between collegiate and professional hockey. He mentioned the quicker pace and tempo of the game in the pros. "Everything is a lot faster," stated Eckerson. "They skate faster, have harder and more accurate shots and seem to get their shots off quicker." He also noted that they passed quite well.

A second difference in pro play stems from the use of the center red line which is not used in collegiate hockey. Eckerson saw this as "cutting down on long range passes thus having to contend with fewer break aways. Eckerson also felt that in the pro ranks the play seemed a bit more conservative. But this was in comparison to the aggressive offensive of the Catamounts which many times was caught in its offensive zone leaving the acrobatics of Eckerson to save them.

As far as his future in professional hockey is concerned, Eckerson will have to wait until next September.

UVM goalie Steve Eckerson who has been playing and working out with the Richmond Robins of the AHL.

He was invited to attend the Flyers' training camp and possibly gain a spot on the squad. But Eckerson seemed to look at things realistically and, he hopes to play for the Robins next year and possibly work himself into contention for a realistic shot at the NHL in future years.

Golf Team To Open Season Against UMass

Two former Vermont State Amateur champions, Scott Griffin (Bennington, Vt.) and Todd Plimpton (Springfield, Vt.), will lead the strong Vermont golf team this spring. Ed Donnelly's linksters will have its first severe test of the season, April 18, at Massachusetts. Leading the Catamounts this spring will be Griffin, the team's captain; Plimpton, Bill Johnstone (Stowe, Vt.), Titus Pionantis (Pelham, N.H.), John Dymitriw (Montclair, N.J.) and Tim Ryan (Vergennes, Vt.). Vermont recently competed in the Miami Invitational Golf Tournament (March 21-24) and finished 22nd as a team, five places better than last year. "Johnstone was my best golfer on the trip, consistently firing in the '70's," said Donnelly. "We have some fine golfers on this year's squad, but as usual, the weather is a factor now. I hope to have the team out—with any luck—prior to our trip to Massachusetts in a couple of weeks, but everything depends on the condition of our golf courses."

Following Massachusetts (April 18), the Catamount linksters will host the state schools, April 24, two days before the actual State Meet (stroke play). St. Michael's Middlebury and Norwich will join Vermont at the Burlington Country Club on the 24th.

Golf Schedule

April 18 — at Massachusetts at 1 p.m.
24 — St. Michael's-NORWICH-MIDDLEBURY, Burlington Country Club at 1 p.m.
26 — STATE MEET (Stroke Play), Burlington Country Club at 1 p.m.
27 — at Yankee Conference Championships, Pleasant Valley Country Club, Sutton, Mass.
May 3-4 — at New England, Kirkbrae Country Club, Lincoln, R.I.

Plans For Alumni Game Underway

With spring football opening up April 16, former UVM All-American halfback, Bob Mitchell, chairman of this year's alumni-variety game, is busy preparing all the details for the third annual alumni game at Centennial Field, May 3. To date, nine alumni (or current seniors) have expressed an interest in playing against the variety on May 3, the final day of spring practice. Names submitted to Mitchell thus far include: "Rusty" Brink ('66), former All-New England center and linebacker; Dick Hebert ('67); one of the top receivers in Catamount history; Dan Martin ('68), an All-Yankee Conference offensive lineman; Jeff Kuhman ('68), a tight end who played briefly with the Denver Broncos; Denis Black ('65), a 6-6, 225 lineman, who also is dinner chairman for the Senior Lettermen's Dinner the night of the game; Dean Kent ('65), a quick stepping halfback who is a teacher at Burlington High School and the receiver coach for the varsity Catamounts; Ron Hertel ('65) and George Oatis ('65), both former linemen and captains of the football team. Mitchell also will don his No. 31 for the third annual game. "Although I haven't heard from many alumni players yet (letter of invitation to play went out 10 days ago), it is still early," said Mitchell. "With the 17 seniors gone from last fall's club — and eligible to play for us this year — we should have over 65 players suited up for the game," added the chairman.

Tickets for the game are still on sale at the Patrick Gym, the University Book Store and from any Centennial Club member. Costs are $1 for all students and $2 for adults. Organizations will have an opportunity to purchase a package of 100 tickets for a savings of 20%. For further information, service organizations should contact Mitchell (878-2252) or Ed Bartlett (656-3074) at the Patrick Gym.

Netmen Place Second

Following last weekend's second annual Vermont Invitational, Hal Greig's netmen begin a state of six consecutive dual matches in preparation for the Yankee Conference Championships at Storrs, Conn., April 27-28. "We were generally pleased with our efforts last weekend, but obviously, we have plenty of room for improvement," said Greig. St. Lawrence won the team title on the strength of a sweep in the doubles competition (three flights). The Larries accumulated 29 points to 19 for host Vermont. RPI finished third with eight points, followed by Albany St. with four. Vermont opens its string of six straight dual matches with a perennially strong Middlebury squad, Wednesday (April 11). The match begins at 2 p.m. and is open to the public, free of charge. Following Middlebury is St. Lawrence (April 14, away), Massachusetts (April 16, home), New Hampshire (April 20, home), Middlebury (April 23, away) and Plattsburgh St. (April 25, home).

New York Defends

by Deborah Caldwell

"Freedom of the Press" was the subject of a talk given by Earl Caldwell of The New York Times at the Davis Dean Fund Lecture April 11 in Johnson Auditorium.

Mr. Caldwell was one of the principle litigants in a package of cases decided by the Supreme Court last June on the subject of a newspaper's privilege to hold certain information confidential. He has covered the Angela Davis trial for the Times, was present at the assassination of Martin Luther King, and has done extensive reporting on the Black Panther Movement.

Speaking at several colleges in addition to the University of Vermont, Mr. Caldwell is attempting to "reassert the constitutional guarantee of a free press as damaged by the decision of the Supreme Court" last June and at other times in other cases.

Mr. Caldwell is primarily concerned, not with being able to write what he sees, but with being used as an "investigative arm of the law enforcement process."

"When sources have to consider such questions as how well a reporter will hold up under threat of a jail sentence, they naturally become reticent. My feeling is that in such a state of reticence the very idea of democracy suffers immeasurable harm."

In 1968 Mr. Caldwell spent many hours with the Black Panther Party in San Francisco, sitting, watching and listening, "not from a distance but from inside their private offices, where weapons stood in the corners, where sandbags lined the walls, and windows were covered with metal plates."

The trust he had thus earned was threatened in December of 1969 when the FBI began to contact Mr. Caldwell daily by phone. Their incessant requests for information followed on an article appearing in The New York Times in which Caldwell quoted David Hillard, the Black Panther Party's National chief of staff at that time, as saying "that the Panthers advocated the very direct overthrow of the government."

Four New Board

Four new trustees will join the UVM Board of Trustees at their Annual Meeting on Saturday, April 21.

Three of the new trustees were elected by the joint assembly of the Vermont House and Senate on February 15 of this year. They are Timothy O'Connor of Brattleboro, Merritt Hewitt of North Bennington, and Mr. Louise Swainbank of Johnsonbury. Governor Thome Salmon recently appointed the fourth new trustee, Leonard Wilson from Waitsfield, for a six year term on the board.

Mr. O'Connor was born in Brattleboro, Vt. in 1936 and married to the former Martha Hannum. O'Connor is a graduate of Holy Cross College in Worcester, Massachusetts and received the law degree from

New York Times Reporter Defends Freedom Of The Press

"Freedom of the Press" was the subject of a talk given by Earl Caldwell of The New York Times at the Davis Dean Fund lecture April 11 in Johnson Auditorium.

Mr. Caldwell was one of the principle litigants in a package of cases decided by the Supreme Court last June on the subject of a newsmen's privilege to hold certain information confidential. He has covered the Angela Davis trial for the Times, was present at the assassination of Martin Luther King, and has done extensive reporting on the Black Panther Movement.

Mr. Caldwell is primarily concerned, not with being able to write what he sees, but with being used as an "investigative arm of the law enforcement process."

"When sources have to consider such questions as how well a reporter will hold up under threat of a jail sentence, they naturally become reticent. My feeling is that in such a state of reticence the very idea of democracy suffers immeasurable harm."

In 1968 Mr. Caldwell spent many hours with the Black Panther Party in San Francisco, sitting, watching and listening, "not from a distance but from inside their private offices, where weapons stood in the corners, where sandbags lined the walls, and windows were covered with metal plates."

The trust he had thus earned was threatened in December of 1969 when the FBI began to contact Mr. Caldwell daily by phone. Their incessant requests for information followed on an article appearing in The New York Times in which Caldwell quoted David Hilliard, the Black Panther Party's National chief of staff at that time, as saying "that the Panthers advocated the very direct overthrow of the government by way of force and violence."

In January of 1970 a subpoena was issued requesting the presence of Earl Caldwell in court, carrying with him his notes, tapes and any other documents he possessed concerning his talks with the Black Panthers.

"My reporting on the Black Panthers ended the day that subpoena was issued," Caldwell said. "It was ended by the Justice Department and solely, I believe, because I refused to meet with agents of the FBI and discuss with them important information that had come to me through my hard earned sources."

Mr. Caldwell emphasized his disappointment with journalism in America today, and noted the need for a free press today more than ever before. "If we do not have a free press, there is nothing left looking into the government, and particularly at this time when there is a massing of power in the executive branch. There is also a changing around of the court. It is now more political."

Four New Members To Join Board Of Trustees At Next Meeting

Four new trustees will join the UVM Board of Trustees at their Annual Meeting on Saturday, April 21.

Three of the new trustees were elected by the joint assembly of the Vermont House and Senate on February 15 of this year. They are Timothy O'Connor of Brattleboro, Merritt Hewitt of North Bennington, and Mrs. Louise Swainbank of St. Johnsbury. Governor Thomas Salmon recently appointed the fourth new trustee, Leonard Wilson from Waitsfield, for a six year term on the board.

Mr. O'Connor was born in Brattleboro, Vt. in 1936 and is married to the former Martha Hannum. O'Connor is a graduate of Holy Cross College in Worcester, Massachusetts and received the law degree from the Georgetown University School of Law. He is an attorney at law. In addition, he is a member of the Elks, Knights of Columbus, Jaycees, and the State Board of Mental Health. In 1965-67, Mr. O'Connor was a Brattleboro Municipal Court Judge and has been a member of the Vermont House of Representatives, District 4-3, since 1969.

Mr. Hewitt was born in Shaftsbury, Vermont in 1919. He is married to the former Shirley Smith and is a realtor and retired dairy farmer. He obtained the A.S. degree from Green Mountain College in Poulinsey. Hewitt has previously served as a UVM trustee from 1955-61 and was a member of the Vermont Senate from Bennington County in 1959-60. He was a member of the House of Representatives from 1953, 1955, and 1957, and he has served from District 42 since 1971.

Mrs. Swainbank is the third member of the Vermont Legislature who was elected to the UVM Board of Trustees this year. She was born in Waitsfield, Massachusetts in 1917 and moved to St. Johnsbury in 1945. Married to Attorney John Swainbank, she is a teacher. She was graduated from Smith College with an A.B. degree. Mrs. Swainbank has been a member of the Governor's Commission on the Status of Women and secretary of her Republican County Committee. She has served as a Vermont House representative from District 10-2 since 1971. Leonard Wilson is the 1973 executive appointee to the Board of Trustees. He is a graduate of Harvard College with a B.A. degree and earned a Certificate in Planning from The University of Manchester, England in 1971. Wilson and his wife, Priscilla, live in Waitsfield where he is the director of the Robert Burley Associates of Waitsfield, and president and director of The Redrock Corporation in Waitsfield. He was an Environmental Program Consultant and Federal Programs Coordinator with UVM in 1969-71 and director of Planning for the State of Vermont in 1967-69. He worked in the Executive Office of the President in Washington for two years and spent four years with the Department of

by Barbara Frankel

"The essence of a capitalist culture is a moral obscenity - the need for individual acquiescence. We live in a society of moreness," commented Professor Michael Parenti, guest speaker at a political science class on Thursday, April 12 in Williams Science Hall. Professor Parenti, a political science instructor at UVM until his tenure was denied last year amid great controversy, lectured at UVM for the first time since last May.

Parenti's talk, entitled "Fear of Inequality" drew a large crowd. He emphasized that all business, including universities, are controlled by corporations.

"There is no more laissez-faire, Adam Smith must be turning over in his grave. There is as much democracy as the Soviet Presidium," stated Parenti. Parenti stressed the faults of the capitalist system, which encourages one to buy and buy, regardless of how comfortable one is. "The history of America is a history of intolerance," he stated, criticizing the concept of competitiveness we are taught from early childhood. He explained that this concept enables one to look upon one's peers with fear and hostility, instead of with love, for one is always afraid that the "other guy might beat him out." This is especially true for those who are considered socially inferior. That is why intense hatred and fear of poor people exists among middle class citizens. And, stated Parenti, because of this fear, "poor people are urged to hate themselves."

After his lecture, Professor Parenti was interviewed by the Cynic. The following are excerpts from that interview: Cynic: What have you been doing since leaving UVM? Do you have any further plans to work or speak here?

Parenti: I've been doing a great deal of research at Yale University. I've also been politically active down there, working on the lettuce boycott and organizing an SDS chapter. (In relation to UVM), we have a court case. The wheels of justice turn very slowly. Justice delayed is no justice at all. It's been almost a year and a half. There hasn't been a speedy trial yet, but when there is a trial, I think we're going to win and win very well. I have some serious thoughts about coming back to UVM.

Cynic: How do you feel minority groups at UVM, and that includes those whose political opinions are different from the norm, can implement quick changes? Parenti: The myth that's being imposed on American youth today is that politics isn't where it's at and that we're back in the 1950's and do your little thing, swallow your goldfish and dances and all that. There are two points to remember. 1. Even during the height of demonstrations, there are a large number of students who are always doing that anyway. 2. We're not going back to the 1950's, even though Time and Newsweek keep telling us we are, in the hope that we'll all believe it and we'll all come to think that way. In fact, they have had an effect on some students, but I think that there's still room for change. The country is changing, not just students, but workers, housewives, with the meat boycott. In the past, no one would have thought of getting something like that all together. So I think there's a lot of opportunity for political education. But if we learn to be patient, if we learn that it's a long pull, I think minorities on this campus can make this place a different place. Today there's a real change of consciousness. Three or four years ago, not as many people realized that corporations plunder into our environment and into ourselves. Cynic: Do you think the recent opening up of general Faculty-Senate meetings is a step in the right direction? Parenti: I think that's a very tiny half-step, but it is in the right direction. One of the things it does, is it divests the

Mary Ashcroft Elected New IRAPresident

by Margo Howland

The final results of the Executive Board Elections of the Inter Residence Association were determined and approved by Dr. Keith Miner, Director of Residence Halls, Dean Gloria Thompson, and outgoing President Sig Heller, at the IRA meeting Monday, April 16.

The low student turnout and the suspension of traditional election procedures in view of the time element had caused the validity of the results to be questioned.

Voting was done in the dining halls of Harris-Millis, MAT, Simpson, Waterman, and Wright. The turnout was estimated to be less than twenty percent of the student residence hall population.

Total breakdown of the vote:

President: Mary Ashcroft (Millis) 320 votes
Stephen Guy (Hamilton) 189 votes
Vice President of Welfare: Rich Jaffe (Buckham) 459 votes (unopposed)
Vice President of Social and Cultural Affairs: Meri Goyette (Millis) 276 votes, Katie Eisenberg (Millis) 189 votes.
Vice President of Financial Affairs: Paul Vey (Buckham) 452 votes (unopposed).
Secretary: Caren Bateman (Jeanne Mance) 426 votes (unopposed).
In other business of the meeting of April 16, it was announced that the movie Play Misty For Me would be shown in WDW lounge during the week of April 22. The film shows a man being kidnapped to be shown in WDW April 17, in Burgess April 18, and in Mason April 19.

IRA also agreed to fund the landscaping cost of Robinson Hall.

Newly-elected IRA President Mary Ashcroft commented about IRA, the election, new plans and priorities for next fall and - the matter of residence-hall participation in a recent Cynic interview.

Students who declined to vote in the election most often gave one of two replies when asked why they did not participate. Those who were leaving the residence halls to live elsewhere next semester felt that they should not vote. Others flatly stated, "I don't vote for people I don't know."

In commenting upon this observation, Ashcroft said, "They also claimed that we didn't get the word out, which is pure nonsense. I think the decision to not vote because one is leaving the residence halls is a personal matter." Regarding the problem of non-recognition, she added, "Given enough time, we could have had a debate I suppose, but who would have come? The university students are too sophisticated for a meet-the-students-and-hand-shaking campaign."

Radio ads for the campaign, according to Ashcroft, were really expensive. "I called up WRUV to check" and an intensive, recognition-oriented campaign would run into a lot of money.

"Actually, I'm pleased we got as many votes as we did," Mary Ashcroft said.

In discussing IRA's plans for the rest of the semester, Ashcroft said: "I think it's important that students keep coming to the meetings for the next four weeks. We have requests before us and money available to allocate, if we should choose to allocate. We have agreed to fund Robinson Hall's landscaping project. Simpson wants a speaker system in their dining hall."

Ashcroft mentioned the second annual IRA Leadership Banquet, to be held in Harris-Millis during the last week of April. "We will plan to have the usual dignitaries, the old Executive Council, the new Executive Council, the IRA Representatives, the Resident Advisors, and a maximum of three students chosen from each residence hall on the basis of outstanding leadership. We will ask that these students be chosen either by the dorm government or by the Resident Advisor and IRA representative. Its purpose is to recognize leadership and reward those students in residence halls that have been doing something all year." Invitations to the various Resident Advisors, Deans, and other dignitaries will be going out shortly.

One of the problems encountered by IRA is that not enough students know about them. On this topic Ashcroft said, "Students are free to come to the IRA meetings. They should at least read the minutes. People figure they're not in it (the IRA) but they are. They should make a habit of talking to their IRA representatives once in a while. One of my priorities next year is to get students to know that we exist. There should be comment boards in every dorm."

In keeping with her remarks of last week that parts of the IRA constitution and by-laws should be re-evaluated and changed if necessary, Ashcroft stated that she had appointed Stephen Guy, Flip Casey and Curt Orvis to a committee to re-examine the Constitution. She also thought that each IRA member should decide next fall which of the six standing committees he or she would like to serve on, if such committees are kept.

The problem of apathy in residence hall participation is a serious one. "I have noticed that the dorms are going on separate paths. The Experimental Program dorms are set apart from the rest of the campus. Shade Hall was never represented this year because they don't consider themselves a part of us."

The IRA meeting room has been the scene of more than one lengthy, lively and heated discussion when matters concerning the Experimental Program dorms were brought up. The antagonism has been on both sides and in two cases this year, it resulted in requests being shouted down by the Council, many of whose members hold the notion that the Experimental Program's interest in IRA is limited to its ability to allocate funds. The Experimental Program representatives, on the other hand, do not, like to have new students and new representatives penalized for something that happened a year ago over which these students had no control. Ashcroft explains: "At the last meeting last year, the EP showed and requested close to $2000 for various projects. IRA suspended the rules and allocated a majority of the requests."

"They hadn't sent fit to come to the meetings all year and here they come asking for money. You can understand our position!" Ashcroft concluded, "We have to have representation from all types of dorms on the Executive Board. Before the election of IRA representatives in the fall we must have a member of the Executive Board attend the first dorm meetings. But the Executive Board can only do so much. The rest is up to the dorms."

Student Association's Annual Budget Report Presented At Senate Meeting

by Bruce Madden

Tuesday night's meeting saw the introduction of the Student Association Annual Report for FY 72/73 as well as the proposed one for 73/74. Discussion also ranged during the meeting from the expansion of the health facility to financial policy statements.

After attendance, Tom Grant, S.A. Treasurer gave the Financial Committee report. He stated that he received three bills for maintenance costs from three student groups last month. The bills were issued in 1970 and 71. He asked whether or not the S.A. should incur the $200 worth of bills. Discussion varied on the legitimacy of the bills and also on the time element (2 years) involved. Later in the evening

Dick Cassidy entered a motion that the S.A. pay for the outstanding bills.

Also noted during the meeting was the absence of Sig Heller, new S.A. president. It was especially noted when it was reminded that a motion was passed earlier this year that the president was to report on his work during the week at each meeting.

Before the introduction of Old Business, Dean Powers brought the Senate up to date on University health center options. There are three options open to the University, expansion of Wasson (addition), rental of the 5th floor of the Degesbriand Unit, or purchase of the nursing home on East Avenue.

Dean Powers explained some of the advantages, disadvantages and costs of each proposal. It was stated that in the opinion poll conducted at Wasson, students strongly voted in favor of the Wasson Expansion project. Probable increase in health service fees will be about ten dollars for this project. Emergency room facilities will also be added to the new addition.

Under Old Business, S.88, the proposed constitution, was reconsidered. One of the old adversaries of the document said that they had "made a big mistake" in writing a new constitution. Many loopholes and illegalities were discovered since original consideration. S.88 finally died in a revolt.

S.166, Policy Statement on the Financial Responsibility of the S.A. was brought up. After presentation immediate questions were raised about extension of the treasurer's power, existence of consolidated accounts, and a financial monitoring system. Nothing being resolved the motion was tabled and a new proposal will be drawn up.

S.121, motion to purchase copies of Student As Nigger by Farber for distribution to freshmen at orientation was defeated. Between Old and New Business, Tom Grant handed out the minutes of the final (continued on page five)

CALENDAR/ANNOUNCEMENTS

Lane Committee Elects Offices

Next year's Lane Series Committee, made up of six students and five faculty members, will be chaired by student Philip Holloway. He replaces graduating Kevin Berry.

Other new student officers include Leslie Morrison, House Manager; Tom McCormick, Treasurer; Susan May, Secretary; Rachel Yellin, Production Manager; and Bekki Davis, Publicity Director.

Student assistants are Judy Goldenberg and Linda Goodspeed, Assistant House Managers; Lloyd Goodrow and Antoinette Soto, Assistant Treasurers; Kathy Mullen and Lea Ann Harris, Assistant Secretaries; Gloria Mosley and Tom Long, Assistant Production Managers; and Claudia Simpson and Deborah Mallette, Assistant Publicity Directors.

Dr. Herbert L. Schultz of the Music Department will substitute for Dr. Ladd during the first semester while Dr. Ladd is on sabbatical.

Other staff members on the Lane Committee are Prof. Edward J. Feidauer, Department of Communications and Theatre; Mr. Lawrence E. Van Benthuyzen, Director of Public Relations; Mr. Charles L. Wolf, Comptroller; and Dr. Jack Trevithick, Director of the Lane Series.

The Lane Committee was the first committee at UVM to have student members on a par with faculty and staff members, and it is believed to be the only committee on which students outnumbered, six to five, faculty and staff members.

Choral Union To Perform Messiah

The University of Vermont Choral Union under the direction of Prof. James G. Chapman, will be performing the Easter Section of Handel's "Messiah" on Easter Sunday afternoon, April 22, at 4 PM in the Ira Allen Chapel. Members of the University of Vermont Orchestra will be accompanying the group. Soloists will be sopranos Jill Lewis, and Joanne Raymond, contralto; Rethel Dorain, Tenor; William Bosworth, and bass, Gary Moreau. The Easter section of "Messiah" includes such famous works as "Lift Up Ye Heads, O Ye Gates" and "Hallelujah Chorus." The concert is free of charge, and the public is cordially invited to attend.

German House Presents Program

Looking for an academic change of pace? Why not "live and learn" German in the German House? The German House, one of the programs being planned for the new Living-Learning Center, will provide more than living quarters with ethnic atmosphere. It will include an experimental intensive language course which will cover in one semester the work normally done in four regular semesters. Students participating in the program will have twenty hours of instruction per week in the classroom and language laboratory. By living together in several units of the Center with German-speaking advisers, they will be able to practice what they have learned in the classroom. The advisers will also coordinate a variety of activities aimed at offering supplementary information about Germany, her people and their way of life.

The one-semester course will carry 14 credits; students enrolled in the program may take only physical education as an "outside" course. The program is open to 12 men and women who have had no previous college-level German. The course should be particularly useful for students wishing to major in German, as well as for those who would like to spend their Junior year in Salzburg, Austria. (The Junior-Year in Salzburg program is open to students in all disciplines, incidentally, not just to German majors.) Students interested in the German House should contact Prof. Veronica Richel, Dept. of German and Russian, Waterman 416.

Lecture Concerning Zarate

In conjunction with their current exhibit of engravings by one of Mexico's greatest graphic artists, Jose Guadalupe Posada, the Robert Hull Fleming Museum is sponsoring a lecture on Thursday April 19th. Armando Zarate, of the Spanish section of UVM's Department of Romance Languages, will speak on "Jose Guadalupe Posada and the Sculls of Society" at 8 pm in the Museum Gallery.

Armando Zarate was born in Argentina where he earned an M.A. at the University of Cordoba. A awarded a post-graduate fellowship, he went to Mexico to study art and literature. Years later he was awarded the Ph.D. degree in Spanish literature at the University of California.

Professor Zarate is the author of an extensive article on Posada, published by the University of Cordoba in 1962, the fruits of his Mexican studies.

Its Just The Beginning

"It's Just The Beginning" is the title of a film to be shown next Wednesday. The film concerns the Ba' Hai faith. It will be shown April 25th, at 7:30 p.m., at room 413, Waterman.

Parking Back To Normal

NOTICE: All parking on University Place is immediately reverted back to the original policy of parking on the west side only. No alternate side parking on this street. All streets which have "no parking on this side of the street" signs are not affected by the alternate-side plan.

Sailing Slide Show

Friday evening, April 20 at 8:00 p.m. in Votey 101, the UVM Sailing Club, in conjunction with the SA Speakers Bureau, is sponsoring a narrated slide show by Dr. Norris Hoyt, entitled "Racing South, Racing North, and Cruising in the Middle."

Dr. Hoyt, who will be presenting his 1970-71 racing adventures in the North and South Atlantic and in the Mediterranean, has been sailing the Atlantic and taking photographs of ships and the sea for over 25 years. His pictures and writings have appeared, among others, in the National Geographic, Sports Illustrated, Yachting, and Sail.

A fee of $5.00 will be charged for those over eighteen years (excepting UVM students) to help defray costs.

Exhibitions at Fleming Museum are: works of Timothy Crowley, honors in studio art, and works of Susan Blair, honors in art history, in the Lounge Gallery; and in the Main Gallery, "Herman Hesse," an exhibit of photographs and reproductions of manuscript pages and drawings, put together by the Goethe Institute of Munich. Also in the Main Gallery, "Posada: Prints," caricatures by the famed Mexican printmaker, on loan from the Instituto Nacional de Bellas Artes, Mexico City. Non-Academic

by Dan Haslam

At their April 11 meeting several members of the Non-Academic Employees' Council issued a verbal attack on the Faculty Senate for lack of consultation with the council in preparing University calendar.

Chairman of the NAEC, M. Huldine Flynn, expressed concern over the lack of input by the non-academic employees into the "73" calendar approved by the Faculty Senate on April 9. Ms. Flynn traced the history of preparing what she termed "unified University calendar" encompassing faculty, non-academic employees, and student events for the coming year. She stated that Larry Snyder, Director of Administrative Resources, suggested the unified calendar concept in December, and the idea of non-academic employee and student input had been acceptable to both factions. However, Ms. Flynn explained, she had recently called Dr. Jones, chairman of the Faculty Senate, and related that no such committee to institute a unified calendar had been approved by the

AFROTC

At the present time the AFROTC two-year program at St. Michael's College is available to UVM sophomores and women, as well as juniors and seniors who have two academic years of undergraduate or graduate school remaining as of September 1973. This program is offered to those students who are interested in flying non-flying duties. In addition, students accepted into the two-year program receive a monthly tax-free check of $100.00 during these two years of AFROTC training.

Furthermore, scholarships are available to those students who are qualified for flying as either a pilot or navigator. Scholarships cover full tuition, books, lab fees, and a $100.00 per month check. This means that a junior can finish his senior year and earn his Master's Degree at UVM of Saint Michael's College, all of an AFROTC scholarship, in addition to the flying and non-flying career field. AFROTC has several medical programs available which will completely pay for your medical training.

Non-Academic Employees Council Holds Meeting

by Dan Haslam

At their April 11 meeting, several members of the Non-Academic Employees Council issued a verbal attack on the Faculty Senate for its lack of consultation with the council in preparing a University calendar.

Chairman of the NAEC, Mrs. Huldine Flynn, expressed her concern over the lack of input by the non-academic employees into the '73-'74 calendar approved by the Faculty Senate on April 9. Mrs. Flynn traced the history of preparing what she termed a "unified University calendar" encompassing faculty, non-academic employees, and student needs for the coming year. She stated that Larry Snyder, Director of Administrative Resources, had suggested the unified calendar concept in December, and the idea of non-academic employee and student input had been acceptable to both factions. However, Mrs. Flynn explained, she had recently called Dr. Jones, chairman of the Faculty Senate, and he related that no such committee to institute a unified calendar had been approved by the Faculty Senate. Negotiations are still underway. Mrs. Flynn declared, to patch the communication gap, she concluded that "There is an academic calendar, but there is no University calendar."

Several representatives on the NAEC continued to criticize the Faculty Senate's actions, and the matter was not dropped. George Trono, class "L" representative, argues, "It's about time to let them realize that they are not the only constituency on this campus." Mrs. Selma Bloomberg, an administrative representative, added that the faculty, in announcing the University calendar, must feel that they will have academic support "whenever they are here." Director of Personnel Henry Tymecki ended discussion of the issue, suggesting it be sent to committee until further information is available.

The Parking Committee indicated that they had held no meetings but that parking studies were being done, and several consultants have visited the University to determine additional parking solutions.

One parking study, prepared by Mrs. Joy Haslam, examined the rezoning of cluster parking units. Mrs. Haslam also suggested that parking stickers, similar to those of the students, be issued to faculty and staff members, limiting them to specific parking lots.

Mr. George Trono, chairman of the NAEC Parking Committee, indicated that the Parking Board of Appeals has received several complaints over inadequate parking lines. He stated that "no parking" zones are being interpreted differently by each driver, causing many tickets to be issued.

The Election Committee announced that ballots for the NAEC elections should be ready by the next meeting, and the Rules Committee recommended a constitutional change which would provide for an annual meeting in July to elect a new chairman and officers at that time. Dr. Wayne Patterson, Executive Vice-President, will speak at the NAEC's April 25 meeting.

Student Association Finance Committee Culminates Budget Hearings

by Bruce Madden

The Finance Committee brought to a close the budget hearings at the Friday meeting. The final hearings included many important appropriations such as OVP, UVM Rescue, and the Cynic.

The first hearing was held for the Concert Bureau. The Finance Committee voted to recommend $35,000 as their appropriation. This is down from the $7,500 originally requested. The reason for the cut was due to rollback from this fiscal year and subtraction of a free concert included in their budget. Total expenditures of the Concert Bureau are $66,150 which are all paid for by the concerts themselves. The UVM Home Club asked for $100. Estimated income was $920. Counting rollback of $200 from the present fiscal year. Expenditures were listed at $1020. The S.A. appropriation filled in the remaining balance. The purpose of the organization is to promote interest in and knowledge of horse care, management, and horsemanship.

The Finance Committee then heard the UVM Band Report. Expenditures were planned for $1880 with estimated income of $100. The Committee voted to recommend $1,135, a cut of $600 in their request. A senator asked that the following stipulations be put in the recommendation: that the band continue to improve, especially at hockey games and that the band leader meet with coaches to discuss the band's role at athletic events. They were also asked to resign their program to include more events on campus. $565 of the recommendation was put into a sinking fund for uniforms.

The Art Club request of $3200 was cut to $2000. Costs for informal speakers and workshop were cut in half for $100 a semester to $500 and there is an estimated balance of $200 at the end of this year to be used for next year.

The Mortar Board asked for no appropriation.

The Ariel, one of the more important hearings, received a recommendation of $5500. Total expenditures were reported at $16,000 for $4,000 copies of the Ariel. Due to the lack of interest in the past Ariels, but hopefully renewed interest because of increased interest this year, an opinion poll will be held next semester to determine if students still want the Ariel. This will then provide information as to continue or cut the Ariel.

The Finance Committee voted to recommend $4070 to UVM Rescue. Some of this will be put into a pending fund to cover increased gas, oil or insurance rates should they continue to climb. Next year's appropriation will have to be increased due to the loss of the dollar surcharge which ends this semester.

The UVM Committee for UNICEF asked for a loan of $1000 due June 30, 1974. This will be for working collateral in order to start their program of speakers and drives on campus.

The Finance Committee then heard requests from the Vermont Cynic. Original request of $12,500 was cut to $10,780. The total income is $21,000, total expenditures are $32,000. The S.A. appropriation will make up total yearly losses. Another reason for the cut will be that the S.A. is going to purchase the typesetter at a considerable savings.

The Albatross received an appropriation of $2200 for an annual publication. This year's issue should be available in June. The Finance Committee voted to recommend $294 to the Friends of Red Rock Park. This is for publication of a map for recreational facilities in the Burlington area and a trail map of Red Rock Park. The German Club received a recommendation of $755 for a concert with an opera tenor.

The Senate Contingency received $490. This is for supplies and Senator's expenses for polls, newsletter and surveys. The Home Economics Club received $215 for a film rental and supplies. The Senior Class Council asked for no appropriation. The Finance Committee voted $550 for the Catalina Club. This is to cover cost of bathing suits and supplies. The Senate Lawyer Fund was voted down. It cannot be afforded in this budget year.

The Office of Volunteer Program's request for $12,214 was cut to $5390. Cuts were made in office expenses, on going projects, new projects, and the purchase of a van. The committee also recommended that a stipulation be added that no more requests will be allowed for next year.

Tom Grant, S.A. Treasurer, will present the annual report later this week. Such figures as total income, expenditures, appropriations will be included.

In closing, he reflected on the reason for many organizational cuts. He said that the S.A. income had been increasing at 10-15% but is now leveling off. With the increased number of organizations and expansion of existing organizations, cuts had to be made every where.

AFROTC Available

At St. Michael's

At the present time the Air Force ROTC two-year program at St. Michael's College is available to UVM sophomores and juniors, as well as seniors and juniors who have two academic years of undergraduate or graduate school remaining as of September 1973. This program is offered to those students who are interested in flying or non-flying duties. In addition, students accepted into the two-year program receive a monthly tax-free check for $100.00 during these two years of AFROTC training.

Furthermore, scholarships are available to those students who are qualified for flying as either a pilot or navigator. Scholarships cover full tuition, books, lab fees, and a $100.00 per month check. This means that a junior can finish his senior year and earn his Master's Degree at UVM or Saint Michael's College, all on an AFROTC scholarship. In addition to the flying and non-flying career fields, AFROTC has several medical programs available which will completely pay for your medical training.

Once assigned to active duty, a single, newly commissioned second lieutenant on flying status received a yearly salary of $9,874.56. At the two-year level a fully qualified second lieutenant is promoted to first lieutenant and he would then receive $12,287.76 per year. Then a Captain with four years service receives a yearly salary of $16,328.16. The above figures are the rates for a single officer on flying status. If the officer is married, the above figures would increase approximately $450.00. Furthermore, once commissioned in the United States Air Force you will have free medical care for you and your dependents. There are just a few of the benefits of becoming an Air Force Officer; there are many more.

The time to apply is NOW. Therefore, interested students should visit the Department of Aerospace Studies located in the Sloan Art Center on the North Campus of Saint Michael's College or call 655-2000, extension 281 and ask for Captain Shane for further information. Also, look for notices on dormitory bulletin boards announcing when representatives from Saint Michael's Department of Aerospace Studies will be on the UVM campus to answer questions.

According To Presidential Advisor, Dr. I.M. Bunk, Nixon Says Stop Inflation-Don't Eat!

by Peter Hicks

Inflation is an evil which has afflicted our nation for years. Since it is a chronic problem which no one in the White House has ever been able to solve, inflation has been constantly kicked around as a political football with each party attempting to get the better of the other. It is obvious that the first part of the Nixon Administration was no different from any other on this count. The Democrats consistently accused Nixon of belated broken field running and the Republicans retaliated by accusing the Democrats of inflating the football and FDR of getting the ball rolling by attempting to purchase the economy. Recently, however, President Nixon has taken a radical departure from the two parties' age-old tradition of producing no solution and blaming the opposition for not doing likewise. With food prices skyrocketing and no end in sight, Nixon, in a dramatic move through his Secretary of Agriculture, Buttz, suggested a few weeks ago to U.S. citizens a seemingly ingenious solution for stopping the food price problem — don't EAT! Although momentarily stunned when I heard the solution, I soon realized that the brilliance behind it must have been greater than my ability for comprehension, so I immediately sought out Dr. I.M. Bunk, Presidential spokesman and confidant, for further elaboration on the specifics of the plan.

"It is all very simple," said Bunk. "The President is merely drawing upon the age old American concepts of supply and demand to solve the problem. Everybody knows that when there is too little of the former and too much of the latter, as is the case today, prices go up. Our goal, being lowering the prices, we must reverse that trend and bring the two variables back in line with each other."

"But," I interjected, "won't the American people, by temporarily abstaining from sustenance, only create a temporary abundance of supply which would dissipate as soon as Americans began eating again? Won't prices, then, be as high as before?"

"That's the Democratic way of looking at things," he replied indignantly. "This is a Republican administration here. We want the consumer to experience a permanent and lasting peace of mind when he contemplates visiting the supermarket. We want the American people to buy food with the assured knowledge that honor of their stomachs have not been compromised."

"We are not at all concerned with increasing the supply of food available to the American public," he continued. "We feel that the supply is entirely adequate. We are after a more final solution."

"The problem is our population. We have too many people. With more babies being produced every day, it is no wonder that the supply has not kept up with the demand. Prices are rising because food production has not increased at the rate of people production. The main problem lies with demand, not supply."

"You mean to say that the purpose of the administration's dictate to not eat is not to indirectly increase supply but rather to permanently decrease the demand by starving people to death?" I asked astounded.

"Certainly," replied Bunk. "Don't look so surprised. Our problem here is overdemand not undersupply. We've got to have less people around draining our food resources. Despite temporarily alleviating our food shortage problem, the abundance of the American public, would in the long run, have the additional permanently favorable effect of eliminating people. Less people, more food, what could be easier?"

"So that is the ingenious manner in which the plan works?" I mused. "Yet," I asked, suffering a temporary pain on consciousness, "is there no other way?"

"Well," answered Bunk, reluctantly, "there is one other alternative plan we can use if the American Public is unreasonable about the first one. In the other scheme, we would separate the country into four different districts: East, Midwest, West and South. Each section would take turns starving for a period of three months. As a result, the demand for food would be cut by one fourth and the prices would come back into line. However, we, at the White House, emphasize that the second plan is not as effective and as far reaching as the first. We expect Americans to support the President's first solution."

"I think your first plan is terrific," I said, noting that he was becoming a little exercised, "but is there nothing we can do at the supply end?"

"Certainly not," he answered heatedly. "Don't you understand? Everybody blames us for making that wheat deal with Russia. They say that the wheat should have been kept at home. Yet they did not say that when JFK tried to make that pig transaction in Cuba. People must realize that priorities enter in here. The Russian wheat deal brought money into the nation. Don't people want a healthy economy? Shipping all our food overseas creates friendly relations. Isn't that what people want?"

"Well then, couldn't the U.S. dedicate more of its resources to producing more food?" I asked.

"Sir," he replied, "have you no pride in your nation? The U.S. has, for years, had the best farmer-to-consumer ration in the world. Would you want your country to lose face by falling into second place in that category?"

"I guess you are right," I conceded sympathetically. "Your plan appears to be the only proper solution to the problem. I guess the American public should never question that the hearts of our Republican leaders are in the right place."

"I'm glad you realize that," he said, more cheerily. "Is there anything else I can do for you?"

"No," I replied, "everything seems to be perfectly clear. Thank you for giving me this time."

"Anytime you wish greater clarification, please let me know," he replied. "It is all very simple."
